IS NOT SINKING BUT SHRINKING

Sir Robert Hall in an address in the Caxton Hall, Westminster, England, recently explained that the sun was getting smaller. Every ten years, he said, the sun shrunk a mile and the process was continually going on. Possibly some might feel a little anxious as to whether the sun would hold out for their time.

There was no need for anxiety, however. The sun was 863,000 miles across and even with the shrinking for 4,000 years it would still be 859,000 miles across, and that would not be a bad sun.

INTERESTING MEETINGS FOR NEWSBOYS AT GOSPEL HALL

Last evening quite a number of boys and girls of tender years gathered in the Gospel Hall. What were they there for? Had a passerby happened in for a moment and witnessed those children engaged in singing simple gospel hymns and listening intently to the story of Jesus Christ as told by Mr. Adam McMurdo the wonderful boy evangelist then indeed he would have seen the reason.

The children were mostly newsboys and their sisters but all seemed interested in the meeting. Each child is induced to bring as many other children with him as possible and as an inducement special prizes are offered. Last evening Mr. McMurdo had the children all interested in the story of Pilgrim in Pilgrim's Progress as he told it in a simple way.

Two little girls named Emily and Agnes Walker sang a solo in a sweet childish treble. The little tots came nearly all unattended and displayed such interest in the service that Mr. McMurdo the active young evangelist must have felt encouraged.

During the week he will give chalk talks to the little ones which should prove very interesting.

WARD SYSTEM NEXT TIME

The Committee of the whole Council went into the matter of polling subdivisions at its meeting last night. The list which is practically complete, was read over by City Clerk Armstrong, with the names of the deputy returning officer and pole clerk, for each polling place.

On the next municipal elections the ward system will be in vogue and aldermen must be nominated from the wards in which they live.

Ald. Gillespie asked that the building by-law be amended to permit of his erecting a twenty-foot addition to his creamery, the first story to be 14 inch brick walls, and the second 9 inch, also an ice storage frame building with metal sheeting. He explained there would be no danger from fire in the ice house as no sawdust would be used.

On motion of Ald. Graham and Battin the by-law was amended to allow the work to be performed.

On motion of Ald. Bradburn and Graham, the Council approved of the construction of a public lavatory under the market building, the work to be carried on under the supervision of Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Property Committee.

MEMBERS OF NO. 6 COMPANY BANQUETED LAST NIGHT

A Royal Time Spent at Hooper's Grill Room—Toasts Were Popular and Well Responded to—Company is a Credit to the Regiment

"For it's always fair weather,
When good fellows get together."

No more applicable saying could accurately describe the degree of merriment and good-fellowship which reigned in Hooper's grill room at the annual banquet of No. 6 Company of the 57th Regiment held last evening. The scarlet of the uniforms, the attractive glow of the lights and the merry clatter of dishes always prominent on occasions of this nature combined to present an alluring and pleasing scene. The evening will be one that will linger pleasantly in the minds of those fortunate enough to be members of the premier company of the 57th regiment of the Peterborough rangers.

Shortly after eight o'clock, the company, about forty-five strong, repaired to the room of the banquet. The tables were arranged with extreme taste and the scene when illuminated by the colored candle-lights, was indeed attractive. No time was involved in getting under way. At one end of the room were seated several of the officers including Colonel Miller, Col. Stevenson, Major Clegg, Captain McLean, Major Bennett, Captain Walker and Captain Eastwood, Lieut. Merritt and Lieut. K. G. Leech also had places of honor at the head of each table.

The affair opened with a piano solo by Pte. A. J. Fourque, splendidly played and an insistent encore was demanded.

TOAST TO PETERBORO' RANGERS.

The toasts were next proceeded with. Lieut. R. N. Merritt proposed the one to the Peterborough Rangers. He felt particularly honored to be an officer in a company composed of men of such quality and quantity. The men had been as loyal and true as any that could be found in the regiment and it was indeed an honor to have a rank among them. Lieut.-Col. Stevenson responded congratulating the men of No. 6 company on their fine showing and smart soldierly appearance. He was indeed honored to command them as commanding officer of the regiment. No. 6 company was one to set an example to all and if all the regiments were so loyal, then indeed there's would be a regiment that any officer would be proud to command.

Col. Miller followed with a short patriotic address and was accorded the usual acclamation always received by him. He added a few more words in commendation of the company and assured them that he always felt proud to be an ex-commanding officer of such a creditable body of men. His recitation "The Volley" was given spontaneous applause.

Major Clegg also made a short speech of a similar nature in praise of the company.

Mr. Hague Sawyers then favored the gathering with a well given vocal selection and was compelled to give an encore in response to appreciative applause.

Major Bennett in a few words voiced his sentiments in regard to the company and its splendid showing and considered it was the best on parade last summer. Captain Walker also was gratified to see such a splendid turnout of the company and with the splendid example set by the members. It had indeed faithfully carried out its obligations. He added his congratulations with the other officers to Captain McLean on the showing of the company.

Dr. Eastwood, Captain, also expressed himself similarly.

TOAST TO SISTER CORPS.

The toast to the Sister Corps proposed by Lieut. K. G. Leech was greeted with tumultuous applause. In a neat, masterly speech he expressed himself as being highly-pleased with the feeling of good-fellowship existing in the company and he felt it a signal honor to hold rank among them. Hearty applause followed his concluding words. The toast was very acceptably responded to by Captain W. C. Ackerman and Sergeant Major Fee.

Mr. W. McIlroy again favored the gathering with a song and received a unanimous encore.

TOAST TO COMPANY OFFICERS.

The toast to the company officers was proposed by Sergeant M. Rosenburg. His speech was extremely suitable and ready and in a few words he stated his views regarding the efficiency of the commanding officer, Captain McLean and paid high tribute to his popularity in the company. His words were greatly applauded. This toast was responded to by Capt. McLean, Lieut. R. N. Merritt and Lieut. K. G. Leech.

An instrumental selection by Private J. Harstone proved a pleasing variation at this juncture.

TOAST TO NON-COM. OFFICERS.

The last toast of the evening was that to the Non-Commissioned officers proposed by Pte. A. J. Perks. Mr. Perks stated that he was no speechmaker, but would ask them all to join heartily in this toast. It was enthusiastically drunk. The respondents were Pte. C. K. Leech, Sergeant A. R. Ackerman, Corporal H. Matthews and Sergeant Ecobichon.

THE PRESS.

The toast to the Press was proposed by Sergeant Perrin and responded to by representatives of the Evening Examiner and the Daily Review.

After the singing of several familiar songs including Auld Lang Syne, the enjoyable function was ended by the hearty singing of the National Anthem.

Previous to the banquet a flashlight of the group was taken by Mr. F. Roy.

SITE FOR THAT SHOE FACTORY

The only thing worth mentioning that has happened in Lindsay in years was when Thomas, the shoeman, gulled the unsuspecting inhabitants of that muddy settlement.

Here is another story of a Lindsayite losing both his head and his money in the high excitement attendant in the prospect of Lindsay landing a real industry."

A good story is going the rounds about a well known citizen. It has to do with a speculative deal in connection with the "Thomas Shoe Co." of inglorious memory.

Now this citizen ever alert for a wise speculation hurried to Fenelon Falls during the "Thomas boom" and purchased two lots near the glove factory site from a resident of the Cataract Village. The poet Burns says "The best laid plans of men and mice gang aft aglee." The puncture of the bubble left two lots on the citizen's hands, which he is anxious to dispose of.—Lindsay Post.

NEW TEAMS FOR THE CITY LEAGUE

Strathconas May Drop Out And West Ends Will Have Weaker Seven—A Better Chance for Other Clubs.

The business before the annual meeting of the City Hockey League called last night was not proceeded with, the feeling of those present being that it would be advisable to adjourn and have another meeting next Monday night, the situation in the meantime to be explained to teams and clubs of other leagues for the purpose of securing new entries to the organization.

President Graham and the secretary, W. D. Craig, were on hand, as were also representatives of the West End and Strathcona clubs. The T.A.C. did not sent a representative.

—o—

Mr. Jack Oldham was ready with a team, but the Straths were not in a position to make any definite statements, although the management is, if anything, in favor of "no team" for this season. The Commissioners have been on the ice for the past five seasons with a good team, and feel that they are justified in dropping out for a winter if they feel so inclined.

—o—

But the West End manager is of the opinion that the sporting department of the city is deteriorating, and situations such as the present, if not saved, assist greatly in its downfall. The West Ends, he claims, will have a team of unknown class, but the club is going to go ahead and, as in previous years, deliver the goods as best they can.

—o—

Mention was made that the Y.M.C.A. might enter a team if they found the competition somewhat of a lower grade. This led to a suggestion that other clubs might view an entry in the same light.

—o—

Taking this as a possibility, there is no doubt but that more interest would be shown in the welfare of the league. The object of the organization, that of developing players, would certainly be attained, more so than if last season's four clubs entered again and made it a two-team fight.

—o—

Probably one or two of last season's Church or Mercantile League teams would enter. The success which would attend [illegible] move can be readily seen.

—o—

Now, it remains with these clubs to get busy, and during the week endeavor to effect organization and make known their intentions to either the secretary or president of the City League.

—o—

Keene will not have a seven as the majority of the players have left the limits.

HACKENSCHMIDT WON FROM ROLLER IN STRAIGHTS

Montreal, Nov. 28.—Hackenschmidt, the "Russian Lion," kept up his cycle of victories in his effort to draw Gotch out of retirement in another [illegible] championship bout this evening by defeating Dr. Roller in two straight falls. "Hack" was in much better form than the last time he appeared here a couple of weeks ago, when he had a hard time with Dr. Roller. He took the aggressive from the start, but Roller put up a strong [illegible], and it was not until 47 minutes that he secured a half Nelson. Even then Dr. Roller, true to his name, rolled and bridged three times before "Hack" made his weight tell, and pinned him for the first fall.

The heavy work of the first bout told on Dr. Roller more than on "Hack," and in the second bout, after nineteen minutes' of work, with the Russian on the aggressive all the time, the latter, with Roller on top, reached up and caught his left arm, and by a sudden twist, converting a defensive into an aggressive hold, swung Roller over and dropped him, forcing him to the mat by sheer weight. A very large crowd witnessed the exhibition, and the match caused great enthusiasm, although the result was expected.

WITH THE STUDENTS IN THE HOME OF THE TIGERS

A Peterborough boy attending Varsity, writing to friends in the city of the trip to and from Hamilton, has the following interesting account to give:—

Well, we had a big day yesterday. I was on the go from early in the morning till late at night. Our train left for Hamilton at 10.30 and there was a lot to get ready for before that. I helped with the rooters all week, and as a result my expenses to Hamilton were "nil." On the train there was the usual horse play, but the crowd was fairly quiet, no doubt saving itself for the afternoon. On arrival we formed up, and with the band marched up through the streets, the fellows purloining a few shoe shine signs and moving picture show bulletins. Then everybody dispersed for lunch and met again at the station for the welcome to the remainder, who came at twelve. With these to swell the procession we started for the grounds and marched up through the streets lined with Tiger supporters. The fellows behaved very well and were well handled by the marshals. These latter were mostly final young men, appointed by the Students' Parliament to take charge. Of course yours truly was in on this, accompanied by a large and heavy cane, and the vast expanse of badge that went with the position. I had the honor of taking President Falconer along the train, and showing him how well we were organized. He was very much pleased with our efforts. The marshalls' duties were to march on the flanks to the procession and restrain the impetuous and warlike. It was an easy job going up, but much harder on the return trip.

On reaching the grounds the fellows found the gate they were to use too small, but this was remied by pulling down the fence for several yards. A portion of the large stand had been reserved for us and so the fellows all got seats. As soon as they were all seated the fun and noise began and never let up till the game was over.

My job as penalty time-keeper kept me on the side lines during the game, but at intervals I went over and saw the fun. I didn't have much to do as only two men were ruled off.

The game itself was very exciting and not at all one-sided until the last quarter when the better training and condition of the students told. I was talking to Ben Simpson at half-time and he seemed to be quite tired out then. He shook his head when I asked him how things were and said; "Too much work for me to do." Ben played a grand game and with better support would have rivalled Hughey Gall.

Varsity certainly took chances with the ball, in fact part of the game looked like a basketball match. Their halfbacks never held the ball when they were tackled but immediately passed it on and got rid of it.

After the game the procession, after circling the field in triumph started off down the streets for the centre of the city. The yells and cheering was terrific and the fights would have done credit to a Donnybrook Fair. That was where we marshals shone, it was our job to get the students out of the way as soon as possible. Many were the fights we stopped by nipping them in the bud and separating the combatants. Any Hamilton supporter who was brave enough to flaunt his colors in the face of the students was instantly despoiled of them. Many small arguments started this way.

One place there were three Hamilton girls bedecked in the yellow and black on the corner where the parade turned into the main street. These girls were quite bravely waving their pennants when they found themselves surrounded by a ring of students who stole their pennants and left in exchange blue and white ones. The girls took it good naturedly and kept on cheering.

On the whole the fellows behaved well, considerably better than was expected.

The train arrived back at Toronto at about nine o'clock and after leaving the train the crowd formed up and marched up Yonge street. Some more work for the marshals, but by dint of keeping at it, we managed to get them up without trouble. The parade was a long one, there being close on 1,200 in it. At the head was a monster tiger made of excelsior and cotton, which was the work of some school fellows. It was riding on a large lorry drawn by four horses and was all tied up with Varsity blue and white.

The parade finished up at the campus where we had a large bon fire started. We had had delivered the day before several loads of wood and coal oil and so had plenty of material handy. This was to guard against any depredations.

The president and several members of the faculty were present and the former made a speech congratulating us on our behaviour. The crowd cheered him to the echo and after enjoying the fire for a while dispersed quietly about twelve.

THE WORK OF BIG BEN

Hamilton Times — The sensational star of the Hamilton team was Ben Simpson. It was the schoolmaster's last game and he certainly made a glorious exit as a fitting climax to his brilliant career on the gridiron. He stood the smashing tackles of the Varsity wings without once wincing. Several times he evaded them behind his own goal, and booted out when a score seemed inevitable. Time and again he ran the ball out from behind his own when surrounded by Varsity wings, and on a couple of occasions he kicked when being pulled down. He was the one man on the team who tackled in brilliant style, and more than once he nailed Dixon, Gall and Maynard when they had cleared the Tiger wings, and were bound for the yellow and black line with almost a clear field before them. Simpson put up about as good a game as he ever played in his life and that the Tigers were defeated was no fault of his.

Spectator — Simpson was undoubtedly the most popular player on the field. To everyone acquainted with this veteran, the article of ball that he put up, even though he was the oldest player on the field, was just as good as he ever played, and brought him tributes from all sides. Not only did the old fellow punt and catch in perfect style, but he indulged in the running game as well and at times got away for nice journeys down the field, while in the last period and in the second quarter he saved his team many the point by some clever work when the Tigers were defending their line. Ben was the hero of the day, and great as is Gall and wonderful as is the Varsity team, more credit is coming to Simpson than to any man who was a factor in the game, may he be coach or player.

"Y" TO DISCUSS CITY LEAGUE

Mr. J. J. Thompson, physical director of the Y. M. C. A., when asked this morning as to what move he would make in regard to a representation in the City Hockey League, stated that the question would be discussed and an answer given in the course of a day or two.

SPORTING COMMENT

A loss of fully $50,000 will have to be pocketed by the concern that bought the moving picture privileges of the Johnson-Jeffries fight, which were shown in Winnipeg some time ago. The total receipts from the four months' exhibition of the pictures in the United States, Canada, England and Australia, have been approximately $210,000 whereas the company paid $200,000 for exclusive right alone, which, with its other expenses will probably run the total close to $260,000. The pictures are now practically "dead ones," and are shown in only a few small places. A crusade against the exhibition of the pictures and general disinclination among many whites to look at the reproduction of a colored man dethroning a white idol, are given as a reason for the failure of the pictures to bring in the expected gold return.—Winnipeg Free Press.

"If birdmen are to be reckoned as champions in the field of sport then Johnstone was a real champion, inasmuch as he possessed among other attributes a lion heart. In his dictionary there was no such word as fear. Johnstone was a desirable citizen. He had everything to live for, wife, children, plenty of real friends, and must have accumulated a snug fortune during his years as a public entertainer."

"The tragic finish of poor Ralph Johnstone, while endeavoring to add to the entertainment of gaping thousands, by adding a few extra thrills to a performance hazardous enough under the most favorable conditions, has been predicted ever since the boy came into the notice of the public, as an acrobat of extraordinary skill and daring," says the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"It was regarded as inevitable some day he would fall a victim to his splendid nerve, his supreme confidence, his absolute fearlessness.

"A few years ago young Johnstone was doing a trick bicycle act in vaudeville theatres, at summer parks and occasionally at country and state fairs, his engagements being booked by Wm. S. Cleveland, the former minstrel magnate. It was Johnstone's boast that nobody had ever done anything with a bicycle that he couldn't duplicate, and he was constantly experimenting with new and difficult, not to say hazardous tricks. Never did he take a part in public exhibition that was not fraught with grave danger, so much so that Cleveland and others about his office who had come to know and like young Johnstone, were content to see only one of his performances, always fearful lest some time he might make an awful mistake which might prove fatal. Johnstone's poise, his amazing balance made it possible for him to do things quite out of the ordinary, even among professional gymnasts, who made a specialty of such acts as appeal to "amusement lovers" who like to see human life placed in jeopardy, to be able to say "that they were there when it happened" if anything of a gruesome nature occured.

"Johnstone loved the applause of the multitude and the appreciation of his friends when he told a story worth while. He liked to entertain to be entertained. This was no ordinary reckless product of a half savage race plunging headlessly into dangerous undertakings, with the the unconscious bravado of miscalculating ignorance, but a young man of understanding, with none of the air of the braggard, just the quiet confidence of the man who knows he can do anything within his scope as well or better than any man of his strength and inches.

Nelson tottered to his feet, bleeding and dazed. Moran stood back waiting for him. Again the Briton's powerful right shot out and Nelson dropped to the mat once more. The performance was thrice more repeated, Moran each time reaching Nelson's unprotected jaw with his right. With the last knockdown the referee and the timekeeper counted the fateful ten.

Battling Nelson's star has set for good, but he went the knock out route, with the same gameness as he displayed in all his other battles in the ring. Nelson has earned a lot of money, through his gameness. He was never alluded to as a scientific boxer, and in the majority of the reports of his bouts, bruises and blood have always been in evidence. Nelson was a fighter who would win the plaudits of large crowds, not for his exhibition of boxing, but for his gameness and utter disregard for hard knocks.

But did Nelson ever do anything towards the uplifting of the ring. His gameness may have in the opinion of many, counterbalanced his deficiency in science, but from the standpoint of the genuine supporter, of the manly art, he did not.

MEASURES ALTITUDES.

The Use of the Barograph on Aeroplanes and Balloons.

What the compass is to the mariner the barograph is to the aviator. The barograph is an instrument for measuring altitudes. The pressure of the air as it increases or decreases causes a delicate needle to trace a wavy line upon a cylinder which revolves by clockwork. This line indicates not only the exact height that is reached by the aviator, but also the speed at which he is traveling.

The barograph is kept in a weather proof box with a glass front, which is attached to a bar of the aeroplane or to a rope on the balloon. It is officially sealed before the aviator embarks, so there is no possibility of tampering with it, and the seal is taken off in the presence of witnesses at the end of the flight. In this way it is possible to establish absolutely and graphically the altitude which an aviator attains in his aeroplane or balloon. It is necessary for the aviator to watch the barograph constantly, as it indicates a change in the elevation almost to the foot. The sky pilot has to keep his eye on the indicator much as the man at the wheel of the seagoing ship watches his compass. Should the aeroplane or the balloon rise or fall ten or twenty feet the aviator would not be conscious of it unless he looked at the wavering needle tracing its permanent record on a chart before him. This tells him immediately of any changes in the nature of the air currents and gives him timely warning of aerial dangers.

These instruments are so delicate and so accurate, it is said, that a man might hang one of them about his neck in its glass case or carry it in his hand and climb a flight of stairs, the height of his ascent being graphically indicated by the inked needle on the machine.—New York Press.

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

LADIES' WAIST.

All Seams Allowed.

The design we illustrate is a plain waist, with ornamental features, which means a practical garment. The main portion of the waist consists of a panel front, the edges of which are stitched to form a tuck on each side. Two short tucks at the shoulders provide the fullness. In the back a tuck turning each way gives the panel effect. At the neck the waist is cut round and a tiny collar extends from the edges of the front panel around the neck. The sleeves are the regulation shirt style, and the wrist finished with a shirt cuff designed for link cuff buttons. This waist may be made of any of the wash materials, with the collar of a contrasting color, or it may be of taffeta or some soft woolen fabric; in this case, the collar should be of silk or satin. The pattern (5166) is cut in sizes 32 to 42 inches bust. To make the waist in the medium size will require 3⅝ yards of material 36 inches wide, with ½ yard of silk 20 inches wide for collar.

LADIES' YOKE SKIRT.

All Seams Allowed.

The novel skirt which we show on this page is also very attractive. The popular yoke is, in this case, cut in three pieces, a front and two back sections, with the closing at the left side. The lower part is in two pieces—that is, cut on a fold front and back and the seams on each side; the plaits turn away from center-front and back and meet at the sides. This skirt will look well developed in broadcloth, serge, cheviot or velveteen. The pattern (5143) is cut in sizes 22 to 30 inches waist measure. To make the skirt in medium size will require 8¾ yards of material 44 inches wide, or 3½ yards 50 inches wide.

MATCHMAKING MOTHERS

A Little Article in Defence of Match-making Mothers

In everyday life, as well as in modern novels, the poor matchmaking mother is subjected to severe criticism, which, if she is at all sensitive, must make her life a misery.

It is her own sex who make her suffer, and who point at her the condemning finger of scorn; for women understand her little strategies and probe their meaning, and it is women who cause the little searching pinpricks which are more irritating and scathing than a big scandal.

And, as a rule, it is the unmarried women who are the origin of all the trouble, for they regard the matchmaking mother with a feeling of innate jealousy. She is an octopus who seizes desirable prey that might be otherwise persuaded to respond to their own tactics.

But is the matchmaking mother so much to be blamed?

She is a woman who understands the trials and difficulties of life, and she realises that a suitable marriage produces as much real happiness as can be obtained in this world. An unmarried woman certainly has a less restricted career, and may attain heights of fame which to the married woman would be impossible; but no amount of worldly glory can compensate for love, and the matchmaking mother understands this.

The Natural Vocation

Then, too, it is not every unmarried woman who makes a name for herself; there are thousands of poor souls struggling to keep their independence, who grow sterner and more austere year by year, because their real nature is absolutely warped. Marriage is woman's natural vocation, and if she evades Nature, she gradually becomes abnormal, eccentric, and less fit to battle with the world.

The real matchmaking mother is a matchmaker from the time that her girls are babies, and she is careful to foster all their most lovable and attractive qualities.

An Excellent Training

As they grow older, she particularly encourages traits that will make her children good wives, and she trains them to take an interest in all domestic duties. She likes them to be attractive, but she realizes that their charm must be natural, for an affected girl is an abomination. The matchmaking mother understands the value of thrift but she likes her girls to look pretty, and she trains them to be artistic, both in their own dress and in the arrangement of the home; and this habit will stand them in good stead in later days.

And, above all things, the matchmaking mother insists upon teaching her children the art of cooking, for she recognises that a wife can never be a really good housekeeper unless she has a thorough practical knowledge of cookery.

A Cure for Shyness

Another excellent result of the matchmaking mother's tactics is to do away with any self-consciousness in her girls.

It is very easy to tell from a girl's manner with men whether she is at home with them, or whether they all appear to her in the guise of fairy princes, whose just due is a blush and a simper.

Men nowadays do not want blushes or simpers; they prefer a woman who understands them.

As a rule, the matchmaking mother is a fascinating woman.

She is thoroughly capable, distinctly charming, and her house is a popular resort. Her daughters are dainty, delightful replicas of herself, and they are irresistible. They make good wives, and the matchmaking mother eventually has the satisfaction of knowing that her dear ones are happy in an atmosphere of well-deserved love.

CARAMEL WALNUTS

Recipe for Making Most Delicious of Candy

One-quarter pound ground almonds, eight ounces icing sugar, white of egg, two drops essence of almonds, three or four drops essence of vanilla, half walnuts.

Whisk white of egg slightly, add the essences to it. Rub icing sugar through a hair sieve, mix with the almonds, add enough white of egg to mix into a very stiff paste; divide into pieces. Roll into little balls about the size of a marble. Press a half walnut on either side. Dip into caramel prepared as below. Put on an oiled dish. When the caramel is crisp and firm, loosen. Put into paper cases, and pack in a box.

Caramel:—One-quarter pound loaf sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water, two or three drops lemon juice.

Put the sugar, water, lemon juice into a saucepan, put the lid on and melt slowly; bring to boiling point. Remove the lid and boil quickly until it breaks crisp when tested in cold water. Remove the pan from fire. Set the saucepan inside another containing a little boiling water. This keeps the caramel from getting hard while dipping the sweets.

TAUPE CLOTH SUIT.

WONDERFUL WERE SOME WEDDINGS

Marriages Performed in Balloons, on Horseback, and in Pitch Darkness—Odd Cases

A lion's cage, with a real, live denizen of the jungle within a foot or two of one's heels, is hardly the place one would expect to get married in. Yet, such are the vagaries of young love, this was the very place selected a few years ago by an Irish couple to begin their conjugal life. Without a tremor, without the movement of a muscle, the bride and bridegroom stood fearlessly in the presence of the shaggy beast, listening attentively to the white-surpliced clergyman reading the marriage service outside the strong iron bars.

But it is quite surprising the lengths some folks will go in order to have except the conventional one; and although such events are somewhat rare in England owing to the stringency of our marriage laws, in the United States weddings have been solemnized in all manner of queer places. There is a case on record where those three essentials of love—courtship, marriage, and honeymoon—were conducted some hundreds of feet in the air.

A beautiful Pittsfield girl was out motoring one day, when about a mile in front of her she noticed a balloon descending so rapidly to earth that a catastrophe was imminent. Putting on full speed, she dashed away to the spot where it was likely to fall, only to be anticipated by a few seconds. She was able, however, to render assistance to the injured man. Little by little the friendship thus commenced ripened into love, in the course of which the lady became a frequent aerial passenger. A few weeks later the courtship was ended by a wedding, which took place two thousand feet in the air, the officiating clergyman reading the marriage lines by megaphone from a companion balloon, and getting the bridal pair's responses in the same unconventional manner. No sooner was the ceremony over than the obliging minister opened his valve and descended to terra-firma, while the happy couple threw down ballast and quickly soared into the skies.

Less happy was the ending of another balloon wedding which happened not so many months back. The service over, which took place in the car, the balloon was allowed to descend. About a hundred feet from the ground the bride took fright and leaped out of the basket, falling headlong into river, and only narrowly escaping with her life.

The state of California was the scene of a picturesque if unorthodox wedding towards the beginning of this year. The bride, bridegroom, bridesmaids, best man, and the three hundred guests were all on horseback, and all dressed as cowboys and cowgirls. For roof there was the sky; the clergyman's reading-desk was the neck and mane of a particularly restless pony; except a white collar there was nothing to denote the minister's dress from that of the others.

Naturally, the service itself was of the briefest possible description.

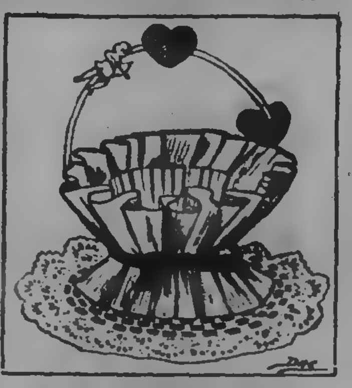
The woman who, during a heated argument with her husband, tearfully declares that she was "married in the dark," does not as a rule mean entirely what she says, and if you will inform her that there are several authentic cases on record of couples having been wedded for better or worse in the darkness, she would probably not believe you.

Such an event occurred ten years ago at Brooklyn, New York. The hour was ten minutes to eight at night; the room was pitch dark, not a glimmer of light penetrating through the closely shuttered windows. Yet the little ceremony went through without a hitch, all of them—bride, bridegroom, and clergyman—having learnt their respective parts by heart.

A NEW "JACK HORNER" PIE.

Paper Table Covers and Napkins Covered With Red Hearts and Cupids. Books of "Heart's Ease Powders" Containing Verses For Place Favors.

A St. Valentine party can be made a very pretty thing nowadays. It was always a charming festival, this old saint's day, to people of the least bit of idealism, but of recent years more artistic valentines are made than ever before and especially the decorations and favors for St. Valentine's day entertainments are most ingenious and attractive. There is a new "Jack Horner" pie, for example, shaped like a shoe. Few grownups even are proof against the fascination of pulling the enchanted ribbon and seeing the fat little mysterious package at the other end come bouncing out. These shoe shaped "Jack Horner" pies, made of the daintiest materials, can be purchased, but a woman who is clever with her fingers could easily make one, using an old shoe as a foundation, or, if she desired a larger pie, fashioning the foundation out of cardboard. Another "Jack Horner" pie is shaped like a heart and covered with red roses, and still another is a plain red heart with a flower border. The quiver shaped pies are a pleasing variation, and the ones made in the semblance of a mossy log, though logs have no connection with St. Valentine's day, are pretty. For the presents to be put inside there are, of course, all kinds of trifles, some inexpensive, some quite the reverse.



ICE CUP FOR VALENTINE PARTY.

Nothing is lacking in the shops that make a specialty of such things to make the table harmonious for the St. Valentine feast. There are paper tablecloths and napkins all covered with red hearts and gay little Cupids. Each napkin is rolled in a Cupid ring and holds a little favor. There are white heart shaped plates, even, decorated with tiny red hearts. These may be used as service plates if desired.

For place favors are the little books of "heart's ease powders," containing thirty bits of verse. Then there are heart shaped cards, Cinderella slippers, arrows, wands, fans, fairies—a bewildering collection from which to choose. Cunning little cups surmounted by a winged Cupid are nice to serve the ices in; so, too, are the little cups made in the guise of flowers. There are little red canoes for the salted nuts, tiny red barrels for the olives, and for bonbons large red hearts with formidable keys. Little heart shaped boxes for bonbons contain tiny mirrors, like vanity boxes.

Hearts of all sizes there are, of course, for decorative purposes and Cupids in gold, silver, white and red. If the table is to be lighted with candles nothing could be prettier for shades than the heart shaped ones, which come in various sizes and colors.

If the supper is to be served at small tables a rather pretty idea is to shut them off from each other with a few of the arbor screens which are so decorative. These screens have paper flowers, astonishingly real, climbing over them. One woman who is planning a St. Valentine's dance will have her supper room cut up into bowers, with four little tables in each bower, the walls to consist of screens with red wistaria climbing over them. A border of wistaria will encircle the upper part of the room. The favors for the dance will be wands, cones, garlands of hearts, wreaths of flowers, red poinsettia parasols, cunning pails filled with red and yellow paper tulips, paper bonnets, feathery fans and, last, an ermine hat, stole and muff.

Spiteful.

"Yes," said the engaged girl, "Dick is very methodical. He gives me one kiss when he comes and two when he goes away."

"That's always been his way," returned her dearest friend. "I've heard lots of girls comment on it."

Thus it happens that they cease to speak to each other.

His Bad Dream.

Truly oriental was the defense put forward by a prisoner at Alipore. Charged with stealing a Hindu idol with its ornaments, he stated that the goddess told him in a dream the night before that, as she was not properly worshiped by the Hindu priest, she would be better taken care of by him, a Mohammedan, and that unless he took charge of her worship she would in her wrath destroy his whole family. The magistrate, however, was not satisfied with the story and sentenced the accused to two months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine.—Bombay Gazette.

When the Loss Was Felt.

TOBACCO IN THE ARCTIC.

Resource of Miners When They Can Neither Chew Nor Smoke.

"When the wind is blowing thirty miles an hour and the temperature is 40 below it is some cold," said a man from Alaska. "If a man used tobacco in the ordinary way out of doors during such weather and got his lips wet through smoking a pipe or chewing he would be apt to get into trouble. First thing he knew he'd have his lips cracked, and they would be raw all winter long.

"The regulars stationed at the military posts up in Alaska found that if they tied a tobacco leaf in their armpit previous to undesired duty they would become very sick and could pass the post surgeon for hospital, getting rid of detail work they wanted to avoid.

"The miners up there learned something of this and found that the tobacco craving could be satisfied by binding a quantity of the leaf either in the armpit or against the solar plexus. This avoided broken and bleeding lips during the winter, and they weren't prevented from smoking indoors as well if they wanted to. It was the outdoor smoking or chewing that made all the trouble."—New York Sun.

Innuendo.

When founded on fact the malicious hint often does vastly more harm than the full disclosure. It has about it an air of mystery which brings on a train of imaginings and begets groundless suspicions which would quickly melt into thin air were the whole truth known. More especially is this the case when the evil hint is blended with words of commendation. "He's an honest and a temperate man, etc., but"— Oh, that mean, vile, hypocritical little "but" that has severed so many friendships and befouled so many a fair name! Where so much of good is spoken and the mean little "but" uttered with a regretful sigh it often looks like real pity. In reality it is but decking out and garlanding the victim for the sacrifice. The encomium is used only as a means of attaining a dastardly purpose, "With colors fairer painting their foul ends." The slanderer is frequently but a clumsy blunderer; not so the skillful innuendo man. He at least is no bungler. He is a real tactician, a genuine strategist. His is verily the refinement of cruelty. —Baltimore Sun.

SIGN OF THE GOLDEN LION.

SECRET OF YOUNG OLD AGE

Toronto News

"To her who would keep young, who would look young, and what is a great deal more important, would feel young when she has reached 67, I give this great commandment—Find an interest in life and keeping that interest before you as the main thing in your life, secure other interests that you may not become mentally warped."

"I simply have never had time to grow old in the sixty-seven years of my life," explained Mme. Bernhardt, the French actress, whose perennial youth is no less a marvel than is her great art.

"Even as a child I was extremely delicate, and every one predicted cheerfully that I would die of consumption. That all were disagreeably disappointed I will not venture to say. But to-day I am in better health than I have ever enjoyed in all my life, and I find that even such terribly trying roles as that I play in Sardou's "La Thosca" do not fatigue me as they once did.

PASSION OF HER LIFE.

"The mind, I think, controls the body more than the body can control the mind. So far I agree with that American sect, which you call, I believe, Christian Scientists.

"The art of acting has been the one great passion of my life. Yet devoted to the stage from a school girl, I have, nevertheless, found time to study painting, sculpture, and to devote myself to literature and play writing, the while enjoying a full measure of social life.

NO SYMPATHY WITH FADS

"With fads of beauty culture and all that sort of thing I have little sympathy. I still feel myself young, and my friends are good enough to tell me that my appearance has been so far preserved that when I am enacting youthful roles, the illusion of youth is carried from me across the footlights.

"I have one simple rule of diet, which I have followed all my life, and which I strongly recommend to everyone else, 'Eat what you like, and when you like.' It has served me well, and since you have asked me for my personal experience, I can give you but those receipts which I have found to work well in my individual case.

DONE MUCH WORK

"I have done much work in my life, and I have enjoyed many pleasures. The work took time, and the pleasures took time, but I enjoyed the one not less than I enjoyed the other, and my sixty-seven years have passed too quickly for me to take the time to grow old in them.

"Worry, the fretting over troubles, I have never indulged in. The woman who worries is certainly destined to premature age and wrinkles.

"The worries that present themselves to us in the form of great calamities can be avoided by none of us, but the petty worries of life count a thousand victims to one who is destroyed by the news of some really tragic event.

NO FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH

"In view of the interest taken in modern fads of beauty culture and the like, I feel almost ashamed that I cannot give to the men and women who read your newspaper, a receipt for some marvellous ointment or draught which would supply the place of the fabled fountain of youth. Yet I, the tragedienne, must confine myself to homely common sense, and declare that I know not how youth may be preserved, unless she who seeks its preservation will adapt herself to the frame of mind which I have found to be an absolute necessity in my own case."

T. Healy, of Wallaceburg, had two fingers of his right hand smashed while handling baggage.

GENESIS OF GULLIVER.

How the Famous Satire and Fantasy Came to Be Written.

When the Deanery of St. Patrick's fell to Swift, he regarded it as a recompense ill-proportioned to his deserts, and as a provision uncongenial to his taste; but he accepted it as a refuge after the wreck of all his hopes. He came to Ireland, then, filled with that hatred for her soil which made him, in spite of the accident of Irish birth, ever cling to his English parentage; disappointed with the result of all his efforts, his weapon of satire sharpened by the bitterness of political strife; and hopeless of the future. The one element of his genius which now overshadowed all others was its sarcastic force; and that sarcasm found abundant food amidst his new surroundings. The glaring wrongs of Ireland, the contemptuous indifference of English statesmen; the pettiness of the circle around him; the waste, the misery, the oppression—all these burned into a spirit only too ready to lash itself into rage, and to wreck its anger on the nearest victim. During all these earlier years of Irish banishment, he was in constant correspondence with those in England whose genius was the one redeeming feature of the time to him, but who, like himself, looked on the new world around them with profound disgust.

The first subject that drew him back to activity was the wrong suffered by Ireland. . . His indignation first found voice in a pamphlet on the "Use of Irish Manufactures," and it presently seized on a still more available topic, present by a scandalous job in connection with the copper coinage of Ireland. This gave rise to the famous "Drapier Letters." Swift did not measure his words; he hesitated at no exaggeration; he left his victims with no shred of defence or excuse. Out of their subterfuges he wrested new and more damnatory charges; he rang the changes on this one topic through every note of fierce denunciation and contemptuous sarcasm; and for the first time he roused, in all its fury, the envenomed bitterness of a wrath that embraced at once the racial antipathy of ages and the political jealousy of the English colonists against their return across the sea.

But this fight, however fierce and exciting, could not employ the whole force of Swift's genius. In his comparative loneliness and isolation, other objects engaged him. His chief attack must be on human nature, and the human race, against which he waged an undying war; and ill-health, melancholy, discontent, long absence from friends, all combined to embitter the hatred with which he regarded it.

It was in such surroundings, and amid such feelings that the "Travels of Gulliver" were composed, and their publication, in 1726, followed immediately upon Swift's last visit to London, and preceded by a few months the death of Stella.—Sir Henry Craik.

London's Novelist.

Mr. Pett Ridge dedicates his new book, "To My Wife." It will be remembered that about a year ago the novelist married Miss Olga Hentschel, sister of Mr. Carl Hentschel, the redoubtable champion of the rights of playgoers, and the (in his spare moments) well-known maker of process blocks. It is interesting, by the way, that a firm of process engravers plays a large part in the new Pett Ridge novel.

The Hentschels are a very remarkable family. Carl Hentschel began business as quite a small boy with his father in Holywell street, working hard and living hard. Afterwards he was one of the heroes of Jerome K. Jerome's "Three Men in a Boat," and the virtual founder of the Playgoers' Club. He has probably been to more theatrical "first nights" than any other living man. He is a little, jumpy man, never still for a moment, and plays an excellent game of golf. Mrs. Carl Hentschel is an ardent suffragist.

Pett Ridge, besides being the most distinguished transcriber of the life and humor of London since Charles Dickens, is a quiet and practical philanthropist, keenly interested in the happiness of the children who live in mean streets. He is a clean-shaven, middle-sized man, with straight hair and (like most humorists) a solemn manner. He speaks nearly as well as he writes, and is a devotee of the pipe.

Duralumin New Substitute for Steel.

With practically an unlimited field in which to use it, an English firm has begun the manufacture of duralumin, a new alloy of aluminium, which may in time became a substitute for steel in work where lightness, strength, and flexibility is required. H. B. Weeks, head chemist at Vickers' Sons & Maxim's works at Barrow, England, is the discoverer of duralumin. It is a little heavier than pure aluminium, but is as strong as steel and about one-third the weight of brass. It can be rolled, drawn, stamped, extended, or forged. It does not corrode as easily as other aluminium alloys.

The one big drawback to the extensive use of aluminium, aside from its expensiveness, is the fact that while its tensile strength equals that of steel, it is far less flexible.

He Took the Biscuit.

Concerning his early stage experiences, Mr. Gerald du Maurier, who has had such a good send-off as actor-manager at Wyndham's Theatre in London, with "Nobody's Daughter," tells an amusing story. At short notice he had agreed to play Pelleas to Mrs. Patrick Campbell's Melisande at a Birmingham theatre. "I remember," says Mr. du Maurier, "that I wore a pair of creaky boots. They creaked at every step I took. Ye gods, how that Birmingham audience yelled with laughter! At the end of the performance the manager came to me and said, 'Du Maurier, I congratulate you; I never saw any actor in my life draw such volleys of laughter in a tragic part. You take the biscuit.'"

William Clarke, of Thessalon, missed his way and walked into the river. He was dead when fished out.

THE WELSH EISTEDDFOD

THE ANNUAL FEAST OF SONG IS A VERY OLD INSTITUTION.

It's History Goes Back to 517 A.D., When the Bard Taliesin Presided Over the National Musical Gathering — Reason That More Widely Known Music Is Not Produced Is Found In Piety of the Welsh.

The National Eisteddfod, which is held annually in North or South Wales, was held recently at Colyn Bay. Formerly the Eisteddfod was criticized by the English press rather severely but as its quaint ceremonies have come to be better understood, more sympathy is shown towards the venerable institution. There are, of course, many who continue to adversely criticize the "Gorsedd," or Supreme Court of authority; but it is feared that these and others of similar opinions overlook the fact that the Eisteddfod (of which the Gorsedd is an adjunct) has, whatever its defects, helped to make the Welsh a music-loving moral people. It is a proud thing to be able to say that a nation's chief hobby is music and poetry.

It is impossible to say when music entered into the ceremonies of the Druids, the founders of the Gorsedd and of the Eisteddfod, or "Chair" as it was formerly designated. There is a record of an Eisteddfod held in South Wales in the year 517 A.D., and it was presided over by the bard Taliesin. Another was held in the year 540, at Deganwy, or Conway, and its president was Maelgwn Gwynedd. This person offered a reward to such of the bards and minstrels as should swim over the River Conway. The poor harpists who swam had their harps damaged in the water, whilst the throats of the bards or singers were not affected, and, of course, they carried off the prize or prizes. The records of early Eisteddfods are rare, but I will name three, the first being that held in Cardigan Castle in 1107, when Cadwgan ap Bleddyn, Prince of South Wales, invited the princes and chieftains of all parts of Wales, including the chief bards, singers, and musicians, "and set chairs for them, and instituted contests between them, as was the practice at the feasts of King Arthur." In 1135, at that held in Ystrad Tywi, &c., was kept up for forty days, "when all were allowed to depart, and the bards, musicians, and learned men, and performers of every sort, were honorably rewarded." In the same century Prince Gruffydd ap Cynan held an Eisteddfod at Caerwys, North Wales, for the purpose of regulating minstrelsy. Here laws were established for the better regulation of music and poetry.

As music is now the principal attraction of the Eisteddfod, it is natural to ask whether it is being developed thereat on the right lines. Judging by results—the best possible method—the answer is "No." Neither have the Eisteddfodic competitions in many cases stimulated the poets to produce their best work; and it may be added that no poem or ode successful at the Eisteddfod has gained world-wide fame. Of course, the Welsh language, in which the successful poets have sung, has handicapped them, though it is a splendid medium for the expression of the poet's varied thoughts and emotions. Music has not been handicapped in the Eisteddfod because of language; and although Macaulay may be right in stating that poetry will be of less use as the light of knowledge increases, it is patent to all that music is ever advancing. It is an art the possibilities of which seem inexhaustible. The music of Wagner, so startling, so disliked by many forty years ago, is fashionable to-day—or, it may perhaps be safer to say, was fashionable yesterday. The art is being developed so fast that Richard Strauss's mysterious effects outclass many of Wagner's!

Take as a starting-point the rather late period of Eisteddfodic existence—the thirteenth or fourteenth century. An Englishman then produced a piece called "Summer is a-coming in," and English musical production has culminated, in the twentieth century, in the monumental works of Elgar. On the other hand, there is no example extant of Welsh music which can be proved to have been composed in the thirteenth or fourteenth century. Some say the key to a kind of notation in runic characters is lost, and that with it the music of the Druids is gone for ever. Let us hope it is owing to some such misfortune our stock of really ancient music is untraceable; but the sad fact remains, we have nothing brilliant to show the world in music.

The Eisteddfod has produced nothing of great importance. All along it has been satisfied with the awarding of prizes for solos, anthems, and a few cantatas. Why? Possibly one reason is because our Gorsedd leaders or Eisteddfod committees have judged the use of music too much from the religious standpoint. Until recently many of our good leaders believed that musical instruments, theatres, and operas were the things of Satan. Some of these things have their right place in the education and art-life of the people. There is ever before us the fear of becoming too world-minded, and so Art suffers; development is arrested.

The Eisteddfod is the meeting-place of the Welsh as a people, and it must not be forgotten that the world measures the standard of the music by what is heard thereat. The standard varies but little from year to year. Knowledge, however, is spreading and the Welsh people are taking a wider outlook upon Art, and we are hopeful it will ere long have its rightful place in the national life. It behooves our Eisteddfod leaders so to direct the working of the venerable institution that it may always encourage and set its seal upon all efforts which have for their object the placing of Wales upon a high pedestal in the world of Art. Then, indeed, it will deserve the title by which we so delight in calling it, "the Land of Song!"—Pedr Alaw.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

Sir,—What it was that induced Rev. Father McColl to take a fling at me personally in his lengthy letter in your issue of Monday it would indeed be hard to say. He says that I am stupid, pompous, idiotic, &c. Unfortunately I am afraid it is largely true. I have many faults, I regret to say. But he might as well have done me up "properly" when he was at it. There was one allegation against me that he omitted, viz., that I am actuated by hatred of Catholics because they did not vote for me in 1908. How he came to miss that point I am at a loss to understand. Is it necessary, Mr. Editor, for me to say that I believe implicitly in the freedom of the people to do as they please in matters of religion or otherwise? Surely not. What I have been saying is that the Catholic Church especially repudiates this idea, and if Father McColl's letter is intended to "refute" my statements that the Roman Catholic Church has declared against the sovereignty of the will of the people, democracy, the brotherhood of man, and liberty as it is known and believed in by struggling humanity to-day, it is a complete failure. No doubt these were the "attacks" referred to by those who asked Father McColl to reply to them. Why does he not refer to them then? I can't be bothered discussing myself or for that matter Father McColl, but I am vitally concerned in the liberty of the people which the Roman Catholic Church now more than ever expressly denies. It says that "the People" have no liberties by right except those granted by the Roman Church. This whole terrible question has been revived by the recent papal decrees. The Church has declared war on democracy, Protestantism, Popular Liberty, the independence of the State, &c. A most appalling condition of affairs exists. The Church actually denies a man any rights except what it may choose to allow him. In my humble way I am trying to arouse my fellowmen to this greatest of all issues so suddenly thrust upon us. Surely I have made my statements clear enough. Father O'Brien did not venture to discuss them and Father McColl seems equally wary. Let me say that I cherish feelings of respect and esteem for my Catholic fellowmen just as I do for Protestants. I make no distinction between them and I would esteem Father McColl if he would give me but half a chance. What more can I say? Perhaps I should not have replied to his letter at all but that would have been a discourtesy which I would not willingly show to any man.

Yours &c.,

J. H. BURNHAM.

A CAREFUL MAN.

The parsimony of the old New Englander of the type now almost vanished was nobly exemplified in Mr. Benny Huntingdon, who lived with his maiden sister in a little town in western Massachusetts. Neither had ever spent a penny unnecessarily and when in his old age Mr. Benny became crippled with "the rheumatis" and had, as well, strange flutterings of the heart, which were unrelieved by the best recommended "yarb teas," they were greatly shocked at the suggestions and warnings of their friends and neighbors that they ought to send for a doctor. Mr. Benny refused, declared his scorn of the entire medical profession and continued to save his pennies.

But the pain grew worse. Mr. Benny was confined to his bed in great agony and overheard some of the neighbors telling his sister that he was going to die. Then he sent for an old schoolmate, a man as "careful" as himself.

"Josiah," he asked, in a low, confidential tone, "have you ever had a doctor?"

Josiah shook his head. "Dunno as I have," he answered.

Mr. Benny reached out and laid a trembling hand upon his old friend's arm. "Josiah," he asked again, "did you ever hear how much one o' them doctors charges for a visit?"

Josiah looked at his suffering friend with pitying sympathy. "Well," he said, breaking it as gently as he could—"well, I have heard, Benny, that they charge as much as $2 a visit!"

"Two dollars!" Mr. Benny repeated. "Two dollars!" Then he sank back on his pillow and sighed in a voice of strangely mingled relief, regret and resignation. "Well, I dunno but I'd rather spend $5 than die!"—Youth's Companion.

The Licorice Plant.

The licorice plant resembles a rose with a single green stem, reaches a height of about three feet and bears a small purple star shaped flower. The first year's root growth resembles a loosely twisted string of tow and may run to twenty feet in length. The second year it assumes a woody substance when dry, and the third year it acquires its commercial value. The time for digging the root is the winter, when it is dried and crushed under heavy stones drawn round on it by mules, much as olives are crushed to extract their oil.

Queer Kaffir Custom.

Kaffir women will not pronounce their husband's names or even use words which contain the emphatic syllable of those names. One old woman, being taught to say the Lord's prayer, changed the word from "come" in "Thy kingdom come" to something that made nonsense, and it proved that the proper "come" word was the main syllable of her husband's name.

FORCED TO APOLOGIZE FOR CALLING MR. MONK A LIAR

General Exodus of Liberals When T. W. Crothers Rises to Speak Causes Dr. Shaffner to Call Out "Cowards" —Demand for an Apology Reopens Affair of a Couple of Days Ago.

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—All hope of a division on the protracted debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne last night was dispelled shortly before 11 o'clock, and a scene was enacted with culminated in an encounter between the two parties which rivalled the famous contremps between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. George E. Foster two years ago.

The incident began when Sir Wilfrid had finished his oration defending the attitude of the administration on the naval question, which has been under fire since the opening of the debate. The Prime Minister was heard by a crowded house, and as soon as T. W. Crothers (Conservative, West Elgin) arose to continue, there was a general exodus on the part of Liberal members. The noise was great, and Mr. Speaker shouted "Order, order." No attention was paid to his remarks, and several Conservatives took up the cry, and in the confusion were heard such expressions as "Come back and take your medicine," and in the hubbub Mr. Speaker heard Dr. F. L. Schaffner (Conservative, Souris, Man.) use the word "cowards."

The Speaker at once called upon Dr. Schaffner to withdraw the expression. Speaker Marcil then intimated that an apology was due to the House.

Hon. George E. Foster: "What about 'liar' the other day?"

Cries of "Order, order," and "Apologize," filled the House, and Conservatives gave full vent to their lung power and shouted to the Speaker to have C. A. Gauvreau (Liberal, Temiscouata) apologize for saying that Mr. Monk lied.

Speaker Marcil appealed for order, and Mr. Borden arose to say, amid the wildest kind of cheering on the part of his followers, "I respectfully suggest that the word 'coward' is no more offensive than the word 'liar'."

This was followed by another burst of Opposition cheering, with a counter demonstration by the Liberals. Throughout the uproar Mr. Foster shouted in stentorian tones, "Make the other men apologize. That's the only fair thing."

The Speaker explained that the other day, when the Liberal member for Temiscouata used the expression "liar" he had not heard it. But, when he saw it in Hansard the following day, he called upon Mr. Gauvreau to withdraw, and that hon. gentleman had done so.

Mr. Borden, evincing unusual anger, pointed out that the expression used by the member for Temiscouata had been reported in Hansard, yet the Speaker had exacted no apology from him.

Mr. Foster: "Make him apologize."

This was followed by cries of "apologize" from the Conservative benches.

Sir Wilfrid stemmed the melee of voices for a moment. He pointed out that the question whether the member for Temiscouata should apologize or not could not be discussed at this time. "When, an incident has passed," he said, "it cannot be recalled. I am not prepared to say whether the member for Temiscouata should have been called upon to apologize or not."

Mr. Foster: "No, he is on that side."

Mr. Borden: "I am not prepared either to say whether an apology should be asked in either case, but it has been in one, and not in the other."

Mr. Foster: "The apology will be given before the House does business."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier interjected that all men were fallible.

Cries of "apologize" continued, and Mr. Borden brought forth renewed cheering from his side of the House, when he shot his ultimatum at the Premier and Speaker:

"We may as well have this matter threshed out now."

An all night session seemed imminent.

The Opposition leader pointed out that no one in the House has asked for ruling in this case.

Mr. Foster—"Let us have equal rights, no prejudice."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier—"The incident cannot be recalled in the midst of the debate. We must proceed with the debate."

The Speaker reviewed his rulings and explained that he had not called upon Mr. Gauvreau to withdraw, only because he had not heard him using the expression, and he had heard Dr. Schaffner.

After more turmoil the Speaker suggested that, if the member for Temiscouata considered it his duty to the House, he hoped he would apologize.

Mr. Gauvreau first said that he could not apologize under the rules, but a moment later said that, in order to restore peace, he would utterly withdraw his expression and apologize to the member for Jacques Cartier. He added, amid laughter, "I won't ask him to go into the corridor to settle that."

Mr. Crother's motion to adjourn then carried, and one of the most remarkable incidents of late years closed.

W. B. Northrup (Conservative, East Hastings), who resumed the debate on Tuesday, said it was time for Canada to stop and take stock of her national defences. He would liked to have seen the royal prerogative of control of the navy defences of the country retained. He regarded as dubious the Government's expression of satisfaction with the increase in imports and exports during the past year, and argued that this was no indication of prosperity. By taking the duty off coal, and rescinding the bounties on steel and iron, the volume of Canadian imports could largely be increased, but at the sacrifice of Nova Scotia collieries, and the stifling of the iron and steel industries.

He argued that the naval policy of the Government had brought about a weakened condition of defence. Since last year, by that policy, two warships had been taken out of the Imperial navy, 800 sailors had gone out of the service, and millions of dollars of Canadian money spent in vain.

E. W. Tobin (Richmond and Wolfe) produced three declarations from Mayor Tardi of Kingsley Falls, where the meeting was held; James Smith and J. B. Prefontaine, who were also at the meeting, bearing out the denial of Notary Begin of Richmond, Que., of the accusation of Mr. Monk that he stated from a public platform during the Drummond-Arthabaska bye-election that the Canadian navy would be used to pound Great Britain.

Ralph Smith (Nanaimo), dealing with the speech made by Mr. Burrell, said that he, like his leader, was at variance with Premier McBride of British Columbia, spoken of as a probable leader of the Conservative party, because, on the arrival of the Rainbow at Victoria, Mr. McBride had declared that he was in accord with Laurier's naval policy. Clive Philips Woolley, the president of the British Columibe branch of the Naval League, had expressed himself in similar tones.

Mr. Smith thought the people of Canada would remember that the Government had carried out the naval policy on lines approved by the whole House, whereas the Opposition had changed its policy every year and would likely do so again.

CONSTABLE GETS SEVERE BEATING

Port Hope, Nov. 30.—Night Constable Burns, while attempting to arrest four men at an early hour yesterday morning, received a severe beating. One of the assailants knocked him down, while another took his baton and pounded him over the head, inflicting several bad bruises. Two of the men have been arrested, and the case will come up as soon as the policeman has sufficiently recovered to appear against them.

Will Withdraw "Salome."

Chicago, Nov. 30.—Andreas Dippel, impressario of the Chicago Opera Co., announced at noon yesterday that Salome would be withdrawn from the repertoire of the company. This is a result of the criticism of Mary Garden's portrayal of the leading role and her hideous dance.

BLACK PICTURE FOR RAILROADS

Washington, Nov. 30.—A black picture of prospects for the railroads unless they are allowed to raise their rates was painted before the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday by C. C. McKay, chairman of the Trunk Line Association of New York, an organization of eastern carriers. He declared that the wages of thousands of employes and the whole railroad industry had been threatened by the involuntary reduction of rates.

TRY A REVIEW WANT AD

OPERATOR HAD BOTH FEET FROZEN

Fort William, Nov. 30.—L. M. Keating, night operator at Oscar, a small town 120 miles west of here on the Grand Trunk Pacific, was found on Saturday at 12 o'clock by W. Lowry and Mark Chown about four miles from the station, sitting beside a small lake, with both feet frozen, and too weak to stand. He had not slept nor eaten for 94 hours. The rescuers carried him to the station, and a message was immediately sent to Fort William. A special engine was sent out.

It will not be known for a day or two yet whether amputation of the feet will be necessary.

THE DEATH OF AN HEROIC WOMAN

Newark, N.J., Nov. 30.—Miss Anna Haag, a heroine of the Newark fire, who saved half a dozen lives in the holocaust at High and Orange streets on Saturday, died yesterday from her injuries. Miss Haag was a forewoman in the Wolf Manufacturing Co. It was largely through her coolness and bravery that many of the girls who were panic-stricken with fear escaped from the upper floors of the building.

Strange Maladies.

Chatham, Nov. 30.—Ald. Ritchie, M.D., recommended to the City Council that the Chinamen of the city be forced to undergo a strict medical examination at stated intervals, to prevent the spread of Oriental diseases in Chatham.

RESULT OF TORONTO ISOLATION HOSPITAL INQUIRY MADE KNOWN

Cross-Infection in Hospitals Where Contagious Diseases Are Treated Cannot be Completely Checked Under Best Systems.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—Judge Winchester's report on the management of the Isolation Hospital was forwarded to Mayor Geary last evening. It consisted of 63 typewritten pages, and after reviewing most of the cases in which negligence by the hospital authorities was complained of, as well as the other evidence submitted, the findings are, as a rule, in the direction of exonerating the authorities. As regards the complaints of cross-infection while patients were in the hospital, his honor comments:

"I find with all the care that can be given by physicians and nurses in connection with cases of scarlet fever, diphtheria and measles, it has been found impossible in the English hospitals, with their new box and cubicle systems and modern equipment to prevent cross-infection in the hospitals, although these cases are very greatly reduced.

"It is absolutely necessary that every prevention that can be devised by medical skill and knowledge should be taken to prevent the spread of contagion, and notwithstanding that a number of the physicians who gave evidence before me, stated that they did not consider that scales from a patient recovering from scarlet fever would carry contagion, and that infection was not received by mere exposure to the air in the room where the patient was, I consider that measures should be taken to prevent any possible infection by scales or otherwise.

JUDGE WINCHESTER.

"I find that the maids of both the scarlet fever and diphtheria wards comingle without taking any precautions to prevent contagion.

"I find that about one-half of the outside physicians attending patients in the hospital do not robe themselves in cap or gown or take any other precautions to prevent contagion, although the necessary clothing is in readiness for them.

Judge Winchester goes on to recommend a bacteriological laboratory at the hospital; completion of new building; enforcement of rules; an additional ambulance; special collection of accounts; free antitoxin; a Government grant; written certificates of discharge; adoption of Dr. Milne's method for preventing contagion; an annual report; reorganization of staff.

As to the medical health officer and hospital staff, he says:

"I find that Dr. Sheard has been careful and attentive to the performance of his duties with reference to the Isolation Hospital, devoting his energies in its interests at all times and without regard to his own personal convenience. He has done, as some of the physicians stated, noble work, and deserves commendation for the manner in which he has performed his duties and provided for the wants of the unfortunates; they stated that the only surprise was that he was able to do so much with the small amount of money at his disposal in connection with the hospital.

"With reference to Miss Mathieson, the lady superintendent, the greater number of those who gave testimony with reference to the Isolation Hospital spoke highly of her ability and conscientious work in connection with the hospital.

"In my opinion, however, the work in connection with the hospital has become too exacting for a lady superintendent to have charge of all the details in connection with the same. The grossly careless manner in which the engineers admitted they performed not only their duties, but often work which was apparently not a part of their duties, should never have been permitted by the lady superintendent.

"Dr. Hazlewood and his assistant perform their work in the hospital satisfactorily, as does Miss Taylor, the secretary."

TO OPEN UP PORCUPINE

Government Will Build Extension of T. & N.O.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—"The Government yesterday passed an order-in-council providing for the building of the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway from a point on the main line near Kelso or Porcupine. The distance will probably be 30 or 32 miles and the cost about $450,000. This work will be done under the powers given legislation last session and will be proceeded with without delay."

Chairman Englehart of the T. & N. O. Railway Commission said last night: "The action of the Government is all right. We have the land up there and this is another indication that we are going to take care of it. It is an extension which I have supported, but not only the Porcupine district, but the whole of the land up there, will be looked after, and we want to develop it all."

R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., spoke strongly yesterday morning of the need for the extension of the T. & N. O. now decided upon. "There can be no doubt whatever," he said, "that a railway is needed. Over two million dollars is invested already. The mines have to be equipped for operation and for shipping. Supplies have to be taken in. This means an expenditure of as much more. One concern refused an offer of a million and a half for their property, I am told. The Government will be fully justified in building a line to Porcupine without delayed.

KINGSTON WANTS HYDRO POWER

Kingston, Nov. 30.—The City Council will likely carry out the suggestion of Hon. Adam Beck and ask the cooperation of the neighboring municipalities in this district in securing cheap power from the Hydro-Electric Commission. A meeting will be held in Brockville, if the municipalities will agree to enter.

Kingston wants to get power, and Prescott is said to be just as eager for it. It is hoped to get Brockville, Gananoque, Napanee and Deseronto to fall in line. Power could be secured from Waddington, N.Y., across from Morrisburg. The Seymour Co. of Cobourg have a proposition before to the city, which will be taken up Thursday, but it is not satisfactory, and better concessions will have to be made by the company before a contract would be signed.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

At the Chatham Council meeting it was decided to rid the city of all houses of ill-repute.

The retail merchants of Kingston have decided to employ private detectives to prosecute men peddling goods without a license.

Etienne Prosper Berne-Bellecour, the landscape and portarit painter, died in Paris yesterday. He was born at Boulogne Sur Mer in 1838.

The firemen nipped in the bud what might have been a serious blaze at the bishop's palace, in Kingston, yesterday, due to spontaneous combustion. The damage only amounted to $100.

Sixty of Vancouver's High School Cadets have received the sanction of the school board to go to London in June to attend the coronation ceremonies, their expenses to be met by public subscriptions.

Rev. Sylvester F. Scovel, president of the American branch of the International Peace Society and former president of the Wooster University, died at his home in Wooster, Ohio, last night of pneumonia.

During a sudden tempest in the Caspian Sea yesterday, a landing stage, on which were 300 Persian dockworkers, was dragged from its moorings and swept out to sea. All hopes of rescue have been abandoned.

TRESTLE GAVE WAY, SEVEN MEN INJURED

Halifax, Nov. 30.—Seven men injured, two probably fatally, by the collapse of the banking station at No. 2 Colliery, Glace Bay, yesterday. The engine and a train load of cars were being run out on the trestle when it gave way and the entire train dropped to the ground, a distance of 25 feet. James McRuey, fireman, received cuts and bruises and a dislocated shoulder, and Jack McInnes, brakeman, bruises and cuts. The others injured were Joseph Mullins, foreman of the banking station; John Morrison, Jack McInnes, conductor; El. Perry and Charles Coffin. The damage will total about $8,000.

Electrocuted In Bath Tub.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 30.—Edward L. Uhrig, 23 years old, son of a wealthy coal dealer, was found dead in a bath tub in his home Monday night. He had been electrocuted by an electrically operated vibrator by which he was massaging his body.

BRAKEMAN IS WANTED

Edward Elmer McIntosh is Charged With Theft of Bills.

Toronto, Nov. 30.—A warrant has been sworn out by Superintendent Rogers of the provincial police for the arrest of Edward Elmer McIntosh, formerly a brakeman on the G.T.R., and residing at 69 Galley avenue. The charge is that he did steal the $20,000 in unsigned Traders' Bank bills of which $8,000 was found in a furnace flue of the house by a four year-old child of the family that moved into the house three weeks ago.

McIntosh is 26 years of age, and, with his wife and one young child, lived in the house from the time of the robbery last year till Nov. 7. Then they disappeared, but it is known that McIntosh was in Stratford on Sunday with a Darracq touring car, which it is believed he has since disposed of. The auto was a six cylinder touring car, with green body and seating seven persons.

EDWARD M'INTOSH.

What first directed suspicion against McIntosh is that he was known to have been investing heavily in real estate immediately before the disappearance of the bills. It is supposed a number of persons were involved in the robbery. For months the Galley avenue house has been watched, and the neighbors became aware of it. He is thus described: About 5 feet 6 inches in height, fair complexion, brown hair, weighs 180 pounds, prominent dimple in his chin, straight nose, and generally good looking.

RALPH CONNOR DEFENDS SHEARER

Winnipeg, Nov. 30.—Hon. Colin Campbell and Rev. C. W. Gordon engaged in acrimonious conflict yesterday morning while the former was on the stand in the enquiry into Dr. Shearer's charges. After stating that in his opinion nothing could be farther from the truth than the accusation of graft by police in administration of the segregation district, the Attorney-General went on to characterize Dr. Shearer's statements regarding the morality of Winnipeg as the most bitterly cruel that ever went before the public.

Rev. C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor) took up the cudgels in defence of Shearer, and put the Attorney-General through a severe cross-examination, in which there was a good deal of mutual recrimination. The Attorney-General said he had formerly had a good opinion of Shearer, but in this case his zeal had run away with his judgment.

Ald. Adams shook his fist in the face of Rev. Charles D. Stewart, and demanded that the latter take back the offensive statement that the name of Adams should be placed with that of "Daly, Evans & Co." over every house of prostitution in the segregated area.

Attorney-General Campbell, in speaking of the difficulty of obtaining conviction under the present criminal law, suggested an amendment permitting conviction on prima facie evidence.

REFERENDUM THE CRY; UNIONISTS APPEALING TO PEOPLE ON THAT GROUND

Dangers of Home Rule and the Plan for the Reform of the Upper Chamber is the Ground of Conservative Campaign.

London, Nov. 30.—The politicians of all parties are straining every nerve to crowd into a few days the work which in ordinary elections is spread over weeks or months. Nearly all the heavy guns were in action yesterday.

Arthur J. Balfour, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, before a big meeting in Albert Hall, where he warmly supported the referendum, described the Government as puppets dancing to the tune of John Redmond and his American paymasters.

The issues are narrowing daily. The Conservatives make much of the menace of home rule. They proclaim that the plan of the Liberals for the reform of the House of Lords means a single chamber and put to the front their new policy of referendum.

An interesting factional cleavage has occurred in Balfour's party over tariff reform. The Spectator, which is the spokesman of the Unionist free traders, has proposed that the tariff reformers pledge themselves to submit the question to a referendum, if the party wins, is not being a leading issue of the campaign. The most ardent tariff reformers, led by The Morning Post, contend that it is the foremost principle of the party. "The Unionist party breaks into fragments," says The Post, "if a Unionist victory does not mean tariff reform."

Mr. Balfour last night announced his willingness to leave it to a referendum. In the meantime, the leaders are making every appeal to the independent vote, believing that it controls the issue.

The Irish Unionists sent a message of defiance of home rulers to Mr. Balfour's meeting, and deputations from the Nonconformist Unionist Association of England, and 600 ministers of non-Episcopal churches in Ireland have addressed Mr. Balfour in opposition to home rule.

The reading of the message from the Irish Unionist at Albert Hall caused much enthusiasm.

"In all solemnity," said the message, "we now declare that home rule will bring Ireland, not peace, but the sword. If an Irish Parliament is set up the Unionists of the south, allied with the men of Ulster, will not acknowledge its authority. They will neither obey its decrees nor pay its taxes."

Mr. Balfour pronounced strongly in favor of the referendum as the best method of settling deadlocks between the two Houses without requiring the reform of the House of Lords, and it could be carried into effect before the House of Lords was reformed. This he declared to be Lansdowne's plan.

He ended by declaring that the Cabinet was governed by its noisiest members, who were governed by John Redmond, who was governed by Patrick Ford. "Don't trust the puppets who are performing their parts on the stage," admonished Mr. Balfour. "Don't trust the Irish wirepuller. Don't trust the American paymaster, who calls for a tune. Trust alone the sound judgment and enlightened patriotism of the people of the country."

J. H. Seavern, who was member of Parliament for the Brixton division of Lambeth in 1906, and who was at one time a resident of Boston, has become the Liberal candidate in the same constituency against Davidson Dalziel, Unionist, once a resident of New York.

Lord Joicey, who was created a peer by the Liberals, has announced his defection from that party because of its failure to provide for the defence of the country, and for its alliance with the Socialists. It is stated that several other Liberal peers are tending in the same direction.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 30, 1910.

QUITE LIVELY

There was a time when English politicians were looked upon as grave and decorous debaters, and looking across the Atlantic we expected to hear of weighty arguments and gentlemanly discussions among the leaders of the parties there, without any very exciting accompaniments even among their followers. But times seem to have changed before the present elections were on, and while Parliament was still in session, the Duke of Marlborough had referred to Mr. Lloyd George's "insolent, unsavory invective" and intimated that he was not a gentleman. At this rate before the elections are over the discussions may reach the stage of the last campaign when Mr. Balfour alleged that Mr. Ure was—you're another.

THE CORRECT VIEW

Mr. Borden is now strenuously denying that his party has any alliance with the Nationalists, or any sympathy with their movement, Mr. Miller very effectively met Mr. Borden's disclaimer.—Hamilton Times.

That is a sample of the kind of article that some Liberal papers are serving up to their readers. But others, more astute, recognize that twaddle regarding an alliance between the Conservatives and Nationalists will not be credited by a sensible people. On this the Globe says;

"The outstanding incident in yesterday's debate on the Naval Service Act of last session was Mr. Borden's assertion that the Conservatives are not in alliance with the Nationalists." "That Mr. Borden's view is the correct one is shown by many indications. It is a matter of common knowledge Mr. Borden declined the invitation to attend the Conservative party caucus two or three days ago. There are obviously strained relations between the regular Conservatives and the insurgent Nationalists, and these are not likely to be relaxed as a result of Mr. Borden's explicit reiteration that his naval policy of last year remains his naval policy still. It does not seem probable that any effort on his part can overcome Mr. Monk's repugnance to the policy which last session forced him to take an independent stand against his leader on this question."

An alliance between the Conservatives and Nationalists, so long as the Nationalists advocate their present views, is an impossibility, for the Conservatives wish Canada, in any measures she takes to provide for maritime defense, to act in concert with the Imperial authorities, while the Nationalists will not consent to the Imperial authorities having any control at any time over any navy Canada may possess.

The difference between the Liberals and the Nationalists is much slighter. The Nationalists say the Liberals have established a navy that Britain can use for the defence of the Empire. The Liberals reply that they have not—and they have only to get the Nationalists to believe them and their quarrel is over on that point.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS

A short time is allowed to elapse in England between the dissolving of the House and the beginning of the polling in the constituencies, and in a few days the returns will be coming in. The great question to be decided is the veto power of the House of Lords. Upon this question the parties have recorded their views in resolutions and the people are called upon to decide between them.

The Liberals propose that the Lords should not retain the power to veto legislation, and in order to deprive them of that power propose that if a measure is passed again by the Commons, after having been rejected by the Lords, it may become law without their sanction.

A reform of the House of Lords is proposed by the Conservatives, by which the hereditary principle will be eliminated. They also include in their programme that the sole control of purely financial matters shall rest with the House of Commons, that if a disagreement on any other bill should continue for more than a year it shall be dealt with by a joint session of the two Houses, and that if the disagreement is over a measure involving an important change in the constitution it shall be referred to the electors.

The Liberals object to the Conservative proposals and claim that the referendum would be so expensive that it would be a prohibition tariff on Liberal legislation.

Conservatives oppose the Liberal plan on the ground that it would abolish the second chamber by depriving it of any power, and that a single-chamber Parliament would be a dangerous innovation in the constitution.

The battle is on, the armies are lined up and a short time will show how the electors view the matter.

AS TO FACTORIES

This city has been progressing and with the large additions our prosperous manufacturers are putting up we are not inclined to complain because a new factory is not located here every other day. At the same time it is possible that we may be too "set" in our ways of dealing with the matter. Most people like to have their own way of doing business and to have others who wish to do business with them fall in their way. It does not always work though. Others have their ideas and our set ways may not meet their views or their circumstances. One who wishes to branch out to enlarge his trade, must be adaptable, and adapt his methods to catch the current.

This city has had its views as to how far and in what form it would encourage the location of industries. It has done well, too. But it may be found advisable at times to adjust our form of encouragement if by so doing a prospective industry can be secured. We have been careful in our dealings, and this carefulness should not be relaxed. All dealings should be carried out with proper caution and the interests of the City should be always safeguarded and we do not mean to encourage or suggest any extravagance. Large bonusing this City has not indulged in and we do not suggest that it should ever begin to do so. But if the Council should find that by an adjustment of the methods that have been followed, and encouragement in a new or different form, would lead to success in negotiations we do not think the people would expect them to adhere to any hide-bound plans. The form of a proposition does not count for so much and so long as a proposition was reasonable and reasonably safeguarded the Council would, we are satisfied, find that the people were behind them.

EDITORIAL NOTES

In Ottawa the Council imposed a license fee of $200 on moving picture shows and the proprietors propose using their lanterns and screens to show up the aldermen who voted for the measure. It will be a moving appeal.

It is said Mr. Asquith proposes to provide that members of the British House of Commons be paid £500 each as a sessional indemnity. He evidently places their value on a par with the members of the Canadian Commons.

Mr. Fowke, M.P., says that it is a characteristic of Toryism that they are always satisfied with things as they are. Not much. Conservatives and many Liberals are dissatisfied with things at Ottawa.

On Trial for Murder.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 29.—A girl just past her seventeenth year, Hattie Le Blanc, will be tried in the Middlesex County Superior Criminal Court here this week for the murder at Waltham, Nov. 20, 1909, of her employer, Clarence F. Glover. The little French-Canadian girl is the youngest of her sex ever tried for first degree murder in the annals of New England courts. Her aged father has come from his home in West Arichat, Cape Breton, to aid his daughter.

LADIES' APRON.

All Seams Allowed.

Aprons are an absolute necessity and one can hardly have too many of them. Of course variety of design is essential because of the various occasions on which they are worn. The one shown at this time is very convenient when just a little work is to be done. The apron and bib portion are joined together by a belt. A pocket at each side is useful as well as a finish. This apron may be made of calico, gingham or white lawn, and the edges may be bound with braid which comes in all colors. The pattern (5160) is cut in one size. To make the garment will require 2⅝ yards of material 27 inches wide, or 2 yards 36 inches wide.

LADIES' SKIRT.

All Seams Allowed.

The popular seven-gored skirt is here revealed to us in a new light. The gores are arranged to form box-plaits and these are sewed to a yoke which is gored in front and back and has dart-fitted side sections. The front of the yoke seems to form a panel with the front of the skirt; the back yoke is seamless in the center, while the plaits below meet at the center, thus giving the effect of an inverted box-plait at the lower part. This skirt is uncommonly stylish and will make a handsome portion of a tailor-made suit. It can be made of Panama, serge, cheviot or broadcloth. The pattern (5162) is cut in sizes 22 to 32 inches waist. To make the skirt in the medium size will require 4 yards of material 44 inches wide. The lower edge of this skirt measures 3⅞ yards.

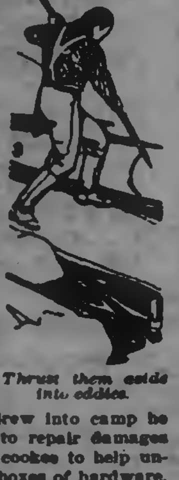
‚‚ you mean your logs are going down with ours, why, I guess you have. But you paste this in your hat—you're going to keep awful busy, and it's going to cost you something to get 'em down."



Thrust them aside into eddies.

Orde's drivers kept a sharp lookout for "H" logs and wherever possible thrust them aside into eddies and backwaters. This, of course, merely made work for the sackers Heinzman had left above the rear. Soon they were in charge of a very fair little drive of their own. Their lot was not enviable.

One day when Orde's buckboard drew into camp he sent Rourke away to repair damages while he called the cookee to help unpack several heavy boxes of hardware. They proved to contain about thirty small hatchets, well sharpened and each with a leather guard. When the rear crew had come in that night Orde distributed the hatchets.

"Boys," said he, "while you're on the work I want you all to keep a watch out for these 'H' logs, and whenever you strike one I want you to blaze it plainly so there won't be any mistake about it."

"What for?" asked a Saginaw man.

A riverman nudged him.

Three days later the rear crew ran into the head of the pond above Reed's dam. To every one's surprise, Orde called a halt on the work and announced a holiday.

Now, holidays are unknown on drive. Barely is time allowed for eating and sleeping. Nevertheless all that day the men lay about in complete idleness. The pond filled with logs. From above the current, aided by a fair wind, was driving down still other logs—the forerunners of the little drive astern. At sight of these some of the men grumbled. "We're losin' what we made," said they. "We left them logs and sorted 'em out once already."

Orde sent a couple of axmen to blaze the newcomers. A little before sundown he ordered the sluice gates of the dam opened.

"Night work," said the men to one another.

Sure enough, after supper Orde suddenly appeared among them.

"Get organized, boys," said he briskly. "We've got to get this pond all sluiced before morning."

The men took their places.

"Sluice through everything but the 'H' logs," Orde commanded. "Work them off to the left and leave them."

The sluicing, under the impetus of a big crew, went rapidly. "There's near a million an hour going through there," speculated Orde, watching the burdened waters of the chute. And in this work the men distinguished easily the new white blaze marks on Heinzman's logs, so they were able to shunt them one side into the smoother water, as Orde had commanded.

As the last log shot through Orde cried, "Tear out the booms!"

The chute to the dam was approached, as has been earlier explained, by two rows of booms arranged in a V, or funnel, the apex of which emptied into the sluiceway and the wide, projecting arms of which embraced the width of the stream. The logs, floating down the pond, were thus concentrated toward the sluice; also the rivermen, walking back and forth the length of the booms, were able easily to keep the drive moving.

Now, however, Orde unchained these boom logs. The men pushed them ashore, clamped in their peavies and, using these implements as handles, carried the booms back into the woods. Then everybody tramped back and forth, round and about, to confuse the trail. Orde was like a mischievous boy at a school prank.

The blazed logs belonging to Heinzman, drifting slowly, had sucked down into the corner toward the power canal, where, caught against the grating, they had jammed. These logs would have to be floated singly and pushed one by one against the current across the pond and into the influence of the sluice gate. Some of them would be hard to come at.

"I guess that will keep them busy for a day or two," commented Orde.

This, as Orde has said, would be sufficiently annoying to Heinzman, but would have little real effect on the main issue, which was that the German was getting down his logs with a crew of less than a dozen men. Nevertheless Orde in a vast spirit of fun took delight in inventing and executing practical jokes of the general sort just described. One day the chore boy, who had been over to Spruce Rapids after mail, reported that an additional crew of twenty had been sent in to Heinzman's drive. This was gratifying.

"We're making him scratch gravel, boys, anyway," said Orde.

The men entered into the spirit of the thing. In fact, their enthusiasm was almost too exuberant. Orde had constantly to negative new and ingenious schemes.

"No, boys," said he, "I want to keep on the right side of the law. We may need it later."

Logs rarely jam on rising water, for the simple reason that constantly the surface area of the river is increasing, thus tending to separate the logs. On the other hand, falling water, tending to crowd the drive closer together, is especially prolific of trouble. Therefore, on flood water the watchers scattered along the stretches of the river had little to do—save strand Heinzman's logs for him.

Up to a certain point this was all very well. Orde took pains not to countenance it officially and caused word to be passed about that, while he did not expect his men to help drive Heinzman's logs, they must not go out of their way to strand them.

"If things get too bad, he'll have spies down here to collect evidence on us," said Orde, "and he'll jug some of us for interference with his property. We don't own the river."

Inside of two weeks Orde had the great satisfaction of learning that Heinzman was working—and working hard—a crew of fifty men.

"A pretty fair crew, even if he was taking out his whole drive," commented Orde.

The gods of luck seemed to be with the new enterprise. The water held out to carry the last stick of timber over the shallowest rapids. Weather conditions were phenomenal—and perfect. All up and down the river the work went with vim and dash.

After this happy fashion the drive went until at last it entered the broad, deep and navigable stretches of the river from Redding to the lake. Here, barring the accident of an extraordinary flood, the troubles were over. On the broad, placid bosom of the stream the logs would float. As Orde sat in his buckboard, ready to go into town for a first glimpse of Carroll in more than two months, he gazed with an immense satisfaction over the broad river moving brown and glacierlike, as though the logs that covered it were viscid and composed all its substance. The enterprise was practically assured of success.

For awhile now Orde was to have a breathing spell. A large number of men were here laid off. The remainder, under the direction of Jim Denning, would require little or no actual supervision. Until the jam should have reached the distributing booms above Monrovia the affair was very simple. Before he left, however, he called Denning to him.

"Jim," said he, "I'll be down to see you through the sluiceways at Redding, of course. But now that you have a good, still stretch of river I want you to include in our drive all the Heinzman logs from above you possibly can. If you can fix it, let their drive drift down into ours."

"Then we'll have to drive their logs for them," objected Denning.

"Sure," rejoined Orde, "but it's easy driving, and if that crew of his hasn't much to do perhaps he'll lay most of them off here at Redding."

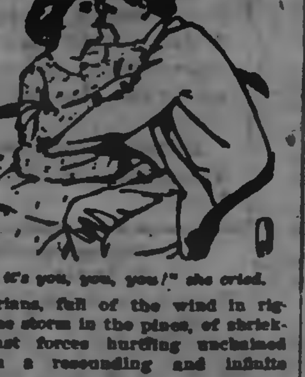
Denning looked at his principal for a moment, then a slow grin overspread his face. Without comment he turned back to camp, and Orde took up his reins.

• • • • • • • •

"Oh, I'm so glad to get you back!" cried Carroll over and over again as she clung to him. "I don't live while you're away. And every drop of rain that patters on the roof chills my heart, because I think of it as chilling you. Dear heart, don't leave me again."

She shook her head at him slowly, a mysterious smile on her lips. Without explaining her thought she slipped from his knee and glided across to the tall golden harp, which had been brought from Monrovia. The light and diaphanous silk of her loose peignoir floated about her, defining the maturing grace of her figure. Abruptly she struck a great crashing chord.

Then, with an abandon of ecstasy, she plunged into one of those wild and sea blown, saga-like rhapsodies of the Hungarians, full of the wind in rigging, the storm in the pines, of shrieking, vast forces hurtling unchained through a resounding and infinite space.



"Oh, it's you, you, you!" she cried.

"What is that?" gasped Orde.

She ran to him.

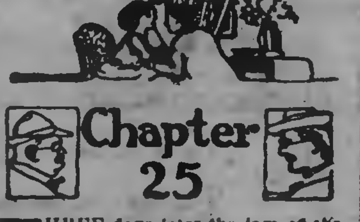
"Oh, it's you, you, you!" she cried.

He held her closely. "Do you think it is good to get quite so nervous, sweetheart?" he asked gently, then. "Remember"—

"Oh, I do! I do!" she broke in earnestly. "Every moment of my waking and sleeping hours I remember him. Always I keep his little soul before me as a light on a shrine. But tonight—oh, tonight, I could laugh and shout aloud like the people in the Bible, with clapping of hands!" She snuggled herself close to Orde with a little murmur of happiness. "I think of all the beautiful things," she whispered, "and of the noble things and of the great things. He is going to be sturdy, like his father—a wonderful boy, a boy all of fire"—

"Like his mother," said Orde.

She smiled up at him. "I want him just like you, dear," she pleaded.



Chapter 25

THREE days later the jam of the drive reached the dam at Redding. After the rear had dropped down river from Redding Carroll and Orde returned to their deserted little box of a house at Monrovia.

Orde breathed deep of a new satisfaction in walking again the streets of this little sandy, sawdust paved, shantyfied town, with its yellow hills and its wide blue river and its glimpse of the lake far in the offing.

"Hanged if I know what's struck me," he mused. "Never experienced any remarkable joy before in getting back to this sort of truck."

Then, with a warm glow at the heart, the realization was brought to him. This was home, and over yonder under the shadow of the heaven pointing spire a slip of a girl was waiting for him.

The rest of the week Orde was absent up the river, superintending in a general way the latter progress of the drive.

At the booms everything was in readiness to receive the jam. The long swim arm slanting across the river channel was attached to its winch, which would operate it. When shut it would close the main channel and shunt into the booms the logs floating in the river. There, penned at last by the piles driven in a row and held together at the top by bolted timbers, they would lie quiet. Men armed with pike poles would then take up the work of distribution according to the brands stamped on the ends. Each brand had its own separate "sorting pens," the lower end leading again into the open river. From these each owner's property was rafted and towed to his private booms at his mill below.

Orde spent the day before the jam appeared in constructing what he called a "boomerang."

"Secret invention just yet," he explained to Newmark. "I'm going to hold up the drive in the main river until we have things bunched; then I'm going to throw a big crew down here by the swing. Heinzman anticipates, of course, that I'll run the entire drive into the booms and do all my sorting there. Naturally if I turn his logs loose into the river as fast as I run across them he will be able to pick them up one at a time, for he'll only get them occasionally. If I keep them until everything else is sorted only Heinzman's logs will remain, and as we have no right to hold logs we'll have to turn them loose through the lower sorting booms, where he can be ready to raft them. In that way he gets them all right without paying us a cent. See?"

"Yes, I see," said Newmark.

"Well," said Orde, with a laugh, "here is where I fool him. I'm going to rush the drive into the booms all at once, but I'm going to sort out Heinzman's logs at these openings near the entrance and turn them into the main channel."

"What good will that do?" asked Newmark skeptically. "He gets them sorted just the same, doesn't he?"

"The current's fairly strong," Orde pointed out, "and the river's almighty wide. When you spring seven or eight million feet on a man all at once and unexpected and he with no crew to handle them, he's going to keep mighty busy. And if he don't stop them this side his mill he'll have to raft and tow them back, and if he doesn't stop 'em this side the lake he may as well kiss them all goodby."

The boomerang worked like a charm. Orde, in personal charge, watched that through the different openings in his boomerang the "H" logs were shunted into the river. Shortly the channel was full of logs floating merrily away.

"I've got to go down and see how the Dutchman is making it," announced Orde.

He drove to Heinzman's mill. There he found evidences of the wildest excitement. Boats plied in all directions. A tug darted back and forth. Constantly the number of floating logs augmented, however. Many had already gone by.

"If you think you're busy now," said Orde to himself, with a chuckle, "just wait until you begin to get logs. What's he doing with that tug?" thought he. "Oh, ho! He's stringing booms across the river to hold the whole outfit."

He laughed aloud and drove frantically back to the booms.

"He's shut down his mill," shouted Orde, "and he's got all that gang of highbankers out and every old rum blossom in Monrovia, and I bet if you say 'logs' to him he'd chase his tail in circles. I'm going to take Marsh and the Sprite and go to town. Old Heinzman," he added as an afterthought, "is stringing booms across the river—obstructing navigation."

"Marsh," he called, "got up steam?"

There appeared a short, square man, eyes blue as the sky.

"Up in two minutes," he answered.

"Harvey, fire her up!"

Captain Marsh guided his energetic charge among the logs floating in the stream with the marvelous second instinct of the expert tugboat man. Orde noted with satisfaction that many of the logs had found lodgment among the reeds and in the bayous and inlets. One at a time, and painfully, these would have to be salvaged.

Shortly Orde, standing by the wheel in the pilothouse, could see down the stretches of the river a crowd of men working, antlike.

"What do you want me to do?" asked Captain Marsh.

OBSERVATIONS on the EYE

Many animals can see with each eye separately, but man cannot do so. The horse, for instance, can see on both sides of him, and when we stand in front of him he can see us with only one eye at a time, because both his eyes cannot act together. The ancient Greek spoke of the eyes as the windows of the soul. They might have gone further and said of the body also. By glancing at a person's eye we can estimate his character pretty well and an observing physician can often tell by the eye the exact nature of a person's sickness.

"Look After Your Eyes"

When the eyes are affected, the whole general health is affected as well. We make no charge for examination. If your eyesight is perfect we will be pleased to tell you so. If, however, there is any defect which needs correcting, we guarantee to fit you with glasses that will surely correct it.

IMIGRANTS WERE PROMPTLY PLACED

That the Review is well read is shown by the fact that a few days ago Mr. White, of Indian River, noticed an article stating that Mr. Howson, emigration agent here, was expecting a young man from the old land on Wednesday. When the young fellow arrived Mr. White was at the emigration office waiting for him, and as a result he has now a good position.

Two bonnie Scotch girls and another young fellow also arrived this morning. They were all placed within ten minutes. The girls are domestics and have now good employment.

Mr. Howson stated that he quite often receives clippings of articles from outside places, relating to local emigration news.

ACTION FOR $500 AGAINST THE CITY

Accident on Concession Street, Plaintiff Alleges Was Due to Negligence of City—An Interesting Case

The action brought against the City of Peterborough by Mr. G. W. Hatton, who claims $500.00, with costs, was proceeded with before His Honor Judge Huycke this morning.

Mr. D. O'Connell is acting for the plaintiff and Mr. L. M. Hayes, K.C., for the defendant.

Plaintiff claims the above amount as damages, alleging negligence on the part of the city of Peterborough, which resulted in an accident to him while driving a horse attached to a phaeton, on Concession street, near Nicholls Oval, on the afternoon of October 31st, 1909, the horse frightening at obstructions and obstacles on the road, and running away.

The phaeton and harness were damaged, the plaintiff injured and the value of the horse depreciated, it becoming nervous and unsafe to drive.

At the time the city was constructing a granolithic sidewalk and the machinery and tools being used were nearby.

Mr. G. W. Hatton gave his residence as in North Monaghan and testified as to his knowledge of horses, which has been acquired, commencing at an early age. The animal mentioned as having been in the accident was named "Sapho," and its mate "Sybil." Sapho was of a quiet and kind disposition and easily handled. Witness intended to use the animal as a family driver. On the day of the accident witness and Mrs. Hatton were driving north on concession street. The small street bridge was then closed, thus diverting traffic to Concession streets for some months. The hour was about three in the afternoon. A water cart on the east side of the road was passed safely, and the witness noticed the condition of the street. It was known as a dangerous street. There were culverts that should be railed. One was at Dufferin street, another at Woodbine avenue and the third 40 feet north of the second one at Woodbine Avenue. A fourth culvert was at Nicholls Park. The roadbed along the line of culverts was, in witness's opinion, 17 or 18 feet in width. Ditches of various depths were on all sides of the road.

Having passed the water cart, "Sapho" stopped and then the condition of the road was noticed by witness. Mrs. Hatton left the rig. Witness got out, too, soothed the animal and endeavored to lead her. This move had been successful on another occasion. Witness held the animal till the cement bags on the east side of the road were reached. There were from 12 to 15 bags of cement, piled one on top of the other, probably three feet high, and ten or twelve feet in length. They were covered with canvas. "Was that a proper place for them to be?"

"Most improper for the reason that it was liable to frighten horses and cause accidents."

The animal shied to the west side of the road. Then she saw the cement mixer on the west side and feet north of the cement bags. Becoming more alarmed she swerved to the east side. Next she ran the vehicle on to heaps of gravel and sand. The front wheel struck the gravel heap first, then the hind wheel.

Next the sand heap was struck. The mare became terrified, and when another heap of sand was reached the animal bolted. Witness held on until the animal stepped on his foot and he was struck by the wheels. The vehicle and harness were damaged, and witness was injured about the shoulder and arms. He went into a house and when a conveyance came from Gibbs' to take him home, the driver coming by way of the obstacles on the road, had to whip the animals.

"When you recovered did you use this horse?"

"Yes. She was always nervous and ran away again."

After that, while witness used the animal he did not permit of the family doing so.

On another occasion the animal attempted to run away. She kicked the dashboard of a sleigh to pieces. She was unharnessed and taken home.

Deciding to get rid of her, witness hired Jacob Brown, a horseman, to break the animal in again. He started the work in January, and a sale was effected in April. Its mate was also sold.

Witness thought the team worth $400 market value, and he would not have taken less than $500 before the accident. "Sapho" should have been worth $250. The phaeton, he thought, cost him $129. Repairs would cost $15 or $16. Now it was not worth $50. The harness, when new, cost him $25. The depreciation in value, as a result of the accident, was about $20.

The injuries received by witness necessitated medical attention, and caused him considerable inconvenience, he being confined to his home for some time.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

Witness was cross-examined by Mr. L. M. Hayes, K.C., to some length, and principally in regard to statements made at the examination of the plaintiff for discovery.

"As a skilled driver, it was possible for you to turn?" asked the defending counsel.

"It might have been."

"You didn't try to?"

"No."

"The only things you came in contact with were the gravel and sand heaps?"

"Yes."

Witness had not had a previous accident while driving the mare, 'Sapho'.

The main cause of the accident, witness stated, was the heaps of gravel and sand in connection with the general condition of the road. The covering on the sidewalk under construction was held down by sticks and slabs.

To Mr. O'Connell witness opined that other material or means should be used in holding the covering on the sidewalks.

Adjournment was made at one o'clock.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir.—Is it necessary for Rev. Father McColl to make use of the Indian women of our Dominion as his weapon of offence and defence against Mr Burnham?

I can assure you that his twice repeated attack on their virtue is offensive to many of the women of Peterborough. The single passage from Parkman, quoted by him, is wholly disproven by other writers, whose veracity is unquestioned.

A WOMAN.

Peterborough, Nov. 30.

Peterborough, Nov. 29, 1910.
To the Editor of the Review.

Sir.—Last evening I stepped into St. Luke's church, East City, to hear the Rev. J. Bennet Anderson preach. I want to say that the Anglican church has a man of rare abilities in the person of said preacher. He may well and truly be called the modern Luther. He throws his whole heart and soul into his sermon, and speaks with a veritable tongue of fire. He preaches in the power and demonstration of the spirit the doctrine of justification by faith alone, but not by the faith that is alone. It would be well for those who have been led astray by the pernicious teachings of the so-called higher critics and Russillism to go and hear this fearless man, who believes in an unmutilated Bible, a real perdition for ungodly men, a real Devil, whose business it is to decoy men, and a real Heaven for penitent and regenerated sinners. If you can go and hear him it will do you good.

Yours,
ONE WHO WAS GLAD TO HEAR HIM.

To The Editor of The Review.

I notice by your paper that the 57th Band is to give a concert in the City Market Hall. I thought the Market Hall was rented for market purposes and not for concerts. Then the Chief of Police should see that he pays the license of $40.00 at once, and before the concert, the same as other places of amusement have to pay. I hope that prompt action will be taken in this case.

Thanking you Mr. Editor for your valuable space.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT ST. LUKE'S

The evangelistic service last evening was very impressive and attended by an attentive congregation. It is perhaps the best and most spiritually real service ever held. Mr. Anderson, the missoner, in his earnest and sincere way, preached on "The Woman of Samaria." He laid great stress upon the providential arrangement that the Saviour of the World should go to the well in order to meet with and bring salvation to that unfortunate and fallen woman. He also dwelt upon the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ as an absolute fact to be accepted, and he said that he staked his soul's salvation on the truth of it. The Bible, the true, inspired and infallible Word of God, as the rule of faith was another subject mentioned in his earnest appeal. Above all there was the great love of the Saviour for sinners, the worst of sinners, which made up the great theme of his address.

To-night the people are asked to be punctual in attending at 7.30, as a song service will then begin. Mr. Anderson will sing some of his songs that have brought many souls to Christ in the past.

THE DEBATERS WON'T DEBATE

The debate between the Y.M.C.A. debaters and the Park street Baptist church has been called off. The debate was to have taken place last night, but owing to the fact that there was some misunderstanding about the question for debate the Park street debaters refused to wrangle. The question which the Y.M.C.A. men accepted in the first place was "That Canada Should Have a Navy." Feeling that the question was not quite definite enough to make an interesting discussion the Y.M.C.A. men asked that it be changed to read: "That Canada should have a navy supported by the Canadian Government rather than contribute to the navy of the Mother Country." The Baptist debaters never accepted this as the subject and so the debate had to be called off. It is hoped that, as the Association men are ready with the affirmative, it will be possible for them to meet with some other wranglers who would like to argue the question with them. In other words, they are going around with a chip on their shoulder looking for some debating society with heroism enough to knock it off.

The Mechanical Drawing Class will meet as usual to-night.

THE BURNING OF THE MORTGAGE

Montreal Witness.

The gathering in connection with the Wellington St. Baptist church anniversary next Tuesday night is planned to be one of the biggest events in connection with the congregation. Started a dozen years ago as a mission in the old hall at the corner of Montmorency and Grand Trunk streets, the small congregation ten years ago ventured out on their present place of worship at a cost of $17,600, and it is much to the credit of that small band that it was only necessary to carry a "note" of $7,000. This balance has been wiped out gradually, and on Tuesday night the "paper" will formally be consigned to the flames, conjointly by Mrs. J. R. Webb, wife of the late pastor, and Mr. H. A. Hodson, one of the active members.

Rev. J. R. Webb of Peterborough is in the city and will preach morning and evening to-morrow, Sunday, Nov. 27th.

LADY EDUCATIONALIST FROM JAPAN TELLS OF THEIR NEEDS

Tokio a City of Education and Also of Moral Danger—Many Temptations for the Young—Is Soliciting Funds for New Home for Girls

To an audience of about one hundred and fifty people Miss Mechikawai, a noted Japanese lady educationalist, lectured last evening in the gymnasium of the Y.W.C.A. Her address was thoroughly enjoyed and she was attired in Japanese costume, which made the occasion more unique and interesting.

The lecture was mainly along the line of mission labors in Japan and of the efforts being put forth to evangelize the Japanese. The lecturer was a resident of Tokio and is a graduate of the Tokio University, also of Bryn Mawr College, Penn., and speaks the English language with a very pleasing Japanese accent. In Tokio she was engaged in school work and her lectures in this country are for the purpose of creating interest in Japan mission work and to raise funds sufficient to build another boarding school for girls in Tokio.

Miss Mechikawai first spoke on the area of Japan, which is only one-twentieth the size of Canada and placed beside Canada would appear almost insignificant in area. She then spoke of Tokio with its enormous population of 200,000, its people and colleges and missionary work. It is the mecca for the young people of Japan, ninety-four percent of whom eventually migrate there. The children there if showing signs of strong intellectual ability are given all the advantages of education accessible and a great deal of time is spent on them. But intellectual care is not the main advantage required by them, it is the refining culture which comes with a knowledge of Jesus Christ. Their moral natures need enlightenment, as the temptations there morally are strong, especially amongst the girls. Nearly 15,000 girls there are employed in mill factories and conditions and surroundings are such that great care and strong restraining influences are demanded, and it is for this reason that the lecturer solicited the aid of generous people to subscribe for the erection of a boarding-house in Tokio for their care and comfort. Only four thousand dollars is required and this amount should be easily raised in Canada. The Canadian Associations are those being solicited in the movement.

The Emperor and Empress of Japan no longer hold themselves aloof from the common people and it is now as ordinary and no unheard of thing as formerly considered to see the Royal couple engaged in visiting their subjects in Tokio, visiting public benevolent societies and in various ways mingling with the residents of the city.

The Japanese consider their country the most beautiful in the world and their calendar months are named after Japanese flowers. The crysanthemum is still the unrivalled production of that country.

Tokio is a large university centre and great interest is manifested in education there. Notwithstanding all their education, however, they have many sorrows and it is here that the burden-lifting power of the gospel of love is required.

Many other interesting things in connection with her work were told by Miss Mechikawai in her entertaining and instructive way and her address was greatly appreciated.

A nicely worded vote of thanks was moved the speaker at its conclusion by Miss A. Weir.

Miss R. Dawson gave a solo entitled "His Eye is on the Sparrow."

Mrs. Rogers presided very acceptably while Rev. H. J. Keith led in the devotional exercises.

At 6.30 a very enjoyable supper was served in the board room of the Y. W. C. A. at which Miss Mechikawai was the guest of honor. The supper was given by the members of the Board.

SNOW PLOUGH TENDERS WERE LET

Ald. Duffus Fathers Motion to Allow Illumated Signs 6½ Feet Extension—The Untimely Complaint Against Street Oiling Came Up In Routine Business

The contracts for snowploughing were awarded as follows at the meeting of the Board of Works last night:—

District.	Name	Remuneration
2	E. Flaherty	$197
3	Wm. Tranby	[illegible]
4	George Innes	118
5	Robert Nicholls	155
6	M. Richeau	127
7	Alex. O'Brien	100
8	R. Revoy	90

Mr. E. Conroy offered the board $100 for the portable engine of the old stone crusher. The board decided that $125 was a reasonable price, but Mr. Conroy didn't—hence no sale.

ILLUMINATED SIGNS.

The chairman read the engineer's report that there were 51 illuminated signs in the city. Five were only lanterns, five only had paid their license and five didn't comply with the by-law.

On motion of Ald. Duffus and Duncan the by-law was amended to permit the signs to extend 6 1-2 feet instead of 4 feet as heretofore.

The city engineer reported that there was a balance of $1,376.88 due Messrs. Conroy Bros., contractors for the Smith street bridge, and said the contract had been performed in a satisfactory way.

On motion of Ald. Graham and Duncan the recommendation was adopted.

The street commissioner reported that the holes on Concession street had been filled in.

THE WINTER TREATMENT.

A letter from O'Connell and Gordon which had been referred back from the Council, and in which that firm acting on behalf of Messrs. Coleman Bros., Hooper and Potvin, confectioners, wanted to know what was going to be done about the oil on the streets, which tainted the bakery wares.

"Tell them we're going to put snow on the streets," said Ald. Graham.

F. Bartlett, C.E., was granted $64 for his work in connection with the south end sewage system.

QUEEN'S ALMA MATER ELECTS OFFICERS

The chief centre of interest in the College halls this week is the Alma Mater elections which are to be held on Saturday, December 3rd. Nominations for the various positions were made at the Alma Mater meeting last Saturday. Only two positions went by acclamation, those of Honorary President which went to Prof. Nichol, and Treasurer to which Hugh Young was elected. For the Presidency, Mr. A. P. Menzies, M. A., is opposing Mr. E. L. Bruce, B. Sc. A close contest is expected as both men are well known and have taken prominent parts in all phases of college life. An interesting feature of the election is the candidacy of the Mackinnon brothers for the secretaryship, John is representing Arts and Hugh representing Medicine. It is a noteworthy fact that most of the candidates are prominent in some branch of athletics. The usual electioneering methods are being practiced, party workers are making thorough canvasses of the students, while gaily colored banners and electric signs give free advice on how to vote.

The annual election of officers for the Queen's Western Association took place last week and resulted as follows: Honorary President—Dean Connell; President—H. C. Wallace, Lumsden Sask.; Vice-President—M. M. Colquhoun, Deloraine, Man.; Treasurer—E. A. Thompson, Brandon Man.; Secretary—J. P. McLeod, Lockwood, Sask.; Committee—Manitoba, H. McIntosh; Saskatchewan, Duncan Brown, Regina; Alberta—L. S. Fraser, Edmonton; British Columbia, J. E. Lane, New Westminster.

Among the recent donations to the University, two scholarships are worth, of particular mention. Mr. W. M. O. Lochead, M. A., district manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Berlin, Ont., and a graduate of Queen's has given a scholarship in Political Economy of the annual value of $50.

Mr. N. Gordon School Inspector of Dufferin County, has donated a scholarship of $50, to the candidate standing highest in the Matriculation examination in the County of Dufferin. Queen's has at present many students from Dufferin while among her alumni are several from that county who have given a good account of themselves.

Some interesting addresses have been given in the University in the last week. On Sunday morning Miss Kawai of Japan addressed the students. Miss Kawai is a graduate of Bryn Mawr, having been sent to America to study, by the Japanese Government. She has a pleasing voice and speaks English accurately and fluently. The Sunday afternoon service was addressed by Rev. Daniel Strachan, of Toronto. Rev. Mr. Strachan is a graduate of Queen's and President of the Alumni Conference. He was heartily welcomed back to his Alma Mater.

A most interesting and instructive lecture was given by Dean Cappon to the Philosophical Society on Monday. The subject was the Philosophy of Wordsworth and it was ably dealt with by Prof. Cappon.

Arrangements have been completed between the Arts Societies of McGill and Queen's by which Professors will be sent by these societies to their sister societies to give lectures. Dr. Dyde of Queen's will lecture at McGill on Wednesday night under this arrangements. It is pleasing to note the cordial spirit existing between these two institutions and much is hoped from this exchange of courtesy and of ideas.

AWARDED DAMAGES

A few weeks ago Mr. John Downey, of Lindsay, issued a writ against the Victoria Harbor Elevator Co. for unstated damages for the death of his son Frank, while employed there about three months ago.

The date for the trial was set for December 6th to be heard before the County Judge of Peterborough, in this city.

Yesterday afternoon a settlement was reached between the two parties, with the result that Mr. Downey was awarded $715 damages.

Lindsay, Nov. 30.—Word has been received in town that D. B. Thomas was seen in Winnipeg yesterday. THE BELMONT MINSTRELS

Are Shaping up to Great Advantage in Rehearsal

The big show is coming along fine in rehearsals, and all the boys are working night and day to make it the best ever and best of all. Mostly every one taking part will be seen for the first time in the Belmont minstrels upon the local stage, and without a question of a doubt will be a big surprise to their many friends.

The show will be replete with up-to-date songs, dancing and, strange to say, new jokes. The stage settings and costumes are pretty, in fact in the Belmont minstrels you will be entertained just as you would be by any first-class musical production on the road and all the performers will be our own city boys. Let a stranger look at the big show and it will keep him guessing whether he is looking at a local or professional attraction.

"HEADACHE, WEAKNESS, HEART TROUBLE"

"I Suffered With for Years—Pe-ru-na Cured Me Entirely."

Miss Albina Chauvin, No. 50 Rue Agnes, St. Henri, Montreal, Can., writes:

"I consider Peruna better than any other remedy, as it cured me when nothing else could. I suffered for years and years with heart trouble, headache and weakness. I never expected to find anything to cure me. I saw one day, in "La Presse," that Peruna was excellent and I tried it. One bottle produced a change in me and if the price had been $100 a bottle I would have paid it gladly. I have taken six bottles and am entirely cured. Please accept my thanks and best wishes for your Peruna."

ALBINA CHAUVIN

"Please Accept My Thanks and Best Wishes For Your PE-RU-NA."

Many cases of heart trouble are caused by reflex disturbances.

Catarrh of the stomach is a very frequent cause of sympathetic heart disease.

Palpitation, shortness of breath and bloating after meals are the most prominent symptoms.

Such a condition of the stomach is also liable to produce headaches of the worst sort.

It is the effect which Peruna has upon the stomach, healing the mucous membranes and restoring the natural function of the stomach, that causes Peruna to bring such prompt relief.

HACK.—ROLLER WRESTLING BOUT

Montreal Gazette.

Dr. B. F. Roller, of Seattle, Gotch's principal rival among the American heavyweight wrestlers, put up a smashing good bout against George Hackenschmidt, the European champion, at Sohmer Park, last night, but weight and experience told when it came to the test and the Russian Lion won in two straight falls, 47 minutes for the first, and 19 minutes for the second.

Strange enough the attendance was not as large as when Hackenschmidt met Derias here ten days ago, although the match bore out the general expectation that it would outclass the go between the Russian and the unknown Swiss. On all around work it was about the best heavyweight bout that has ever been staged in Montreal. There was not only a lot of clever inside wrestling, but there was enough of the spectacular side of the game to interest the spectators at every stage, whether they were wrestling experts or not. Although the gathering was smaller than when Hack met Derias, it was still a big crowd, about 4,000, the only part of the big hall that was not filled being the back portion of the ground floor. The stage and the balconies were both crowded, the former to every available spot from the back to the ropes.

Hackenschmidt won the first fall by a wearing down process. Roller began to slow up after thirty minutes had been passed, but he held on gamely to the finish. He was put through a terrible gruelling by the Russian, fair work, but hard, and although on the defensive most of the time, showed speed and skill in turning the attack against his opponent from time to time. On the offensive his work was not effective against the strength of the Russian, but he tried hard and the crowd warmly applauded his aggressiveness.

Roller was caught in one of the chance holds that fall to the good or bad fortune of every wrestler some time or other at the finish of the second bout. He was himself attacking, and working over the Russian on the mat, when Hack suddenly reached back secured a good wrist hold and pulled Roller over his shoulders. Still keeping the wrist hold as he brought his man over, Hack had Roller completely at his mercy. Roller did not have a chance to bridge with his arm pinned down and Hack's weight full across his chest, and the match came to an unexpectedly quick finish in 19 minutes. The time was announced officially from the stage at 24 minutes, but this was an error. Roller therefore lasted 66 minutes with the big Russian.

Hackenschmidt was in better physical shape than when he went on with Derias. He is far from being down to his championship form, however. He is still on the flabby side, and showed signs of tiring after a half hour's work with the fast Seattle man. He had an advantage of from fifteen to twenty pounds over Roller in weight, and he used his longer reach a number of times to work in some punishing face-holds on his opponent. Roller appeared to be in the better condition of the two, but he also is in need of more work.

The wrestlers were nine minutes on their feet at the start of the first bout. The tugging and pulling was not tedious, however, as Hack from the start kept diving for Roller's legs, and there was a fine display of offence and defence tactics. Roller's quickness brought him away safe several times, and at other times when Hack did get to his legs he wriggled and squirmed free without going to the mat. When Roller finally went down he was held to the mat for only a minute. When he shook himself clear and got to his feet again Hackenschmidt went after him twice with reversed headlock. From one of these Roller broke free, but on the other Hackenschmidt brought him over his shoulder to the mat. The Seattle man bounded as he struck and was up on his feet again.

Fifteen minutes had passed before Roller succeeded in bringing the Russian to the mat. Then Hack missed one of his reversed headlocks, or Russian cravats, and Roller was into him like a flash and tossed him to the mat on a leg hold. Hack's tremendous strength made Roller's attacks futile. The Seattle man tried hard for toe holds, but the Russian broke them easily.

Twenty-five minutes from the start of the match Roller was brought around on a half-nelson and only splendid defence work pulled him out of the worst hole that he had been in up to this point. He rolled twice out of apparently sure holds with his left arm pinned down by one of the Russian's knees and the Russian working on the other shoulder with his full weight.

At forty minutes Roller, while under man on the mat, reached back and grabbed the Russian's head with his right arm. With his two hands locked, Roller held the Russian secure for two minutes, and at one time seemed to have a chance to force the Russian over. Hack was put through a hard gruelling before he finally got his head free.

The fall that came at the end of 47 minutes was a spectacular piece of work. Hackenschmidt worked it on the half-nelson that was main reliance throughout the bout. Roller bridged three times before he gave in. On the roll out of the second bridge he was caught practically helpless, and his shoulders sank back to the mat.

It was Roller who brought Hackenschmidt down first in the second bout, but he could not turn the advantage to much account. The Russian sprawled his length on the mat and Roller could not turn his tremendous shoulders. Hackenschmidt through this bout kept working for the half-nelson and roll that won him the first fall. Roller's clever defence work with his legs saved him a number of times from the roll that would have been fatal.

As told in the foregoing, Roller's downfall came unexpectedly. Hack reached back for his left wrist and by main force pulled Roller over flat to the mat. A few seconds were sufficient for Hack to press home the fall.

Derias and Zbysco will meet in a finish bout at the Park, December 7.

BOWLING

The first game in the bowling competition at the Y.M.C.A. was pulled off last night. The Lancashire Trio proved to be far too big a proposition for the Midgets. They managed to roll up a score of 1,062, and the best the Midgets could do was 974. There is keen interest in this competition, and it promises to be one of the best the Association has ever had. When it is over there will be some good bowlers developed who never before rolled a ball. On Thursday night the match will be between The Big Three and The Mivvies.

WHOLE TOWNS DESERTED.

Places Where All the People Take a Vacation at the Same Time.

Persons unacquainted with the north of England and Scotland are often surprised during their visits to those countries to find whole towns deserted. Here in Canada only a few of us take our annual vacation at the same time, so that business is still carried on, but over their various weeks or fortnights are set aside for rest, when business practically stops.

In Lancashire these holidays are known as wakes, and beginning from about the middle of June one town after another takes its holiday, until early September sees the end. Liverpool and Manchester are about the only towns of importance that do not follow the custom, as they are too large to shut down in this manner.

Every town has its holiday fund, which in each case amounts to many thousands, Oldham saving between $750,000 and $1,000,000 for its outing, while Blackburn operatives have more than once saved some $750,000 for the same purpose. At one time these thousands of workers on holiday seldom traveled farther afield than the Isle of Man, Blackpool or the Yorkshire coast, but now many of them go to Switzerland or France—on one occasion 700 men from Burnley paraded before the President in Paris—while great numbers visit all the English seaside towns.

Most of the Scottish towns take a week off in the same way. In July the visitor is often surprised at the crowded trains that pass him as he is journeying toward Edinburgh, and when he inquires why his train is an hour late he is told that traffic is very heavy as holiday week has begun. When Edinburgh's holiday is over Glasgow's turn comes, maybe, and so on until the season is over.

In the south of England there is one town that shuts down for a week. This is Swindon, the Wiltshire town that consists almost exclusively of Great Western Railway workers. Naturally when some take a holiday all must follow, so about the beginning of July some 25,000 people leave Swindon on one day, Weymouth and Weston-super-Mare usually being the favorite destination. About two dozen trains are required to carry away this holiday crowd.

King Edward's Card-Indexes.

Several persons of importance when first presented to King Edward expressed their amazement at the marvellous knowledge His Majesty possessed concerning their affairs, their achievements, and the members of their family. As people never obtained access to His Majesty without a previous appointment or invitation, the sovereign had plenty of time to order those under him to look up particulars of the "caller" and place the same before him. In this way the King became quite intimate with the affairs of the majority of the people who entered his palace.

It is not generally known that King Edward for many years ran a series of card-indexes, of the kind common in all large commercial houses. These were kept at Buckingham Palace, and when a person not attached to a royal family called upon the King, his name, together with a short account of what passed at the interview, particulars of his career and his achievements, and a short history of his family, were placed on a card and filed in the usual way. If the "caller" again visited the King, the card-index was consulted. In this way His Majesty was able to recall to mind who and what his visitor was, and prepare himself accordingly.

At several courts of Europe, including Britain, brief records of scandals affecting people are preserved, in order that the appearance at court of those compromised thereby may be avoided. The British royal records of unpleasant incidents are kept by the Lord Chamberlain's department.

People who invite the King and Queen to dinner must escort their royal guests into the dining-room first and see that they are placed in the centre of one side of the table, with the principal guests on both sides of them. It is considered etiquette for people to address the King as "Sir" and the Queen as "Madam."

Best Known Portrait.

In a discussion as to what is the most common and familiar portrait in the world, writes Arthur Loring Bruce, one man was sure Raphael's Sistine Madonna was the best known portrait in the world. Another was all for Leonardo's Mona Lisa. Still another contended that no likeness was so universally known as that of King Edward on the coins of Great Britain. The sphinx was mentioned and the Venus of Milo. The discussion was growing warmer when a mild and callow youth chirped up with:

"You are all wrong! All of you! The best known portrait in the world is the queen of spades."

He then proceeded to prove what, it seems, is common knowledge among the cognoscenti, namely, that the queen of spades is a bona fide likeness of the late Queen Anne of Britain. It seems that somewhere about 1710 the English and European stationers fixed on the image of the then Queen of England as a suitable one to inscribe on their playing cards. For 200 years or more her face has looked out at us, not altogether unpleasantly—particularly in bezique—from the depths of the pack. How much longer, we wonder, will her physiognomy be shuffled down the corridors of time?

A Carlyle Snub.

Carlyle had an inveterate hatred for Darwinism, which he described as the "gorilla damnification of humanity." Leonard Huxley in his life of his father recalls an incident that happened shortly before Carlyle's death. "My father," he writes, "saw him walking slowly and alone down the opposite side of the street and, touched by his solitary appearance, crossed over and spoke to him. The old man looked at him and merely remarking, 'You're Huxley, aren't you, the man that says we are all descended from the monkey?' and went on his way."

Fort William Board of Trade objects to the proposed amalgamation of that town and Port Arthur.

Man's Early Building.

The ruins of successive human habitations unearthed in Asia show how man advanced from primeval savagery to the pomp of Babylon and Nineveh. First he improved the caves in which he dwelt by leveling the floors and cutting windows to give him light. Afterward he constructed entirely artificial habitations for himself, at first roughly made tents of boughs and leaves, then huts of mud and finally dwellings of wood and stone.

Docking the Sheep.

Methods employed in cutting the tails from sheep in the division of animal husbandry at University farm, St. Paul, are best to place the lamb on its back, pushing the skin on the tail back toward the body as far as possible so that enough skin will remain to cover the stump of the bone when the tail is cut off. In operating on lambs several months old draw the skin back closely to the body and tie a ligature tightly around the stub of the tail until an hour or two afterward to prevent excessive bleeding. Place the lamb in a clean pen bedded with clean straw. Cleanliness prevents infection, and in such an inclosure bleeding can be detected. Rams should be castrated at time of docking, while in the hands of the operator, if proper physical development of the organs has been reached. This condition occurs about ten days after birth.

Keep the Horse's Skin Clean.

If the skin of the horse is kept clean he will sweat more freely, which is necessary to keep him in good condition.

NEW YORK WOMEN AND HOTELITIS

IN This City of the Homeless Home the Fascination of the Glittering Hotel Has Overcome Even the Most Staid, and at the Present Outlook Nothing Can Take Its Place

NEW YORK, Saturday.

TELL me where she eats and I will tell you who she is.

Eating is one of the most thoroughly approved pastimes of all within the gates of New York. With an ever increasing number it comes close to being an occupation.

Now that woman refuses to stay at home and cook meals for the men as in those good days of yore she "admires to eat hotel victuals," as an elderly transplanted New England woman phrased it. You behold her thus engaged in the gorgeous dining rooms of the famed hotels of the metropolis and in the obscure restaurants which boast foods of foreign flavor and atmosphere.

After all, it is atmosphere that woman is seeking. It is the lure that summons Eve's daughters from the familiar shelter of their homes to the more or less emblazoned caravansaries.

A man goes where he can get the best food or the most of it for his money. With a woman these are minor considerations. To be sure, she may "love" a certain kind of decorative salad or be "crazy about" a frozen sweet concoction to be found at one place or another, but it is less the gustatory pleasure that she craves than the joy of eating something bearing the hall mark of popularity in a place so crowded that the chances of her getting a table seem hopeless.

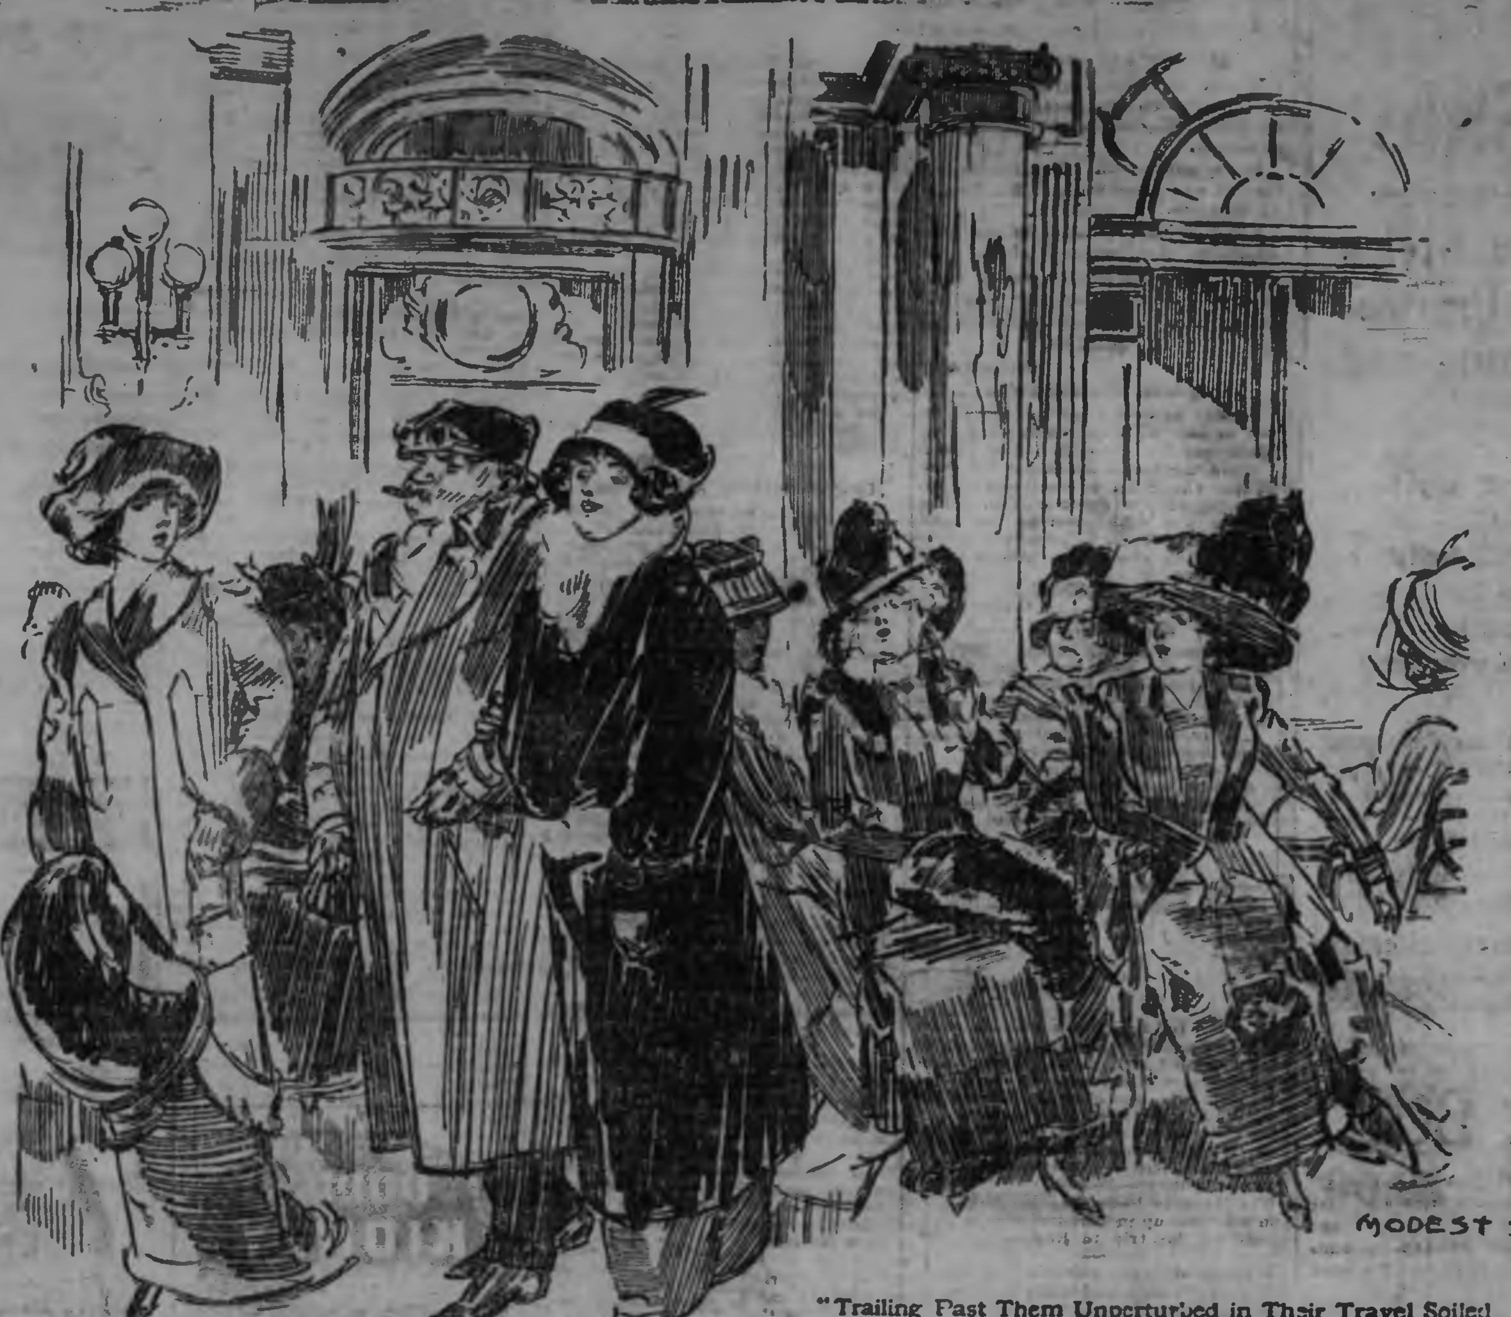
But, on the whole, the food is a trivial incident to the woman who frequents hotels. Her delight in them is a part of her emancipation. The flunkey who turns the heavy plate glass revolving doors admits her to a world until recently denied her, by the proprieties, at least. The warm air, heavy with the mingled odors of toilet perfumes and of viands, is pleasant to her nostrils. She is stimulated to accentuate her own attractions by contact with women for whom fashion has done its utmost.

The receding halls invite her to banquets, exhibitions, polite entertainment and the soulful exchange of ideas on politics, literature and dress. Name your dearest fad and the hotel will yield up something bearing upon it.

There are still a few women so hopelessly attached to the fading notion that it is a little vulgar for well bred members of their sex to mingle on terms of equality with strangers in public places that they strongly decry "hotelitis." But it's a hopeless protest, growing constantly weaker. What's the use? If women have adopted the hotel, that's all there is to it. Just as when they really want the ballot or anything else they will have it, man asserts.

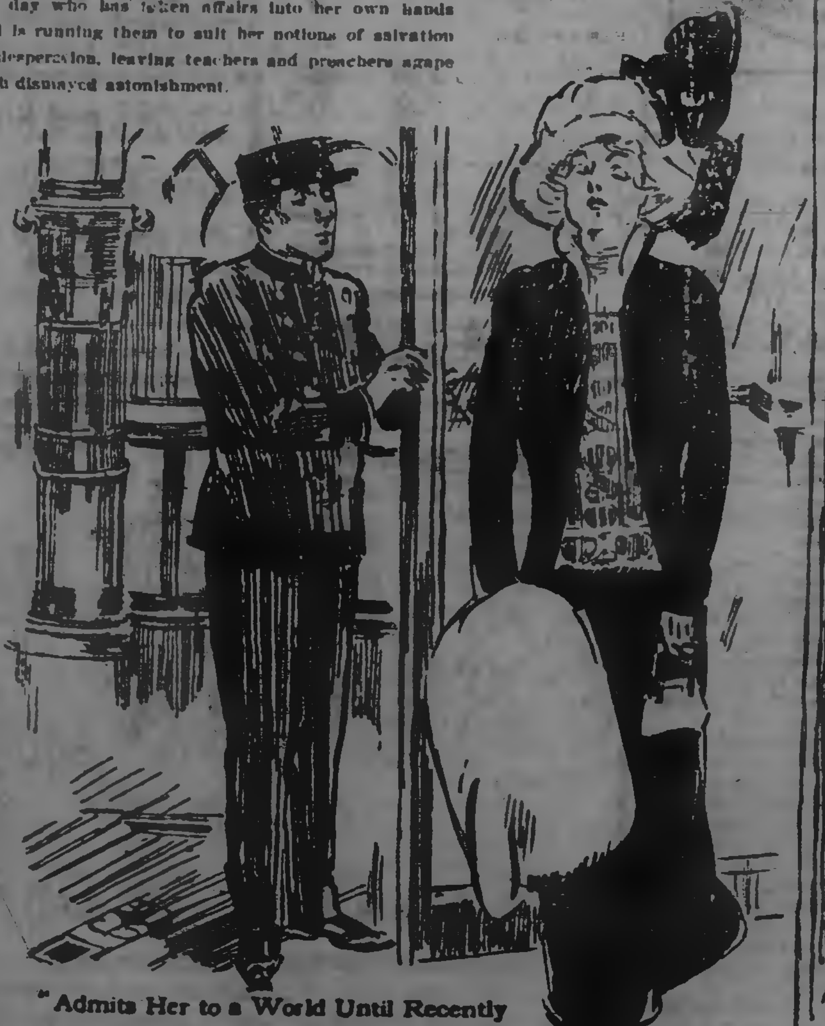
The Masterful One.

The hotel is one of the perquisites of the woman of the day who has taken affairs into her own hands and is running them to suit her notions of salvation or desperation, leaving teachers and preachers agape with dismayed astonishment.



MODEST STEIN.

"Trailing Past Them Unperturbed in Their Travel Soiled Garb Are Hungry Motoring Parties"



"Admits Her to a World Until Recently Denied to Her"

The hotel offers her one of the most appreciated instruments for breaking traditional bonds without losing caste or courting discredit. Its influences are as varied as they are numerous. Even the most timid and conservative of dames finds nothing objectionable in attending meetings in a private room of a reputable hotel for sweet charity's sake, for school reunions or for civic betterment councils. A sedate luncheon may form a part of these mild affairs, and the toasts—without wine—are as decorous as the most prudish could prescribe.

The hotel is vastly convenient in these days of cramped quarters and widely scattered unhomelike homes. That is its primal insinuating plea. When the woman's club began to be a force the house to house meetings held in its first stages became impracticable, and the hotel offered facilities not otherwise obtainable. Its attractions, added to those inherent in the club, drew new members.

There was an element of excitement in the setting of such a meeting that the club per se could not furnish. Yet there was safety in numbers. Members who had never as individuals ventured inside Sherry's, Delmonico's, the Waldorf-Astoria and other places about whose names there was a peculiar glamour were emboldened to enjoy their privileges under the protecting aegis of the club's shield. Something of the retiring habits of the house keeping woman for a time still clung to these hotel club meetings. The members of one complacent organization, for instance, were shocked and angered at the public criticism of their best bonnets—an outrage on their privacy and their taste.

But the hotel environment began to have its effect. Or, perhaps, it was only coincident with other liberalizing influences. In any case, rumors of indulgence in the wicked cocktail and the frank discussion of forbidden subjects reached the ears of scandalized husbands and came near to disrupting certain clubs.

People were more squeamish then. It would be hard to make a sensation out of such doings in the hotels to-day.

What organized women could do it followed that the individual might take up, sooner or later. Having tested the convenience and the pleasures of dalliance in the luxury of hotels, women of varying fortunes and positions swarmed into them, defying criticism.

Another contributing element to this end has been the elimination of housekeeping, in the old time sense. Neither the responsibility nor the charm of the house has a hold upon the mistress in Manhattan. At best there is an apartment, and even the strain of keeping it up is too severe for thousands who won't work and can't get servants.

The next step is the hotel, if you can afford it. Perhaps the most discontented women in the world are those who live in hotels, but they are ruined for leading any other sort of life.

Moths That Flutter.

But it is the outside moths that flutter most conspicuously about the many candled power glitter of the hotel. Where do they get the price and the time? The sober minded and the casual visitors who ask these question receive no answer, but the extreme of fashion and its imitations continue to parade and loiter, to shimmer and glisten, and to spend money madly and gladly. "Whither" and "whence" are questions for the caustic observer, not for the woman with the well filled, gold meshed purse—seldom for the man who fills it.

There are women who enjoy the privileges of the hotels at comparatively small expense. It is they who most freely use the gilt stamped stationery, engage the services of the hotel maids and utilize the free dressing rooms. Their luncheons or their teas are carefully thought out with an eye to the prices on the menu even at a sacrifice of preference in regard to dishes. Better the least expensive entrée and a demitasse in the luxury of a hotel of class than the cycle of a table d'hôte in the commonplace cheapness of the ordinary restaurant. Women are not greedy in the matter of food when they pay for it themselves, but they are "finnicky."

There cannot be any direct profit to the hotels in this class of patrons, but it would be impolitic as well as cruel on the part of the management to cold-shoulder them, for they are the hotel's most persistent advertisers.

Sitting at ease among the well groomed, finely clad loungers of the hotels or trailing past them unperturbed in their graceless, travel soiled garb are hungry motoring parties—a large addition to the patronage of the hotels nowadays.

The usual congestion becomes acute on such special occasions as the aviation meet and the horse show and the days when people are passing through the city to and from the seashore and the mountains. Then the privilege of parting from a great deal of money for a very small portion of food is denied to hundreds, who go away weary and disappointed after hours of fruitless waiting.

Even on ordinary days, at least they are ordinary in so far as general information goes, tables are set in the lobby and in the reading room to catch as much of the overflow from the dining rooms and the palm rooms as it is possible to accommodate. As the last flower is fastened in the big centrepiece by the hurried florist the final ornate mayonnaise and gelée placed upon the cold board and the first note of Broadway's favorite music of the hour struck by the orchestra, the head waiter and his assistants deftly guide one lunch party after another and now and then a solitary person, first to the tables by the windows, then to the others, until even the least desirable places are filled—and the crowd stands, many deep, waiting a favorable nod.

In general you will count five or six, often many more women for every man. And that man would not be there, especially if he had to wait, unless a woman's wish compelled him.

Place for Meeting.

The hotel is the great meeting place. If one comes from Summit and another from Oyster Bay it is quite logical that they should plan to meet at a hotel. Before the matinee, or after it; to join forces for shopping; to rest up after the dentist; to show what New York really is to a kinswoman from Kansas or from New Hampshire; to talk over a matter of business with some one whose time is limited—for these and a score of other purposes the hotel serves with a peculiar adaptation to the day's conditions that ranks it high in the hearts of women.

"How much it all costs!" exclaimed a somewhat dismayed woman, unaccustomed to hotels, as she saw five dollars fade away over an extremely simple luncheon.

"Yes, but it's worth it," quoted her friend gayly. "You can't be economical at a hotel, and to be mean is intolerable. But you have a glow of satisfaction in having spent your money here that is hard to match."

The woman who has formed the hotel habit feels that existence would be unendurably drab without this purple patch, and however [illegible] wear and portions be reduced she clings to it.

Since the club meetings have [illegible] desuetude, at least into the background, in the feminine parade at the hotels there are scores of other appealing interests, from [illegible] and sale of the latest millinery creations [illegible] studies to talks on "The Last [illegible]" and from the sale of the wares of [illegible] parelled Shakers to musical [illegible] patronized.

Beneath the generous shelter of the roof one may find hairdressers, manicures, [illegible] and every sort of helper, attendant and servant that [illegible] crave and money pays for.

But there are hotels and hotels, each with its distinctive reputation and its following. About the most conspicuous retail shops have [illegible] of the important large ones that have moved up town within a few years, and little specialty shops where the rich may buy at least with a belief in exclusive quality. Tea rooms offer to supplement the big hotel dining rooms at almost the same prices. Beauty parlors are conveniently at hand. The chain of the avenue is on one side, and the other extends toward the blaze of Broadway.

Here is always the greatest hotel crowd. Some places have sprung up, rivalling the older [illegible] The cheery warmth on winter days and the [illegible] in the summer [illegible]

The decorators were not afraid [illegible]

and the public has approved their generosity. A select few may affect contempt for overpopularity, but they are never missed in the [illegible] throng from the city and beyond that seek its comfort and luxury. "It is so typical of New York," sneered a Bostonian. "Truly," was the prompt reply, "and see how Boston and Philadelphia and Chicago flock to it."

Where They Crowd.

Up the avenue new hotels have invited women who complained of the too great popularity of the big places to take refuge in their semi-secluded elegance. These have their tea and luncheon crowds, although not comparable to those of their established magnificent rival. To find a second in popularity one must cross Broadway.

Here is a hotel hospitable to women's clubs, their public meetings and occasional banquets. In its dining rooms there are as many women as [illegible] In the halls one meets them, wearing the air of being on their own territory.

NORWOOD HAPPENINGS

LOTS OF SNOW—SPECIAL MEETINGS—MANY VISITORS

Norwood, Nov. 30.—On Monday evening, after a cloudy, threatening day, with east wind, snow began to fall heavily and not until Tuesday forenoon did the storm abate at which time a mantle of the beautiful covered the ground to the depth of about six inches. Sleighs and cutters were brought out and from the merry jingle of the bells we were reminded that winter is again with us.

SPECIAL MEETINGS.

The special meetings in the Methodist church are being continued this week. The pastor, Rev. B. W. Tucker, is being ably assisted by the officials and members of the church, and it is a matter of much satisfaction that many are being brought into the church as well as the old members receiving much blessing in the quickening of their spiritual lives. The spirit of earnestness and consecration is being evidenced more and more as the meetings progress.

W. H. GARBUTT.

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

Since the June session of the County Council I have been requested to examine the following bridges—

September 19th, accompanied by Mr. Cohen, Mr. Shaw and the warden, we visited two bridges in the township of Galway known as Barr's and Molyneaux. These bridges are of a similar length, viz., about 75 feet of covering. As you are aware, in the event of the proposed legislation in regard to length of bridges, now under contemplation by the Government, becoming law it would be necessary, as I understand it, for the county to assume those bridges, but under present circumstances I would recommend that this Council await the action of the Government, as these bridges at present are in good repair and will entail no great expense on the township for some time.

September 26th, at the request of Mr Tucker, I visited Brown's Falls bridge in the township of Burleigh, and found this bridge had been broken through on the west end by a threshing machine in passing over, making it necessary to have that part of the bridge replanked, which was done under the supervision of Mr. Tucker. I would recommend that steps should be taken to have this bridge rebuilt as soon as possible.

September 30th at the request of Mr. Russell, the warden, Mr. Russell and myself visited Brown's bridge, in the township of Belmont. This is a steel structure of three spans, placed upon wooden piers. This bridge, as I understand, was built 26 or 27 years ago, and the piers have become more or less decayed; one of the centre ones dropping away on one side from the steel work. Altogether this deficiency Mr. Russell had repaired at a trifling cost, which makes it safe for the present. From the fact that the centre piers are built of a width of about eight feet apart it leaves a space on each of these piers between the spans of about five or six feet, which, in the event of concrete abutments being built, it would be necessary to have the steel work moved to meet the requirements, we came to the conclusion that this would be a matter for the engineer to deal with.

On the same date we also visited Deer River bridge and Taylor's bridge, the last mentioned being in good shape, while Deer River bridge has two stringers and two cross-pieces badly decayed, which we consider should be replaced as soon as it can be conveniently done. This bridge appears to be in good condition in every other respect.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CHRIS. J. DARLING,
Chairman, Roads and Bridges.

NOGEY'S CREEK BRIDGE

I beg leave to present a special report re Nogey's Creek bridge.

Acting upon the order-in-council to proceed to reconstruct the same, we started out in the usual way.

Upon visiting the old site or bridge, we found we had some difficulties to overcome.

We asked for tenders for superstructure and substructure in the usual way, and awarded the contract for the superstructure to the Dickson Bridge Company, Campbellford, for the sum of $1,575, with concrete floor, and we cannot speak too highly of their work in every respect.

The lowest bona-fide tender for the abutments, consistent with the plans and specifications prepared by the engineer, was $2,000, and your committee decided to undertake the same by day work, notwithstanding the nature of the bottom to be prepared for such abutments, and when completed we were more than pleased to find that the abutments cost very little over $1,000. The results are largely due to the interest taken by those employed, they being ratepayers of the county living close to the bridge.

I might also say that not only did the committee take an interest in the work, but your committee were fortunate in having the advice and encouragement from all members of the council who in any way became acquainted with the difficulties encountered.

The accounts not all being in, I will not state the exact cost of everything yet.

ROBT. SHAW.

That the matter of claims re investigation of Norwood fire be left in the hands of Messrs. Breault and Moher and the County Solicitor.

That the report of the chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the claim of the Peterborough Lithographic Company be received.

That this committee, after considering the matter, after an expression of opinion from each member of the committee was given, recommend that the matter be referred to the January session of the Council of 1911, so that in the meantime something more specific, or some statement may be sent in by the company as a claim (if any.)

That the report of Mr. Tucker re adjusting of the salary of Mr. Booth, Police Magistrate, be received, and that this committee approve of the action of the sub-committee.

That the account of J. E. Belcher be paid.

Your committee beg leave to report as follows—

That the report of the chairman be adopted.

That the report of the chairman re construction of Nogey's Creek bridge be adopted.

That the report of the committee re Lily Lake bridge be adopted.

That this committee had hoped, as per provision made by debenture issue this year, to have paid the Dominion Government their claim re Buckhorn bridge, and not now being in a position to authorize the paying over of the money at present due to other emergencies having used up the debenture proceeds, we would suggest that the 1911 council make provision for the same at their first session.

That the caretaker of Lock's bridge be paid the sum of $10; salary as caretaker for 1910, being $5 added to January report, which allowed $5.

That the matter of making necessary repairs to the Gannons bridge be left in the hands of the warden and Messrs. Darling and Shaw.

That the matter of interviewing the Dominion Government with reference to Gannons Narrows and Pigeon Creek bridges be left in the hands of the warden.

That the chairman and warden have power to have repairs made where required on the roof of county buildings.

That a typewriting machine be purchased for use in the clerk's office, the same to be satisfactory to the chairman, county clerk and warden.

SOUTH HARVEY

Special to the Review.

South Harvey Novv. 29.—The school concert held on Friday evening of last week was a huge success. In spite of the unfavorable weather the school room was packed, the immediate vicinity being well represented and quite a number from such distant points as Rockcroft, Buckhorn and Bury's Green. Each of the twenty-nine numbers on the program was extremely enjoyable, and the musical selections given by the Simpson brothers, of Rockcroft, were particularly fine, and were greatly appreciated by the entire audience.

Mr. Robt. Smith was a guest at the home of Mr. W. Elliott three weeks ago Monday evening.

Quite a number of the young men have gone to their winter work in the lumber camps. Among those who have taken their departure are Messrs. B. Eason F. Eason, H. Smith, B. Atkinson, J. Atkinson and H. Stevenson.

Mr. Bert Mcmot, who for one week, held the responsible position as cook in Mr. Creswell's lumber camp, has returned to his home here. He states that the reason for his short sojourn in the woodland was that his bread was of such excellent quality and the men had such enormous appetites, that even while he spent twenty-one hours a day at his labor it was beyond his power to supply the demands.

Mr. George Weir spent the afternoon and evening of a week ago Sunday at the home of Mr. J. Stevenson.

Mrs. A. Thompson is spending a few days visiting friends in Peterborough.

Mrs. J. Smith and Miss Annie were the guests of Mrs. Jas. Coone on Monday afternoon.

A MASTER OF METAPHOR.

It Must Have Relieved Him to Get This Out of His System.

A water consumer in a certain city, whose supply had been turned off because he wouldn't pay, wrote to the department as follows:

"In the matter of shutting off the water on unpaid bills your company is fast becoming a regular crystallized Russian bureaucracy, running in a groove and deaf to the appeals of reform. There is no use of your trying to impugn the verity of this indictment by shaking your official heads in the teeth of your own deeds.

"If you will persist in this kind of thing a widespread conflagration of the populace will be so imminent that it will require only a spark to let loose the dogs of war in our midst. Will you persist in burling the cornerstone of our personal liberty to your wolfish hounds of collectors thirsting for its blood? If you persist the first thing you know you will have the chariot of a justly indignant revolution rolling along in our midst and gnashing its teeth as it rolls.

"If your rascally collectors are permitted to continue coming to our doors with unblushing footsteps, with cloaks of hypocritical compunction in their mouths, and compel payment from your patrons this policy will result in cutting the wool off the sheep that lays the golden egg until you have pumped it dry, and then farewell, a long farewell, to our vaunted prosperity."—Everybody's.

SENATOR DANDURAND WANTS TO HAVE THE SENATE REFORMED

He Suggests the Appointment of a Joint Committee to Apportion the Business of the Session—Would Have Ministers Sit in Second Chamber.

Ottawa, Dec. 1.—The problem of Senate reform may be solved by the Senate itself. Yesterday in the Upper Chamber Senator Dandurand suggested the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses to consider a plan for a better division of Parliamentary business, in order that the Senate might be provided with more work.

Canada and Britain were the only places where Ministers were not allowed to appear before both Houses of Parliament. In Canada a majority of Ministers were in the Commons, and the greater part of the business originated there. Business in the Commons was often blocked for weeks by long political discussion.

In his opinion all Ministers should be allowed to have seats in the Senate, without votes. If this was done, he thought they would frequently introduce important measures in the Senate and advance them, while the Commons were talking politics. This would have the effect of increasing the interest of the public in the Upper House. He noted that there was no need for the Senate to sit as long as the Commons, for the Lower House gave about two months to the consideration of supplies, while the Senate was required to pass the supply bill at a single sitting.

Sir Richard Cartwright said he would call the attention of the Government to the suggestion, and recalled the fact that he had previously made representations for the purpose of getting more business for the Senate.

Senator G. W. Ross thought that, instead of giving Ministers the right to appear in both the Senate and Commons, it would be better to follow the English plan, and assign more members of the Government to the Upper House. It was resolved that when the Senate adjourned to-day, it would stand adjourned until Jan. 11.

Yesterday afternoon the Commons enjoyed its daily hubbub arising out of the speech from the throne. It began by a question whether P. E. Blondin, Conservative member for Champlain, who has espoused the cause of the Nationalists, should be permitted to read from Le Devoir an article which explained certain matters in defence of himself against the attack of the Minister of Marine, who had accused him of making disloyal speeches during the Drummond Arthabaska campaign. There was a war of words, Mr. Blondin finally carrying his point. He was allowed to read the article.

This, however, did not conclude all the spectacular events of the day. George Taylor of Leeds made a reference to remarks made by H. H. Miller (South Grey) in the course of a speech in the House the other day. Mr. Miller read the telegram which Taylor had sent to Monk, congratulating on the Drummond-Arthabaska victory, and said that this action was not that of a loyal man. Mr. Taylor contended that he had been for many years a personal friend of the member of Jacques Cartier, and he was within his rights in wishing him success. Miller's reference to himself, he said, stamped the member for South Grey as a man who was not reliable, not honorable, not truthful, and not loyal.

Quiet being restored, T. W. Crothers (West Elgin) took up the naval question from the standpoint of the Drummond election, and reminded Mr. Turcotte (Nicolet) of his statement in the House last session that the establishment of a navy was the last step towards independence. The Prime Minister had not repudiated it. He gave Sir Wilfrid an opportunity of repudiating it now, and said worse language had been used in the House than in the recent election.

F. B. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.) also spoke and Hon. Geo. E. Foster moved the adjournment.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King introduced his bill to prohibit the manufacture, sale and use of opium for other than scientific and medicinal purposes. The proposed legislation, he said, would make the former act more effective, and would give the authorities greater powers to search for, seize and confiscate opium believed to be illegally possessed. Other important provisions were that the smoking of opium would be made an offence under the criminal code.

The report of the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice, tabled in the House yesterday by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, gives the average daily population of the Canadian Penitentiaries during the last fiscal year as 1824, as compared with 1,825 in the previous year, and 1,407 a decade ago. Tables are submitted to show that of the 1,850 convicts who constitute the penitentiaries population of the Dominion, 1,392 were born in Canada, Great Britain, or other British countries.

Canada heads the list with 1,071, the other countries ranking as follows: England, 108; Ireland, 50; Scotland, 39; other countries, 24. Of the foreign-born inmates of the penitentiaries, 184 were born in the United States, 98 in Italy, 36 in Austria, 36 in Russia, 32 in Germany, 23 in France, 13 in China, and 45 in other countries.

While the number of foreign-born convicts generally has increased from 14 per cent. in 1900, to 25 per cent. in 1910, those born in the United States have increased less than 2 per cent. and still constitute less than 10 per cent of the penitentiaries' population.

The creeds of the penitentiaries' inmates are given as follows: Roman Catholic 931, Church of England 344, Methodist 199, Presbyterian 183, Baptist 72, Lutheran 51, other denominations 21, Buddhist 17, Hebrew 17, Unitarian 2, no creed 22.

The report of the parole officers shows that 296 paroles and 17 pardons were granted during the year, as compared with 244 paroles and 14 pardons granted in the previous year.

In this connection the opinion is expressed that the time has arrived when the oversight by the Dominion parole officer should be restricted to those released from Federal institutions. Some of the western provinces have already appointed parole officers to look after the interests of prisoners released from provincial jails and reformatories, and the view is taken that it would be but right for the eastern provinces to undertake the supervision of its prisoners.

The gross expenditures on penitentiaries for the year was $536,325 and the net revenue was $45,686.

WAS BRIBE OFFERED FORMER OXFORD COUNTY COUNCILLOR ?

M. T. Buchanan Says Rev. E. D. Silcox Offered Him $300, D. L. Sutherland Offered $300 and John Young $1,000 to Influence Scheme.

Woodstock, Dec. 1.—That he was offered a bribe of $600 by Rev. E. D. Silcox, editor of the Canadian Congregationalist, and formerly of Embro, in connection with the purchase of the Ingersoll-Woodstock toll road, was the rather starling assertion of M. T. Buchanan, former county councillor and chairman of the toll roads committee, at the graft investigation here yesterday before Judge Snider.

This charge Mr. Silcox emphatically denied, and testified that so far from his offering Mr. Buchanan, a rake-off the latter had approached him, with an offer to have the road purchased for $12,000, on condition of his getting $900 for himself and $100 for Mr. Silcox. Mr. Silcox added that he declined the offer.

Under cross-examination by E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., Buchanan swore that Mr. Silcox came to his office to have a private talk about the road in question.

"Did you propose to adjourn to the barn?" asked Mr. Johnston.

Buchanan admitted that he might have done so.

Mr. Silcox, Buchanan declared, said that he was authorized by the young ladies who owned the road to sell it.

"He would give me $300. I said I wasn't authorised to state any price or to deviate in any way."

Asked whether Mr. Silcox had mentioned $10,000 as the price, Buchanan said: "He didn't name any. I told him that $10,000 was all I was empowered to accept, and told him that as far as accepting the $800 went, I wasn't doing that sort of business."

"What did he expect," queried Mr Johnston.

"He said he expected to get a suit of clothes out of it," was the answer.

Then Buchanan told of being offered $600 by E. L. Sutherland to agree to Judge Finkle as arbitrator. John Young, a Brooksdale farmer, he said, had also offered him a bribe of $1,000.

"You saw all those people, offering you bribes, and you never communicated with the council," asked Mr. Johnston.

Buchanan declared that he had warned the assessor.

Mr. Johnston recalled the fact that at the last investigation Buchanan had been shown to have received $350 in commission from a threshing machine company, asserting that it was in payment for a motor their agent had purchased from him. The judge, Mr. Johnston said, had found him a swindler and guilty of corrupt practices.

"Don't you think that it would have an influence on the price paid by the council had they known?" he asked.

Buchanan said he thought it might.

"Well, why didn't you tell them?"

Buchan replied that he didn't think it worth while, which he amended afterward by saying: "Well, I didn't want the publicity."

"Wasn't it that you were afraid that people would say Buchanan is getting a rake-off and trying to put it off on the clergyman and these girls?" was Mr. Johnston's retort.

The hearing was adjourned till Dec. 15 to secure further evidence.

EDWARD McINTOSH STILL AT LIBERTY

Toronto, Dec. 1.—"It is only a matter of a short time now," said Superintendent Rogers of the provincial police, last night, in speaking of the apprehension of Edward E. McIntosh, against whom a warrant has been issued, charging theft of $4,000 unsigned Traders' Bank $5 bills, taken from the safe of the Dominion Express Co., en route from Ottawa in March last. "The man has no considerable funds, and we are bound to come upon him in the very near future," Superintendent Rogers said, and declared that he did not place a deal of reliance in the statement that McIntosh was in the city yesterday morning. He was here Monday, and his auto was seized by the company from which it had been purchased at Hamilton.

It seems that McIntosh is wanted by the police for a number of things, one here for overspeeding his auto, while the police of Hamilton have a like complaint against him in that city, where he has been living since he left Galley avenue.

It is understood that the discovery of the bills was not immediately reported to the city police for fear that it might too soon get to the press. The city police resent this statement, and point out that the matter could not have been given publicity much more rapidly than was done. It is believed that McIntosh has headed for Atlantic City, N.J.

NEGRO SHOT TO PIECES

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 1.—Despatches from Waverly say that Max Neal, a negro, who shot one negro to death and wounded four others, was riddled with bullets by a posse that surrounded the negro in a cabin late Tuesday night. Neal, on Monday evening, fired eleven times through a window of a house occupied by Anna and Etta Johnson, killed the former, and badly wounding the latter, and Paul Brown, who was in the house at the time.

While hiding from the posse, Neal fired upon Leslie and Spooks Jackson, boys, on their way to work. Both were badly hurt. The ambush attack on the boys was unprovoked.

GOT TOO FRESH WITH OFFICER

New York, Dec. 1.—Because, when ordered to return to his quarters by Captain H. C. Clement, jr., 29th Infantry, Musician Anthony F. Burns replied: "Ah, go on, how about that $36?" Burns will have to spend three years in Leavenworth Prison. He has also been dishonorably discharged from the regular army. The court-martial that tried him for "behaving with disrespect toward his commanding officer," sentenced him to five years, but General F. D. Grant cut off two years.

LONDON GETS HYDRO ELECTRIC

London, Dec. 1.—London streets were lighted by hydro-electric power last night for the first time, Hon. Adam Beck turning the switch that brought the power from the transformer station to the distribution station, and Chairman Pocock of the board of water commissioners, turning the switch that sent the power out over the wires to light the city.

Everything worked smoothly, all but the down town section being lighted by the new power. The latter omission was caused by the delay in receiving a switchboard. Sixty candle power lamps are being used, but, if possible, lamps of 100 candle power may be substituted. This is recommended by Engineer Sothman.

CONFESSED TO MURDER

Calgary, Dec. 1.—The inquest on the remains of the man found on Bow River, near Dunbow East on June 29 last, terminated tragically at Okotoks, when Thomas M. Robertson confessed to having shot and killed Tucker Beach, at the same time implicating John Fisk as accomplice. The body when found was headless, but the head was found a couple of weeks ago and the body exhumed and identified.

Man Cooked to Death.

Buffalo, Dec. 1.—Helplessly pinioned against a wall by the end of a pipe, which suddenly had become disjointed by pressure of steam within it, Roy J. Zoeller, 30, an engineer at a brewery in this city, was slowly cooked to death yesterday.

E. J. PERRY GETS TWENTY YEARS

Halifax, Dec. 1.—After being out two hours, the jury in the case of E. J. Perry, charged with the murder of Mrs. Maud Wright, returned a verdict of manslaughter in the first degree, and Justice Drysdale sentenced him to twenty years in penitentiary.

Only the fact of it being a drunken orgie, and Perry's kindness to the Wrights, saved him from a heavier sentence. Perry stated that he was married to Maud Wright two years ago at Portland.

TROOPS REVOLT

Portuguese in Macao Seize City and Establish Government.

Macao, Island of Macao, China, Dec. 1.—The Portuguese troops of the local garrison and the crew of the Portuguese gunboat Patria revolted on Tuesday night, and, taking possession of the city, proceeded to enforce changes in the administration of the affairs of this dependency of Portugal.

The revolt began with the landing of the sailors of the Patria, who marched to the public square, where they fired three volleys as a signal to the troops, who at once forced an entry to the armory, and, arming themselves, joined the seamen.

Several hundred strong, the rebels proceeded to Santa Clara convent, from which they drove out the nuns, ordering them to leave the island. The nuns fled to Hong Kong.

From the convent the rebels marched to Government House, before which the mounted a cannon. An interview with the governor was requested, and when the officers at Government House objected they were silenced at the point of the bayonet. The governor was compelled to hear the demands, which were the expulsion of the religious orders, increased pay for the army and navy, the suppression of the newspaper, Vida Nova, and the righting of alleged wrongs suffered by the soldiers and sailors.

Under threat the Government granted every demand.

It is stated that the governor, after being forced to comply with the demands of the rebels, resigned.

Macao is a seaport and a dependency of the Portuguese in China, situated on a peninsula of the Island of Macao, on the west side of the entrance to the Canton River, 70 miles southeast of Canton, and 25 miles west of Hong Kong.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Canadians and Americans in vicinity of outbreak in Mexico are short of food.

London, Ont., and Preston were both lighted with Niagara electricity last night.

A quarter of a million dollars is to be spent in improving the Montreal postoffice.

A statement is made at Ottawa that Archbishop Bruchesi will be created a Cardinal, with the intention of ultimately electing him as Pope.

In the Gull Lake murder case at Moosejaw, after three hours deliberation, the jury found McBride guilty of manslaughter. Sentence was deferred.

Chief Forder seized a lot of fur pelts near Parry Sound and is prosecuting two men named Daball and Taylor for having them in their possession.

A fleet of nineteen grain-laden steamers was preparing to leave Fort William for lower lake ports last night before the close of navigation and the expiration of the marine insurance.

After coming all the way from Chicago to visit Toronto friends, Andrew K. Tine and Frank Hoffman were refused admittance to Canada at Niagara Falls, because they did not have $50.

The application of the Grand Trunk to expropriate the cemetery where the victims of ship cholera are interred at Montreal will be opposed before the Railway Commission by the Irish societies of the city.

Sixty youths have joined the Niobe at Halifax. They are city boys. The able seamen on board gets 70 cents per day, but they are complaining that this is less than they were led to expect they would receive.

Lloyd Brown, who lost an arm at Galt two years ago, having been put off a C.P.R. freight train by the conductor while stealing a ride, was awarded $1,000 damages at a re-trial in the High Court at Brantford.

TUG BOATS IN COLLISION THREE DEAD

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Dec. 1.—Three men were drowned yesterday when the tug General, of the Great Lakes Dock Co. sank after colliding with the C.P.R. lake steamer Athabaska off Lime Island, St. Mary's Passage, during a snowstorm.

The Athabaska is the vessel that went ashore on Flower Pot Island about this time two years ago, and was pulled off after great difficulty lengthened and rebuilt.

The tug was cut completely in two. Three of the crew, Andrew Harwood, Joseph Boyer and Frank Lowe, all married men of the Michigan Soo, were drowned.

The remainder of the crew are coming up on the Athabasca, which is due here to-day.

It is said the Athabaska was uninjured in the accident.

The tug General was proceeding down to release the Pollock, which is on at St. Michael's reef near Detour.

REFERENDUM EFFECTIVE ?

London, Dec. 1.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Unionists are convinced that Balfour's announcement, that should the Government be displaced, tariff reform would be submitted to a referendum, has greatly enhanced their prospects of victory, if the anger of the Liberal press, about what they describe as "another white flag surrendered" is any confirmation of this. Undoubtedly so far it has been very angry and very sarcastic about "dropping the principal plank of the Unionist platform."

"We've got 'em on the run," is the official ministerial view, but it is admitted on all hands that Mr. Balfour's approval of J. L. Garvin's suggestion is effective as Lansdowne's resolutions for reform of the Lords, without which there would have been little prospect of a Unionist victory. The issue now lies between the Government's abolition of the Lords' veto and Lansdowne's proposals.

The city's new gamble is betting on the Government's majority. Yesterday their estimate, which ten days ago was 120, fell to 40, but recovered to 80, or 65. Dealers are anxious to have it understood that the rally is due to "covering" by bears, not to purchases by Government supporters. The rise in consols is also claimed as heralding at least a check to radical finance. In Lloyd's premiums against defeat of the Government rose to 25 guineas.

SHE REFUSED TO KISS HIM SHOT HER

Buffalo, Dec. 1.—Because she refused to kiss him, Leo Groski, aged 23, yesterday morning entered the room of Helen Furman, aged 15, of No. 105 Clay street, and fired four shots from a 32-calibre revolver at her. One bullet grazed the temple of the girl, and embedded itself in the wall. The second entered the cheek, causing a serious wound. The others went wild.

Groski, after firing at the girl, turned the revolver on himself, sending a bullet into his right temple. Surgeons at the Sisters' Hospital, where he was taken, say there is little hope for his recovery. Groski boarded with the Furmans.

Schools of Aviation.

New York, Dec. 1.—Claude Grahame-White, winner of the international aviation trophy at Belmont Park, sailed for London yesterday on the Mauretania, carrying with him more than $10,000 which he has earned by flying since he came to the United States a few months ago.

The English flyer, upon his return to this country will establish flying schools in Boston and St. Louis, he declared just before sailing.

BADLY HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Toronto, Dec. 1.—Turning sharply to avoid a collision with a cart which had cut in front of the machine, J. Reynolds, chauffeur for Cawthra Mulock, ran the big touring car, 2,598, into a telegraph pole at the southeast corner of Jarvis and Gerrard streets, when it skidded on the slippery asphalt.

Mrs. Mulock with Miss Adele Boulton, a daughter of Melfort Boulton, Wilcocks street, who were in the car, and the chauffeur were all cut about the face with flying glass of the windguard of the machine, and Miss Boulton's right shoulder was dislocated. All were taken in a passing auto to the Mulock residence at Jarvis and Isabella streets, where several doctors were called to attend them.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ESTIMATES

Washington, D.C., Dec. 1.—The total estimates for the United States navy for the fiscal year 1911-1912, amount to $126,046,659.24, which is $5,000,000 less than the sum appropriated in the naval bill for the current fiscal year. This statement was made by the Secretary of the Navy Meyer yesterday.

The new ships proposed are: Two battleships, one collier, one gunboat, one river gunboat, two sea-going tugs, two submarines and one submarine tender.

A Labor Dispute.

St. Thomas, Dec. 1.—The municipal elections are causing ructions in the labor camp here. Recently the Trades and Labor Council appointed a member to hand out matter to the press and after a meeting held about a week ago he gave the local press a slate said to have been endorsed by the council. Some of the members deny the accuracy of the list of names given or that the council has endorsed any candidates at all.

GETTING ANXIOUS ABOUT RESIDENTS

Hong Kong, Dec. 1.—News of the revolt of the Portuguese garrison and naval forces at Macao has caused intense anxiety here, and foreign consuls are making urgent inquiries regarding the security of the citizens of their countries and their properties in Macao.

Later advices from Macao state that foreigners there are safe. The Chinese shops are closed. The nuns and children of foreigners are coming to Hong Kong.

DOESN'T KNOW WHETHER HE REACHED POLE OR NOT AND PEARY JUST LAUGHED

But It's a Pretty Safe Bet That He Felt Pretty Hot Over Dr. Cook's Statements—The Latter Asks Sympathy and Confidence of a Gulled Public.

New York, Dec. 1.—In his "own story," which will begin publication in a magazine in January, Dr. Frederick Cook will admit that he doesn't know whether or not he reached the north pole. It is also announced that he is coming home for Christmas. Dealing particularly with the psychology of his adventure the man who has been alternately landed as the greatest explorer and denounced as the most colossal fakir of the age, declares:

"Did I get to the north pole? Perhaps I made a mistake in thinking I did. Perhaps I did not make a mistake. After mature thought, I confess that I do not know absolutely whether I reached the pole or not. This may come as an amazing statement, but I am willing to startle the world if, by so doing, I can get an opportunity to present my case. By my case, I mean not my case as a geographical discoverer, but my case as a man. Much as the attainment of the north pole once meant to me, the sympathy and confidence of my fellow-men means more.

"Fully, freely and frankly, I shall tell everything, and leave the decision with you. If, after reading my story, you say, 'Cook is sincere and honest; half-crazed by months of isolation and hunger he believed that he reached the pole; he is not a faker—then I shall be satisfied."

He declares that at the time he convinced himself that he had discovered the pole he was half mad. He spent two and a half years in his quest, and during that period endured hunger and privation that, he says, would unbalance any mind. Cook declares that it would be impossible for any man to demonstrate that he had been to the north pole. He characterizes the far north as a region of insanity "where one cannot believe the evidence gathered by one's own eye."

He says that he had always looked upon the discovery of the pole as an achievement for his own personal satisfaction—for the satisfaction of a craving and desire that was greater than any other factor in his life. When he found how tremendous a sensation his statement that he had attained the pole created he was overcome with bewilderment.

Part of the time his wife has been with him, and part of the time his children, too. The children were in a retreat in France.

Most of the time during his exile he has been in London. He has gone about among Americans there with the utmost freedom, and at times has gone about under his own name. Even those who did guess the identity of the exile were turned away with ease by the remark the doctor used every time anyone would say he looked like Dr. Cook: "Why, yes. I have been told that before."

DR. FRED A. COOK.

PEARY JUST LAUGHED.

Washington, Nov. 30. — Captain Robert E. Peary laughed to-day when informed that a New York magazine had given out a statement purporting to be a confession that Dr. Cook does not know whether or not he reached the North Pole. He refused to comment, however.

"I have absolutely nothing to say, and will not discuss the matter one way or the other," he declared.

GREATEST LIAR IN THE WORLD.

New York, Nov. 30.—"I have been called the greatest liar in the world, the most monstrous imposter in history," says Cook in beginning his confession. "I believe that in a very obscure way I stand unique, the object of such suspicion and vituperation as have assailed few men."

In his "confession" Dr. Cook tells the story of his life. He pictures the over-powering ambition for exploration that always besetted him while he was ladling out milk in Brooklyn. Then he goes on to tell of his various exploring trips, until finally the North Pole wanderlust came upon him.

G. T. R. EMPLOYEES WERE ARRESTED

Special to the Review.

Orillia, Dec. 1.—Several employees of the Grand Trunk Railway here were arrested this morning on the charge of trespassing on property belonging to the town, while warrants were issued for Mr. P. J. Lynch, superintendent at Allandale, and two others in the same connection. The railway for the past three years has endeavored to get control of a strip of land owned by the town, lying between the old Northern Railway and the main line, and three times recently, it is alleged, the line has been torn down and moved in on the town's property, the authorities promptly moving it out to the original line.

This morning the fence was again moved, with the result that arrests were made and warrants issued as above stated.

PRISON FOR LIFE

Parker's Sentence Will Likely be Commutted Says Despatch

Special to the Review.

Ottawa, Dec. 1.—It is understood that the sentence of Parker, the Belleville murderer, will be commutted to life imprisonment. At a meeting this afternoon the necessary paper will probably be made out.

DISCONTENT IS GROWING

New Orleans, Dec. 1.—A special to The Picayune from Rio Janeiro, Brasil, says: "The discontent among the officers, those in the army as well as the navy, is increasing. Their unrest affected several regiments. A lieutenant who blamed the President while discoursing at the burial of the murdered naval officers, will be arrested and court-martialed.

"The sailors of the Sao Paulo and the Minas Geraes called on Dr. Ruy Barbosa and thanked him for his intervention. Dr. Barbosa firmly but in a kindly manner, blamed them for their conduct.

"In some cases poisoning has occurred on board the destroyers. The officers of two of them found their drinking water contained poison."

AN IMPORTANT HEALTH BY-LAW

Guelph, Dec. 1.—The draft copy of a very important new health bylaw was submitted to the Board of Health at its meeting yesterday afternoon. It calls for a uniformed sanitary inspector, to commence his duties at the first of the year at a salary of $100. It will be this official's duty to visit, and report upon the sanitary condition of every property in the city at least three times a year.

The resignation of Henry Hughes, who has served the city for twenty-eight years on the Board of Health, was received.

May Change to Four Cent Rate.

Cleveland, Dec. 1.—The three cent car fare trial period, agreed upon by the Cleveland Railways Co. and the city last March, came to an end yesterday. President John Stanley of the Railways Co., says that, under the present grant, the service is inadequate. In event that it is decided that three cent fares has been a failure, four cent fares will be given a trial.

SWISH

A magistrate in a Pennsylvania town made up his mind that the law did not know how to properly deal with a chronic wife beater, and he stepped outside the statute law and made one that he administered himself. A woman who had had her brute of a husband before the magistrate, again came to him, bruised and sore, with the usual complaint. When the husband was brought in he found the justice in his shirt sleeves, and armed with a whip.

"Take off your coat," commanded the irate magistrate, and he proceeded to administer his own unwritten law.

Swish!

"The law does not provide proper punishment for such as you," explained the self-appointed maker and administrator of law, "and I'll punish you properly this time."

Swish! Swish!

The man who enjoyed pounding a helpless woman begged for mercy. He jumped about the room trying to avoid the stinging lash, so vigorously wielded by the indignant justice, who accompanied the punishment with suitable admonitions.

Swish! Swish! Swish!

The wife beater added to his pleas for mercy protestations that in the future his behavior would be irreproachable—that he would never, never strike his wife again.

"I'll teach you not to," was the answer, to the tune of Swish! Swish!

Some natures are shocked by an arrest or an appearance in court in charge of a constable, and some are crushed by being placed behind the grated door of a prison. The law does not sufficiently discriminate in its punishments. A law cannot, although a judicious man can. Some natures easily bear imprisonment, and the only punishment really felt by such ones as that of the wife beater is

THE CITY ELECTIONS

In a few weeks the electors will again be called upon to perform their annual duty of selecting members of the City Council. It may be a little early to sound the note of warning as to the necessity for exercising care, discrimination and good judgment in the performance of this duty. And whether it is early for that or not this caution has been given so that it might be called the usual one, and perhaps it has been given so frequently that it need not be repeated.

Several important changes will go into effect with the elections this year. One of these will be the election of the Aldermen by wards. For some ten years the Aldermen have been elected by a vote general throughout the city, but for 1911 they will be selected in the wards. Nominations will be held on the last Monday in December, and for the positions of Mayor, Water Commissioner and members of the Board of Education they will be held at the City Council Chamber at 10 o'clock. For the other members of the Council—the Aldermen—a nomination meeting will be held at twelve o'clock noon at some place in each of the five wards. The places at which these nominations will take place will be selected by the City Council some time before the day fixed for holding them.

Another change, and it will be a complete innovation here, is that only two members will be elected to represent each ward. The Council is at present composed of the Mayor and twelve Aldermen, and in the former days when ward representation prevailed there were three members from each ward, but next year there will be only ten Aldermen, each ward sending two. So that at the next election instead of voting for twelve candidates, as was the case when the ward system formerly prevailed, each elector will only be entitled to mark his ballot for two candidates.

Next January will be the last time, too, as the law stands, that the electors will vote for as many as two candidates. The candidate who receives the highest number of votes in each ward will be elected for two years, and at the following election only one member will be returned. Last year the two years' term was supposed to have been inaugurated, and the six Aldermen who stood highest at the close of the poll were expected to remain in office for two years, but the electors having by their votes declared in favor of returning to the ward system this expectation was overturned and the whole Council has again to be elected this year. So this year two members will be returned from each ward, and the one receiving the smaller number of votes will go back for re-election or retire at the end of the year.

Since the last time that members of the Council were elected by wards the ward boundaries have been changed. While the general vote system was in force this change was scarcely noticed, but now it will effect the elections. Previously the wards were constituted as follows:—No. One all south of Charlotte street; No. Two, between Charlotte and Brock streets; No. Three, between Brock and Dublin streets, and No. Four, north of Dublin street, including Auburn, while the remaining portion of the city was a separate municipality. Now the wards are:—South Ward—All south of Sherbrooke street. Centre Ward—Between Sherbrooke and McDonnel streets and east of Bethune street to the river. West Ward—Between Sherbrooke and McDonnel streets and west of Bethune street. North Ward—All north of McDonnel street. East Ward—All east of the river. This is a more equal division from the standpoint of population and assessment than the old one, for the growth of the city, especially to the south, so altered the circumstances that a change was called for.

Another change since last year is evidence of the growth of the city. A new adjustment of the polling subdivisions has been made, because it was found that there were too many voters in some divisions to allow of convenience in recording the votes, and that there would be more than the law permits when the new list was made out. At this election twenty-two places will be provided for polling and twenty-two deputy returning officers and poll clerks will conduct the polling. The long ballot with the names of the Aldermanic candidates which troubled so many electors and took up so much time at the polls, will not be put before the electors this time, as there will be only two to vote for instead of twelve, and with the larger number of polling places there should be no inconvenience in polling the votes, especially if there are not too many by-laws submitted on the day of the election.

AUTUMN WANDERLUST.

I am restless somehow, Bill,
As the air grows slightly chill.
There's a tingle in my blood that comes with fall.
For the haze is in the sky,
And the ducks are soon to fly.
I can almost hear their leaders as they call.

I've been furbishing my kit,
Guns and all the rest of it,
And the outfit's lying ready on a chair,
Boots and corduroys and hat
And my pipe—be sure of that—
And the sweater that I always used to wear.

Hunting fever is, I think,
Stronger than the thirst for drink.
Every year it leads me outward, and I go
To the haunts of beast and bird
Where the hunting call is heard
And the reeds are all a-quiver to and fro.

Aren't you coming, Billy, too?
Oh, I know you've lots to do!
But you follow my example—let it slip.
When the air is like champagne
It goes bubbling to my brain,
And I take my rod and gun and blithely skip.

Now, don't sit there looking glum.
Needn't shake your head; you'll come,
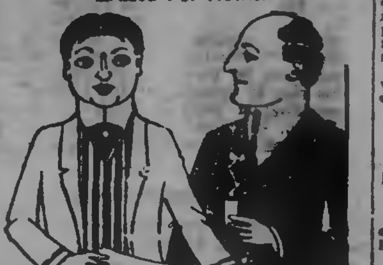
But you might as well confess
That your negative means "Yes."
For I saw you buying powder yesterday!
—Berton Braley in Puck.

Braced For Howls.



Riggs—It must require a heap of courage to face those howling dervishes.

Baggstaff—Oh, I don't know. It all depends on your training.

Riggs—Whatever do you mean?

Baggstaff—If you ever had a new baby in your house you would know what I mean.

A Perjured Pair.

Hire Sistem, the great furniture king, having made his pile, had settled down to the pursuits of a country gentleman. He invited his friend, Plane Figger, to make a stay with him.

One day, armed with the latest appliances for dealing out sudden death to anything in the game line, he and his friend trudged over the brown furrows, but at the end of three hours they were still looking for something to start the bag with.

Suddenly a hare got up. Bang came from Hire Sistem, bang from Plane Figger. And over went the four footed one.

"My hare!" shouted the ex-furniture king.

"My hare!" cried his friend.

They argued for ten minutes as to whose weapon had worked the mischief. Then the keeper was called up to adjudicate.

"You'd take your oath it's your 'are, would you?" he turned to Hire Sistem fiercely.

"If necessary, certainly."

"I would."

"Then think yourself jolly lucky you're escapin' seven years apiece for perjury, cos it 'appens ter be my dog."—Spare Moments.

Somewhat Cautious.

Two Scotch fishermen, James and Sandy, belated and befogged on a rough water, were in some trepidation lest they should never get ashore. At last Jamie said:

"Sandy, I'm fearing, and I think you'd better put up a bit of prayer."

"I don't know how," said Sandy.

"If ye don't I'll chuck ye overboard," said Jamie.

Sandy began. "O Lord, I never asked anything of ye for fifteen years, and if ye'll only get us safe back I'll never trouble ye again, and"—

"Whist, Sandy," said Jamie. "The boat's touched shore; don't be beholden to anybody."—Short Stories.

Some Difference.

"I don't believe any two words in the English language are synonymous."

"Oh, I don't know. What's the matter with 'raise' and 'lift'?"

"There's a big difference. I 'raise' chickens and have a neighbor who has been known to 'lift' them."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Plain Speaking.

"I believe in calling a spade a spade," said the emphatic person.

"That's right, friend," replied Broncho Bob. "There was a man who nearly lost his life here by gettin' into a game an' tryin' to call a spade a club."—Washington Star.

The Riverman

By Stewart Edward White

Orde looked at his watch.

"We'll be late for the mail unless we hurry," said he.

Marsh rang the engine room bell. The water churned white behind.

The prow of the tug, accurately aimed by Marsh, hit square in the junction of two of the booms. There ensued a moment of strain; then the links snapped, and the Sprite plunged joyously through the opening. The booms, swept aside by the current, floated to either shore. The river was open.

"Slow down, Marsh," said Orde. "Let's see the show."

Up river all the small boats gathered in a line, connected one to the other by a rope. The tug passed over to them the cable attached to the boom. Evidently the combined efforts of the rowboats were counted on to hold the half boom across the current while the tug brought out the other half. When the tug dropped the cable Orde laughed.

"Nobody but a Dutchman would have thought of that!" he cried. "Now for the fun!"

Immediately the weight fell on the small boats they were dragged irresistibly backward. Marsh lowered his telescope, the tears of laughter streaming down his face.

"They'll have to have two tugs before they can close the break that way," commented Orde.

"Sure thing," replied Captain Marsh.

But at that moment a black smoke rolled up over the marshes, and shortly around the bend from above came the Lucy Belle.

The Lucy Belle was the main excuse for calling the river navigable. In appearance she was two storied, with twin smokestacks, an iron Indian on her top and a "splutter behind" paddle wheel.

"There comes his help," said Orde.

Sure enough, the Lucy Belle stopped. After a short conference she steamed clumsily over to get hold of one end of the booms. The tug took the other. In time and by dint of much plashing, some collisions and several attempts the ends of the booms were united.

By this time, however, nearly all the logs had escaped. The tug, towing a string of rowboats, set out in pursuit.

The Lucy Belle turned in toward the tug.

"She's going to speak us," marveled Orde.

"Tug ahoy!" bellowed a red faced individual from the upper deck. He was dressed in blue and brass buttons and was liberally festooned with gold braid and embroidered anchors.

"Hello there, commodore! What is it?" replied Marsh.

"They want a tug up there at Heinzman's. Can you go?"

"Sure!" cried Marsh, choking.

The Lucy Belle sheered off magnificently.

"What do you think of that?" Marsh asked Orde.

"Head upstream again."

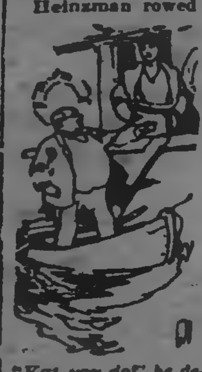
"Don't you go through there! Vait a minute! Stop, I tell you!"

"Hold up!" said Orde to Marsh.

Heinzman rowed alongside.



"Vat you do!" he demanded.

"Vat you do?" he demanded.

"I forgot the money to buy my stamp with," said Orde sweetly. "I'm going back to get it."

"Not through my pooms!"

"Mr. Heinzman," said Orde severely, "you are obstructing a navigable stream. I am doing business, and I cannot be interfered with."

"But my logs!"

"I have nothing to do with your logs. You are driving your own logs," Orde reminded him.

Heinzman vituperated.

"Go ahead, Marsh!" said Orde.

For a second time the chains were snapped. The severed ends of the booms swung back toward either shore. Between them floated a rowboat. In the rowboat gesticulated a pudgy man. The river was well sprinkled with logs. Evidently the sorting was going on well.

"May as well go back to the works," said Orde. "He won't string them together again today, not if he waits for that tug he sent Simpson for."

They turned with new enthusiasm to the work of shunting "H" logs into the channel.

"Mr. Heinzman's ashore and wants to see you," said he.

Orde found the mill man pacing restlessly up and down before a steaming pair of horses. Newmark, perched on a stump, was surveying him sardonically.

"Here you poth are!" burst out Heinzman. "I must not lose my logs! Vat is your probosition?"

Newmark broke in quickly.

"I've told Mr. Heinzman," said he "that we would sort and deliver the rest of his logs for $2 a thousand."

"That will be about it," agreed Orde.

"But," exploded Heinzman, "that is as much as you agreet to drive and deliffer my whole cut!"

"Precisely," said Newmark.

"Put I haf all the eggspence of driving the logs myself. Why shoult I pay you for doing what I haf airetty paid to haf done?"

Orde chuckled.

"Heinzman," said he, "we aren't forced to bother with your logs, and you're lucky to get out so easy. If I turn your whole drive into the river you'll lose more than half of it outright, and it'll cost you a heap to salvage the rest. And, what's more, I'll turn 'em in before you can get hold of a pile driver. I'll sort night and day," he bluffed, "and by tomorrow morning you won't have a stick of timber above my booms." He laughed again. "You want to get down to business almighty sudden."

When finally Heinzman had driven sadly away and the whole drive, "H" logs included, was pouring into the main boom Orde stretched his arms over his head in a luxury of satisfaction.

"That just about settles that campaign," he said to Newmark.

"Oh, no, it doesn't!" replied the latter decidedly.

"Why?" asked Orde, surprised. "You don't imagine he'll do anything more?"

"No, but I will," said Newmark.

Early in the fall the baby was born. It proved to be a boy. Orde, nervous as a cat after the ordeal of doing nothing, tiptoed into the darkened room. He found his wife weak and pale, her dark hair framing her face, a new look of rapt inner contemplation rendering even more mysterious her always fathomless eyes. She held her lips to him. He kissed them.

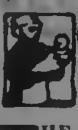
Grandma Orde brought the newcomer in for Orde's inspection. He looked gravely down on the puckered, discolored bit of humanity with a faint uneasiness.

"Is—do you think—that is"— He hesitated. "Does the doctor say he's going to be all right?"

"All right!" cried Grandma Orde indignantly. "I'd like to know if he isn't all right now! What in the world do you expect of a newborn baby?"

But Carroll was laughing softly to herself on the bed. She held out her arms for the baby and cuddled it close to her breast.

"He's a little darling," she crooned, "and he's going to grow up big and strong, just like his daddy." She put her cheek against the sleeping babe's and looked up sidewise at the two standing above her. "But I know how you feel," she said to her husband. "When they first showed him to me I thought he looked like a peanut a thousand years old."

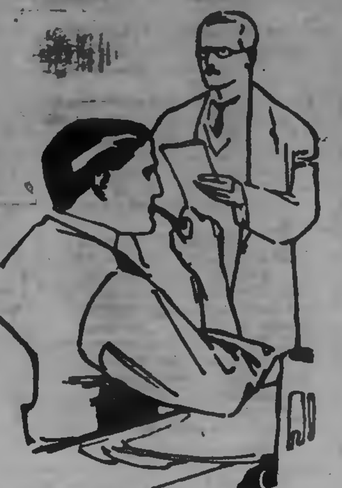


Chapter 26

THE first season of the Boom company was most successful its prospects for the future were bright. The drive had been delivered to its various owners at a price below what it had cost them severally and without the necessary attendant bother. Therefore the loggers were only too willing to renew their contracts for another year. This did not satisfy Newmark, however.

"What we want," he told Orde, "is a charter giving us exclusive rights on the river and authorizing us to ask toll. I'm going to try and get one out of the legislature."

He departed for Lansing as soon as the assembly opened and almost immediately became lost in one of those fierce struggles of politics not less bitter because concealed. Heinzman was already on the ground. Newmark had the shadow of right on his side, for he applied for the charter on the basis of the river improvements already put in by his firm. Heinzman wanted the improvements already existing condemned and sold as a public utility to the highest bidder. He offered further guarantees as to future improvements. In addition were other and more potent arguments proffered behind closed doors. Many cases resolved themselves into a bald question of cash. Others demanded diplomacy. Jobs, fat contracts, business favors, influence, were all flung out freely, bribes as absolute as though stamped with the dollar mark. Newspapers all over the state were pressed into service. Among these delicate and complicated cross currents Newmark moved silent, cold, secret. He seemed to understand them, to play with them, to manipulate them as elements of the game.



"What we want is a charter."

The fight endured through most of the first half of the session. At the last, however, the bill passed the board. The company had its charter.

"It's cost us plenty, anyway," Orde said when the charter bill became a law. "The proposition's got a load on it. It will take us a long time to get out of debt. The river driving won't pay quite so big as we thought it would," he concluded, with a rueful little laugh.

"It will pay plenty well enough," replied Newmark decidedly, "and it gives us a vantage point to work from. You don't suppose we are going to quit at river driving, do you? We want to look around for some timber of our own. There's where the big money is. And perhaps we can buy a schooner or two and go into the carrying trade. Newmark & Orde means something to these fellows now."

Chapter 27

IN the course of the next eight years Newmark & Orde floated high on that flood of apparent prosperity that attends a business well conceived and passably well managed. The Boom and Driving company made money, of course, for with the margin of 50 per cent or thereabouts necessitated by the temporary value of the improvements good years could hardly fail to bring good returns. This, it will be remembered, was a stock company. With the profits from that business the two men embarked on a separate copartnership.

Orde lived at ease in a new house of some size, surrounded by grounds. He kept two servants. A blooded team of horses drew the successor to the original buckboard. Newmark owned a sail yacht of five or six tons, in which, quite solitary, he took his only pleasure. Both were considered men of substance and property, as indeed they were.

Immediately after the granting of the charter to drive the river the partners had offered them an opportunity of acquiring about 30,000,000 feet of timber remaining from Morrison & Daly's original holdings. Orde finally completed the purchase on long time notes. Below the booms they erected a mill. The following winter Orde spent in the woods. By spring he had banked about 6,000,000 feet.

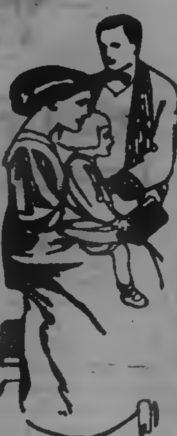
At the end of the fifth year the opportunity came to get possession of two lake schooners. Orde at once suggested the contract for a steam barge. Towing was then in its infancy. Orde thought that a steam barge could be built powerful enough not only to carry its own hold and deck loads, but to tow after it the two schooners. Newmark agreed with him. Thus the firm went into the carrying trade. The most important acquisition was that of the northern peninsula timber. Most operators called the white pine along and back from the river inexhaustible. But Orde saw the time not far distant when the world would be compelled to look elsewhere for its lumber, and he turned his eyes to the almost unknown north. After a long investigation he purchased 300,000,000 feet. This was to be paid for mostly by the firm's notes, secured by its other property.

To Carroll, Orde was always the same big, hearty, whole souled boy she had first learned to love. She had all his confidence.

Bobby had turned out a sturdy, honest little fellow, with more than a streak of his mother's charm and intuition.

"I want to give him all the chance there is," Orde explained to Carroll. "A boy ought to start where his father left off and not have to do the same thing all over again."

"Why don't you let him continue your business?" smiled Carroll.



"Why don't you let him continue your business?"

"By the time Bobby's grown up this business will all be closed out," replied Orde seriously.

Three years after the conversation last mentioned, which would have made Bobby just eight, Orde came home on a summer evening, his face alight with satisfaction.

He believed he had found the opportunity, twenty years distant, for which he had been looking so long.

READY FOR MOTHER.

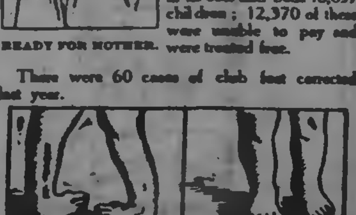
This Institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,837 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay and were treated free.

There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

The sick child from the most remote corner of Ontario has the same claim as the child living within sight of the great House of Mercy in College Street, Toronto. Our cause is the children's cause. Could there be one that has a stronger claim on the people of this Province?

If the Hospital is to continue its great work, it must appeal to your pocketbook as well as to your heart. Let your Dollars be messengers of mercy to the suffering little children of Ontario.

Please send your contribution to J. Ross Robertson, Chairman, or to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, The Hospital for Sick Children, College St., Toronto.

People Who Work Indoors With Their Hands

Seamstresses, watch-makers, artists, draughtsmen, and many others, cannot properly handle their tools with cold, stiff hands. Many a lost hour or two on cold winter mornings results from the delayed heat of furnace or stove.

The Perfection Oil Heater in a few minutes gives the temperature that assures the worker warm hands and pliable muscles. The quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. Has automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so the wick can be quickly cleaned.

It has a damper top and a cool handle. Indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap does not need to be screwed down; it is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain, and cannot get lost.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection is finished in japan or nickel, is strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

Many animals can see with each eye separately, but man cannot do so. The horse, for instance, can see on both sides of him, and when we stand in front of him he can see us with only one eye at a time, because both his eyes cannot act together. The ancient Greek spoke of the eyes as the windows of the soul. They might have gone further and said of the body also. By glancing at a person's eye we can estimate his character pretty well and an observing physician can often tell by the eye the exact nature of a person's sickness.

"Look After Your Eyes"

When the eyes are affected, the whole general health is affected as well. We make no charge for examination. If your eyesight is perfect we will be pleased to tell you so. If, however, there is any defect which needs correcting, we guarantee to fit you with glasses that will surely correct it.

THE CHIMES WERE CHOSEN

English Firm Will Get the Order---The Largest Bell to Weigh 3,000 Pounds ---One of Finest Sets in Dominion

A well attended meeting of the chimes committee was held last evening in the Bank of Ottawa. The whole situation was thoroughly discussed.

Mr. J. C. Wainrigh reported over $5,200 in subscriptions, with about $4,500 paid up, and good hopes for the remainder being paid in the near future. The payments have been most creditable to the subscribers.

Canon Davidson presented his report on visiting Woodstock and Hamilton and inspecting the two sets of chimes at those places, installed by John Taylor & Company, of Loughborough England, and McNeeley & Company, of Troy, N.Y. The effect in both cases was far better than expectation, and the chimes evidently gave the most widespread pleasure to the citizens.

Canon Davidson found it impossible to state that one set of chimes was better than another, owing to their being differently constructed and different tones and weights.

The Woodstock chimes has only ten bells, while the Hamilton has eleven. He gave the results of many enquiries made at both places, those in Hamilton saying that at least eleven bells were necessary for a variety of tunes. The Woodstock chimes, however, are of a slightly heavier calibre than the others.

It was shown the McNeeley chimes were considerably more expensive, and yet a lighter chimes than the English one. The decision was finally in favor of the Taylor chimes, the large bell of which will weigh 3,000 pounds—three times the size of the present St. John's bell. This compares with the 2,500 pounds in Woodstock and the 2,100 pounds in Hamilton very favorably.

Peterborough accordingly, will have one of the heaviest and richest set of chimes in Ontario, the only possible exception being that of St. James' in Toronto. This result has been rendered possible by the magnificent support given the project by citizens generally.

Peterborough is unique in the number of subscribers to the project, and the effect of this will be that the whole body of citizens will take a personal interest in the chimes, and have a personal share in its benefits, which would be otherwise impossible. While the fund is not at present quite sufficient for the purchase of the chimes, the committee felt that the body of people generally desired action, in order that the bells might be installed early next summer, and that the generosity of both local and outside subscribers could be depended upon to make up the balance still lacking. Had the order been further deferred the chimes would probably not have been obtained.

The placing of the order now will render it barely possible, though not certain, to have the chimes installed before Coronation Day or Dominion Day.

A cablegram was sent this morning to Messrs. Taylor, instructing them of the acceptance of their very liberal and advantageous offer. The whole matter may now be considered as settled in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

THESE CHASES PULLED OFF IN THE BROAD DAYLIGHT

It's generally when the lights are dim and low that the lady chaser gets busy.

The evening before last, however, he chose between five and six o'clock as his hour and pursued a lady at the corner of Aylmer and McDonnel streets. He also chased another one into Donovan's grocery on Reid street.

Mr. Hetherington, a blacksmith on Aylmer street, asked the fellow what he meant by such conduct, and the latter replied he wasn't chasing anyone.

He was well dressed, wore a fur coat and was about six feet in height.

PRESENTATION TO PRINCIPAL

Mr. W. L. Richardson Honored by Teachers and Pupils of King Edward School

The teachers and pupils of King Edward school regret to part with their Principal, Mr. W. L. Richardson, who takes the position at the Queen Alexandra school, left vacant by the departure of Mr. W. J. Dunlop to Toronto on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. F. E. Kerr, Assistant Principal, expressed their sentiments, and Harry Rew made a presentation, on behalf of the teachers and pupils, of a brass reading lamp. After the presentation the pupils sang, "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Mr. Richardson has been very popular at the school and took a great interest in the sports of the pupils. Last season he was secretary-treasurer of the City School Baseball League.

GAVE SOLO'S IN CHINESE AT LEAGUE MEETING

On Monday night the usual weekly meeting of Charlotte street Epworth League was held. It was of a missionary nature. Several of the heathen nationalities were represented in costume by members of the League. These also each gave a short account of the country they represented. Those who took part representing the following countries were:

Miss Pearl Bell—India.
Miss E. Smith—Galicia.
Miss Alma Frowde—French Canadian.
Miss Stafford—Poland.

China and Italy were to have been heard from, but their representatives were unavoidably absent. A pleasing feature was a duet sung in Chinese by the little daughters of Rev. Mr. Fee, a former missionary in China for eighteen years, and now pastor of Bethany Tabernacle.

Afterwards brief remarks were made by the pastor and chairman complimenting those who took part in making the evening enjoyable to all. The convenor of the Missionary Committee, who arranged the affair, also came in for words of praise.

WITNESSES SAY THAT CONDITIONS ON ROAD WERE BAD FOR HORSES

And That Once a Horse Runs Away it is Likely to Repeat — Present Owner of Mr. Hatton's "Sapho" is Satisfied With Animal.

The afternoon session of the County Court, in the Hatton vs. City of Peterborough, action for damages last till after six o'clock yesterday. Much evidence was given relative to the condition of Concession street. At the scene of the accident, the effect of such conditions on horses, and the effect of one runaway of a horse on its future disposition.

Witnesses agreed that the street was in a dangerous condition, that a horse that had once run away would be apt to do so again and also that a depreciation on its value would take place, as a direct result of the habit acquired.

FIRST WTINESS.

Mr. Jas. Fitzgerald, C.E., testified as to the plan of the road, prepared by him. The cement bags extended on to the road to a distance of 2 1-2 feet. The watering cart was partly on the road and partly on the culvert.

The conditions existing were of such a character that a horse would be frightened. The mixer was as the watering cart, partly on the road and partly on the culvert at the entrance to the park.

To Mr. Hayes witness said he had experience with horses. He wouldn't undertake to make a turn at this point. The average width of the road was twenty feet. The sidewalk was practically level with the road. The wheelbarrows were not on the travelled portion, but quite close to the fence.

NOT A PROPER PLACE.

Was that an unnatural place to put the articles? No, but I would say it was the proper place.

Wm. Langford, sr., contractor, remembered during June, he was with plaintiff behind, what he supposed to be the same horse. It appeared to be quiet and gentle. Near the waterworks dam, obstructions frightened it somewhat, but he got out of the vehicle and had no trouble leading the horse. On another occasion the same animal displayed nervousness, and tried to get away from the plaintiff, on failing to kick the dashboard.

Witness thought that the horse could have been led through the conditions existing on Concession street.

REASONABLE POSITION.

To Mr Hayes, witness said that in his opinion, the conditions in the trouble during his drive in June, were worse than those existing on Concession street. The positions of the watering cart and mixer were, in his opinion, reasonable ones, but they should not have been left there over Sunday, in view of the sidewalk having been completed Saturday afternoon.

WORTH $400.

J. M. Bygott, a livery man, had seen the team, said to be formerly owned by the plaintiff recently. While he had never examined the horses, he would judge them to be worth $400.

Erastus Wood said he bought the team from Mr. Hatton, and knew the reputation of one of the pair. He had heard it had been a runaway, while he paid $250 the value was about $400. He would take that amount now. He had exhibited at fall fairs and won first prize for each entry with the exception of the Peterborough Fair, when he took second. The animal in question was quiet enough now.

To what extent would the value of a horse, acquiring the vice of running away, depreciate? About $75.

And the extent to the team? $175.

FAMILY USED ANIMAL.

To Mr Hayes.—Have you had any trouble with the animal? No.

Has she any vice—does she kick? No. My daughters and boys have driven her. The animal was alright when he purchased the team from Mr. Hatton.

Harry Stapleton, experienced with horses, had seen the team. Before the accident each animal would be worth $200. The conditions on Concession street would make a horse nervous and a young animal would not soon forget it.

ANOTHER CASE.

Mr. F. D. Kerr said he was driving on Concession street about noon on October 31st. His horse nearly ran away. There were obstructions on either side of the road. The horse on noticing the cement pile grew nervous and witness had great difficulty in keeping the vehicle from being overturned.

SAW THE ACCIDENT.

Joseph Whiteman, resides on the east side of Concession street, about forty feet distant from the scene of the accident. He saw the accident from a west window of his home. He had noticed other horses shy at the obstacles on the road.

To Mr Hayes witness explained that the workmen had to place the gravel and sand where it lay, or there would be considerable waste. It would fall down into the ditch if placed at the edge of the road.

To Mr. O'Connell witness stated that the gravel and sand could have been spread so that no obstruction would be caused.

OTHER HORSES SHIED.

Albert A. Fowler resided on Concession street in the month of October, 1909. He noticed the obstructions on Sunday and noticed one horse frighten. One other driver used the whip and got past alright. Witness saw the accident.

Clinton Henry remembered going to Concession street with a conveyance for Mr. Hatton. His horse shied at what witness thought was the mixer. He didn't mind the cement. The animal would shy a little at street cars, etc., and his manner on Concession street was just an ordinary occurrence.

To Mr. Hayes witness said he would be able to turn a horse on a road 24 feet wide.

To Mr. O'Connell witness stated he would have trouble in this if the horse was restless.

LIKELY TO FRIGHTEN.

Mr. R. A. Morrow thought the conditions would very likely frighten an ordinary horse. He wouldn't want a horse that once ran away. He wouldn't buy such an animal. Having regard to the conditions he would think a road, allowing of a space of a space of 24 feet would be unsafe.

DEPRECIATION.

Harry Winch had a lifelong experience with horses. A runaway all depended on the disposition of the horse. It would have a lasting effect on a nervous, highstrung animal. Its value would depreciate. Witness knew Mr. Hatton's team, particularly the one that ran away. At the time he rode behind it and before it ran away, it was kind and gentle. At that time it would be worth about $200.

After running away many people would not care to buy it. There would be a possible depreciation of $75.

To Mr. Hayes witness said had he been a judge at the fairs, the fact of one of the horses having run away would not have figured in his judgment.

To Mr. O'Connel—The fact of the team winning first prize was not proof positive that the animal had not a vicious habit.

WELL MATCHED TEAM.

Mr. G. N. Graham knew Mr. Hatton's animal from a colt. With the object of making a bid, he saw the horse, before the accident, and at that time was worth from $200 to $250. The two horses made a well-matched team and the market value would be $500. The majority of horses would frighten at the conditions on Concession street.

A runaway has the effect upon a horse of giving it a tendency to repeat. It's a case of "what price you can get" with a runaway horse.

NOT TO BE TRUSTED.

Dr. Young said he would not buy a horse that had once ran away. He had been inclined to buy the horse owned by Mr. Hatton, but when told by him that he had once ran away, he refused to purchase the animal. The depreciation in one horse effects the value of the team. Witness did not think the depreciation shown in the sale of the team was too great. Witness had always endeavored to steer clear of the city mixer and the conditions on Concession street were not favorable to a horse. It was dangerous in the daytime and very much so at night.

Witness told Mr. Hatton at the time of consultation that it would probably be a year before he had the proper use of it.

Dr. Boucher made an examination of plaintiff's shoulder in the month of March. Witness told Mr. Hatton he might never become free of pain in selves among what we call the 'rufth earm.

THIS MORNING'S EVIDENCE.

Robt. Mein, of Fitzgerald's carriage works, testified as to the damages sustained to the phaeton. He made out the account of $16.05. The repaired vehicle would not be as good as before the accident.

To Mr Hayes witness said the phaeton before the accident would bring $85 or $90 at a forced sale.

Geo. Fitzgerald placed the value of the phaeton after the accident to Mr. Hatton at $80, and would sell at $60.

To Mr. Hayes.—To what extent would the phaeton after four years' use depreciate. It would be worth $82 or $85.

Harry Evans, street commissioner, said he was in charge of the streets under Mr. Hay, city engineer. He supervised the construction of the sidewalk on Concession street, which ended at the foot of the hill. He was three weeks on this street. The night the sidewalk was finished the mixer was placed at the culvert at Nicholls Park. It was placed on the street during the day. It was about 20 feet in length, 6 1-2 feet high.

You didn't need to use the mixer there any more? No.

Or the watering cart? No.

The most of the material, sand and gravel had been used up. There was more gravel than sand. There wouldn't be a full load of gravel and the quantity of sand was about one quarter of a load.

The heaps of gravel and sand were as close as possible to the edge of the east side of the road, as the quantities left over were not taken away nor scattered. Woodbine avenue was blocked so that traffic could not pass over the soft sidewalk.

It never came into my mind.

When did you move them?

Some time Monday.

Witness explained that sidewalk work was commenced in the middle of May and the machines remained on streets all the time.

Any city yards in Ashburnham? Yes, one.

Where is it? Next to Lipsett's Hotel.

Witness could not swear that cement was left on Concession street. He could say that there was some there on Saturday. The sidewalk was covered for about 159 feet. The sidewalk was lower than the road. The sidewalk gang numbered sixteen. It was not the practice to have a man give warning as to the condition of the road.

Witness didn't think that the gravel and sand heap if left in the middle of the road would cause obstruction, that is, the quantity left over.

On the following Monday morning witness noticed several wheel marks through the gravel and sand. Mr. Hay was with him.

He had heard of the accident. An obstruction on the road at that point would be dangerous. The traffic on the street was extensive, the Smith street bridge being closed.

What was put on the covering on the sidewalk? Anything we could pick up.

To Mr Hayes witness said the road was in good repair. It was the custom to leave the watering cart and mixer on the street during the construction work, but out of the way of traffic as much as possible.

In your opinion and to your judgment is it necessary to leave the material and machinery on the road during construction? It is only a common sense way.

On the day in question the traffic on Concession street was heavy. The machinery was working; there were piles of material on the road; the watering cart and mixer were on the road, but there were no accidents. Some had to be led, others shied. The actions of the horses were natural.

Witness saw the men pushing the mixer and watering cart off from their position of the day to the side of the road. On the Monday morning he used his rule and found the highest point to the heap of gravel to be 12 inches.

What was done with this heap?

Thrown against the sidewalk Monday morning.

The watering cart was placed at Woodbine avenue to block the traffic. Both the watering cart and mixer were taken away Monday to be put away for the winter.

To Mr. O'Connell.—There might have been a teamster present after the mixer stopped work for the day, but witness could not swear positively either way. The wheel marks were to the side of the road. It was possible to draw the mixer away every night but not practicable.

Did you have any other reason for not moving it?

There were lots of reasons.

You could have issued instructions to one of your teamsters to draw the mixer to the yard in Ashburnham every night? Yes.

The graduating exercises of the Nicholls Hospital Training School for Nurses will be held in the Collegiate Institute Hall on Friday evening next, December 2nd, at 8 o'clock.

JEM MACE'S VISIT RECALLED

Garrow, Eng., Nov. 30.—Jem Mace, the veteran prize fighter, died to-day. Mace was one of the old school of fighters who won ring laurels in the days when bare fists were used. For nearly half a century he was one of the leading figures in fight circles in Great Britain.

Mace was 78 years old. Despite his years he was as hard as nails, but had fallen in straitened lines, and last year was compelled to seek an old age pension. Fifty years ago Mace was at his prime, and it is estimated that he fought at least 500 times. In his younger days Mace bore the reputation of being the hardest hitter in the world. For years he wore the crown of heavyweight champion of England before that honor was wrested away from him by Charley Mitchell.

In 1896 Mace came to America and gave a scientific boxing show, meeting Mike Donovan. He entered the ring at the age of 19.

Everybody that ever followed fight lore knew of Jem Mace.

Peterboronians will remember the visit of Mace here several years ago, when he sparred three rounds with his partner at the old opera house. There wasn't a crowd present that threatened to cave the floor, but everybody was enthusiastic, and the old man was loudly applauded for his nimble exhibition of the manly art. Jem only had one hand in commission, and that made him even more popular than if he had had two, and the audience worked up to concert pitch and encouraged him, just as if it had been a real match.

Accompanying Mace was Jim Popp, of Toronto, son of Joe Popp, (and a lightweight who was one of the most peculiar and yet effective 133-pound men that ever upheld Canada's colors in the squared circle. He boxed a twenty-round draw with Frank Erne, when Erne was lightweight champion of the world. Popp will also be remembered as Chris Graham's tutor when the latter was getting into shape for amateur tourneys. When he was here with Mace he boxed four rounds with Jack Hanley, one of Harry Gilmore's proteges, who claimed he could beat any lightweight in America. The assertion was an unfortunate one, however, for Jack Foley, widely known ten or twelve years ago, made a chopping block of Hanley. Although it was only an exhibition here, Popp outpointed his man with ease.

Then there was also with the party "Dick" Collier, the middleweight champion of England. "Jimmy" Graham, brother of Mr. G. N. Graham, gave Collier three rounds that kept him as busy as a bee in June.

CHAMPION MAT ARTIST MAY MEET HACK AGAIN

(By Edward Smith, Sporting Editor of Chicago American.)

Chicago, November 30.—Everybody here believes that Frank Gotch is willing to come out of his shell and wrestle George Hackenschmidt. They say in Iowa, where Gotch has so many close personal friends, that the great champion has retired for good and all, and that he will never be seen in a serious match again.

Yet the fact remains that Gotch is working every day on his farm and it isn't mostly farm work that he is doing either. He actually does road work of a telling character and works as well in the gymnasium. This is a little private place he has fitted up for his own use.

Gotch was asked this afternoon over the long distance 'phone, on behalf of the Montreal Star, if he would wrestle Hackenschmidt if the "Lion" cleaned up all the other foreign and the remainder of the American stars.

"Well, why should I meet him again?" he asked in return. "I beat him once, and have retired now."

"But they say you are working right along. What is that for, if you do not intend to wrestle again?"

"Well, now you are getting right down to business, aren't you?" came the reply with a laugh.

"Now, that you put it that way, I hardly know how to answer you. I don't need the money, but I suppose there would be a pot of it offered for the meeting, wouldn't there?"

"Montreal, you say! Well, well. $[illegible]00 is an enormous sum and we ought to take it. But I won't say that I will make such a match. Of course, if the "Lion" gets too fresh and forward, he must be taught a lesson. I suppose that—please don't quote me as saying that I will wrestle again. I made up my mind to retire and feel like keeping that resolution. But if there should be a great public clamor for me to come out and wrestle, I might consider it. But I am not making anybody any promises. You'll have to let it go at that."

Gotch would say nothing more material or definite, than this, and the questioner rang off, after being assured by Gotch that he was feeling fine and was glad to know that people were still interested in him.

BEAU BRUMMELL OF PRIZE RING

None of the "good dressers" among the pugilists have anything on Charlie Griffin, the Australian lightweight. In his palmiest days "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien was a [illegible] compared to the dapper little man from the land of the kangaroo.

With his gold-headed cane, his frock coat, top hat, correct trousers and patent leather shoes, Griffin makes such sartorial experts as Jim Corbett, Kid McCoy, and T. Burns look like imitations.

Anyway you take him, Griffin is different. Like Bat Nelson, he believes fighters are looked down on because of the escapades of a few, and that if the public was to come more in contact with them, they would be found as genteel and refined as many in other walks.

Griffin believes in dressing as well as possible, although not obtrusively. While he does not think the clothes make the man, he is firm in the conviction that dress makes the impression, so he attires himself [illegible], and wears the glad rags up to the minute here.

"A fighter can be a gentleman if he wants to be one," says the natty little chap. "Dontcherknow boys," he says, "aw—we of the ring are considered tough, but it is the foolish lads who are forced to exist as best they can and it is the wearing of these blooming old sweaters that creates the impression. One does not need to be—aw—tough, to be a pugilist."

It requires close inspection to discover marks of combat on Griffin's face. He believes that the style of some fighters is responsible for "tin ears," and he has avoided this, for above all else he likes to make "a good appearance. The clever boxers who avoid toe or toe milling, not the boys who bore in, carry the scars he says.

Griffin is seeking a match with Packey McFarland, and if he is successful he will remain in this country for a time. Failing to meet Packey he will go to Kansas City, and from there to San Francisco. He expects to sail for Australia about the first of the year.

COACH FOR JUNIOR TEAM

The executive of the junior hockey team met at the Examiner office last night and then called on Dr. Wightman, securing him as the fifth member of the committee.

The members discussed matters pertaining to the welfare of the team, the prospects for which are exceedingly bright. There is considerable material, and a coach of experience has been secured.

SPORTING COMMENT

It is said that the game of football originated with the early Celtic inhabitants of England. It was immensely popular all through the middle ages, and was always very dangerous. It was repeatedly censured and opposed by the authorities, and an attempt at its suppression was made under Henry VII, Henry VIII and Elizabeth, but like those who indulge in it, the game was hard to kill, though from 1650 to 1725 it did not flourish.

The game has, like lacrosse, changed almost entirely in character since its inception. The English game of rugby gets its name through the fact that the great boys' school at that place first adopted it. It is a more open game than the Canadian, and less strenuous.

In football, as in most other things, we have been influenced by our cousins to the south. The United States people evolved a game—really a reversion to an archaic type—which for brute force made the English game look like a ladies' pastime. We adopted many of their features, added a few of our own, and the foundation of the game as played at present was laid.

Mr. R. M. Glover, the veteran hockey player, of Peterborough, was in town this morning, and in discussing hockey matters, said that the Electric City would have a pretty fair team for the intermediate series of the O.H.A. In asking what the prospects were in Lindsay for hockey this year, the information was given that there was nothing done as yet towards organizing.—Lindsay Post.

Some class to this wager. Two local cobalt handlers have the idea that there is just as much to be made out of the weather as in chasing the ponies. The bet is $5 to $1 that the sleighing will go away before Christmas.

GEERS BIG STABLE

Advices received from the south state that Ed Geers, the master reinsman, is as busy as ever at Memphis, with his Grand Circuit performers of 1911. The master of American reinsmen should have a great season next year.

The Harvester 2.01, retires for the season in superb condition, and prominent also in the silent man's stable are Dubie Archdale 2.06 1-4; The Hugenot, trial 2.12, owned by Arthur H. Parker, of Shawsheen River Farm, Bedford; High Admiral (2) 2.16 3-4, by Admiral Dewey 2.04 3-4; Arie Leyburn 2.14 1-4; three green mares of great promise, Eva Cord by Silk Cord, by Prodigal, 2.16, Viola Strong by Strong Boy 2.11 1-4, and Lady Alice by Allerton, 2.09 1-4.

Also among the prospects are Lady Willow, 2.24 1-2, by Minotaur; Peter Rede 2.17 1-4, and Peter Boy (2), trial 2.23 1-4, both by Peter the Great 2.07 1-4.

Among the promising two-year-olds are Judge Hal, by The Abbe 2.04, and Blue Feather by Walnut Hall 2.08 1-4. There are also quite a promising host of youngsters by Bingen, Peter the Great, Moko and Walnut Hall.

Gus Macey, the Lexington sulky knight, is preparing to leave for Denver in a few days. He declared that after Colorado E., 2.04 3-4, the world's champion three-year-old trotter, has served a few mares in the spring he will have only light work for the remainder of the season, and that starting as a five-year-old in 1912 he will trot the fastest mile ever stepped by a trotter.

There seems to be no question in the southerner's mind but what he can win the classic M. and M. in 1911 with Lily W., who can trot in 2.07. Macey thinks his pacer C The Limit will pace in two minutes flat next season.

The other Easterbrook horses that are in the list for the Grand Circuit in 1911 are Nancy Gentry 2.08 3-4, Fanny Lawson, Dorothy Axworthy, Aris by Arion 2.07 3-4, and McKinney Mac (1) 2.27 1-2.

DISPOSAL OF GARBAGE

(Stratford Beacon)

The following will give some idea of how garbage is disposed of in large cities:

Liverpool collects a thousand tons of refuse a day. Nearly all of it is put to some use.

In Edinburgh waste paper to be placed upon the pavement for the street cleaners must be tied in bundles. The city sells and ships to farmers horse droppings taken up by street cleaners.

Some of the street cleaners' gatherings sold by Glasgow last year were: Clinker for $61,916; tin, light iron, etc., $20,249; scrap iron, $38,075; waste paper, $32,694; bottles, $1,279.

Hamburg, Germany, carts some of its garbage and house refuse into the outlying districts, where the stuff is plowed under the fields as fertilising material. The rest of it is incinerated. The product of the incinerating furnaces goes upon the market. The iron is sold at public auction, and the slag is also disposed of. The fine cinders go as a top dressing on the promenades, other sizes as a top dressing on roads, the largest into road foundations. It is also used in concrete. Another use of it to-day is for filling material between floors and ceilings.

SHOW LOW.

Dillon Wallace on his horseback tour through the Rockies tells his experiences in the Outing Magazine. Mr. Wallace started in Arizona and one night, stopping at the town of Show Low, heard from the founder the origin of the name. Here is the story as it was told to Mr. Wallace:

Some twenty years ago Show Low formed part of the extensive cattle ranch and range of Cooley & Huning, and twenty years ago it received its name through a game of seven-up between the partners for ownership. I heard the story from Mr. Cooley himself, still a large rancher and one of the best known cattlemen in Arizona. This is the story as he told it to me:

"Huning and I were playing a game of seven-up to see who should make bread for supper and wash the dishes. We stood 5 to 6 in Huning's favor. Seven, you know, is the game. Diamonds were trumps. On the last hand I drew the ace and the trey. I banked on the deuce being still in the deck. The ace counted one, and if Huning didn't hold the deuce the trey was low and the game was mine.

"'Make the game worth while,' says I. 'Let it be $10,000 or the ranch.'

"'It's a go,' said Huning.

"I covered the center spot on my trey.

"'Now,' said I, 'show low and it's yours.'

"And, hang him, he showed the deuce and won."

Huning later disposed of the ranch in small parcels to settlers, and the little village came into being and took its name, as did the creek, of Show Low from that game of cards.

PRIZE FOR BOOK LOVERS.

A Copy of "Titus Andronicus" That Is Almost Priceless.

Three hundred and fifteen years ago it is probable that some stranger from Sweden, traveling in England, bought at the door of a London theater—the Rose or the Curtain, perhaps—a small, thin quarto volume. He paid sixpence for it as a memento of his visit to a London playhouse. It was not worth more than that, at least to any one critical of printing or literary art or of morals.

Yet this same little book was not long ago discovered in the house of a countrywoman in Sweden, and today it is almost priceless. Dealers in such treasures have vied with one another to obtain possession of the work.

This sixpenny quarto, hidden in Sweden for 300 years, is the only copy known to exist of the first edition of the play of "Titus Andronicus," printed in 1594. Students were long aware that the play was then printed, but it was believed that the entire edition had been lost. Then the chance discovery added one more to the small number of unique books in the world and again illustrated the importance attaching to any smallest bit of Shakespeareana.

"Titus Andronicus" was possibly not by Shakespeare, but it was doubtless revised by him, it was acted by his company, and a few lines in it were written by him. Because of this slender connection with one of the greatest geniuses the world has known this single play has a value that makes it a coveted prize for book lovers the world over.—New York Tribune.

Hawaiian Mahogany For Ties.

E. O. Faulkner, head of the forestry department of the Santa Fe, recently returned from Honolulu, where he went to sign a contract for the entire output of ohia ties of the Hawaiian Islands. Ohia is the heaviest wood known and is also one of the hardest. It is a species of mahogany, very knotty and unsplitable. Experiments have demonstrated that it is affected but little by the continuous pounding of heavy rolling stock and for that reason it is being used in curves, where strength and durability are of the greatest importance and cost is a matter of secondary consideration.—Los Angeles Express.

In the Same Boat.

Representative Harry Maynard of Virginia was riding in one of the capitol elevators when he noticed that the elevator man was tipsy.

"You ought not to drink when you are on duty," remonstrated Maynard. "You might have some terrible accident running a car when you're not in full command of your faculties. You might kill a lot of statesmen."

"Humph!" replied the elevator man. "Ain't I taking as long chances as they are?"—Washington Star.

Memorial to Good Women.

There is to be a lady chapel in the new Liverpool cathedral, for which is planned a scheme of stained glass windows commemorating the deeds of good women. On one the inscription reads "Queen Victoria and All Noble Queens," and others are inscribed "Grace Darling and All Courageous Women." "Catherine Gladstone and All Loyal Hearted Wives," "Elizabeth Barrett Browning and All Women Who Have Seen the Infinite in Things."

Celluloid Brushes.

Brushes made with celluloid backs are fairly common, but a Parisian firm is now selling brushes which have the hairs or bristles made of that material, so that the brush is entirely of celluloid. It is claimed that these brushes, while answering every purpose for which the ordinary article is used, are easier to clean and that the celluloid bristles do not retain dirt and impurities.

James Blake, proprietor of the Arlington Hotel, Hamilton, was fined $50 for selling liquor to Indians.

THE RULING PASSION.

An Editor's Parlance of the "Shop" at a Funeral.

The following characteristic anecdote is told now and again of a great and good editor who had an unusual knack of finding fit words for unusual occasions:

The great man was seated one winter morning many years ago in his sanctum when a reporter gained admittance. He had come to tell his chief of a lamentable occurrence. One of the paper's nondescript hangers-on, it seemed, had been overtaken by a blizzard on his way home the night before and, being at the time somewhat fuddled with liquor, had perished of cold in a doorway. So far as any one knew, he had neither relatives nor friends.

The editor was touched by the story and proposed that the staff bury the body. Accordingly several reporters were detached for the afternoon and accompanied the editor to the burying ground.

It was dismal weather for the business they had in hand. The snow was still falling, and the thought of the poor fellow who had perished overnight, homeless in the midst of a thousand homes, weighed pretty heavily on the men's spirits. It was a long drive to the cemetery, and they were forced to stop now and again to get warm. By the time they arrived at their destination the cemetery gates were locked, and they prevailed with difficulty upon the caretaker to permit them to place the body in a vault overnight. Meantime darkness had descended.

The hearse was finally backed up to the vault door and the coffin lifted out. As the bearers were struggling with their burden across a bit of intervening turf covered with snow one of them lost his footing. The coffin rocked and swayed. It looked for a moment as if disaster were impending.

The ruins of successive human habitations unearthed in Asia show how man advanced from primeval savagery to the pomp of Babylon and Nineveh. First he improved the caves in which he dwelt by leveling the floors and cutting windows to give him light. Afterward he constructed entirely artificial habitations for himself, at first roughly made tents of boughs and leaves, then huts of mud and finally dwellings of wood and stone.

"There are several names for it," explained the talkative boarder. "It may be called the dehorned conundrum or the amputated conundrum or the half point conundrum. It's a conundrum that has had its enacting clause stricken out. Here's a sample: 'The one is a Barkis that's willin', and the other is a Willis that's barkin'.'"

"But what is the question that goes with it?" asked the argumentative boarder.

"There isn't any question that goes with it. It has been deprived of its interrogation point. That is why it may be called a half point conundrum."

Nobody said anything in rejoinder.

But the table groaned.—Chicago Tribune.

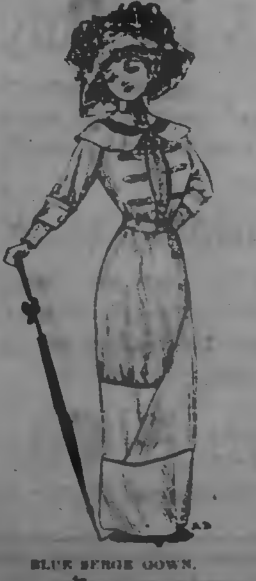
BY MRS. A. T. ASHMORE.

A BECOMING hat is the most comforting article of clothing a woman can possess, and it is confidently asserted that the women who are the most admired for their appearance take unlimited time in selecting each and every hat they purchase. With the hair becomingly and fashionably arranged and with a smart new hat, a shabby old gown will scarcely be noticed, because the hat will at once challenge attention.

[illegible] eccentric, but how could they be otherwise in this day, when eccentricity reigns supreme? A conservative, modest hat would be quite out of keeping with an exaggeratedly tight skirt or fantastically cut jacket. At the same time there is every indication that there is a reaction at work at the present extremes in dress, and the hats are less and less blatantly conspicuous. There is great diversity in shape and size. So large are many of the evening hats that the hat of last winter, considered huge, now looks quite too small, but there are quite as many of medium size and even exaggeratedly small shapes that are very smart and very becoming.



BLUE SERGE GOWN.

To wear with the tailored street gown there are any number of small turbans, round and with brims that are turned back around the entire hat. There are pointed conical shapes, a more than hint of the dunce cap, this last made higher by one or two stiff feathers or a "fantaisie," and it must be admitted one and all are smart and attractive.

So much now depends upon how the hair is arranged in the choice of the shape. The amount of hair, natural or false, has a lot to do with how the hat looks on the head, and while there is something rather attractive and coquettish in the hat pulled down over the head, unless there is sufficient hair to hold out the hat from the face the effect is grotesque rather than smart. Many milliners contend that the band, or halo, inside the crown of the hat spoils the shape and holds the hat too far from the head, but in many cases it is imperative that there be something inside the crown to hold up the hat. It may look as though it were far down on the head. In reality it is held up from it.

The number of different materials used is quite remarkable this season. Satin, velvet, cloth, beaver and, for later in the winter, fur are all included in the category, while in addition there are theatre hats of embroidered silk, net tulle and lace. Then there is quite as much variety in color as material, while the ever faithful all black hat is as popular as ever, and just as necessary to the completion of the winter outfit. It is quite a mooted question whether the black hat is not smarter with even the colored costume, but there are many women to whom the all black hat is not becoming and who look better in a hat that matches the gown. It is all a matter of individual taste, to be decided by what is the more becoming. For the meantime there is a great demand for the smart, becoming all black hat that looks well with all gowns.

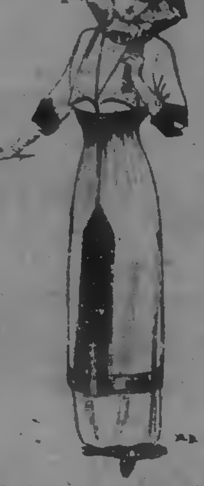
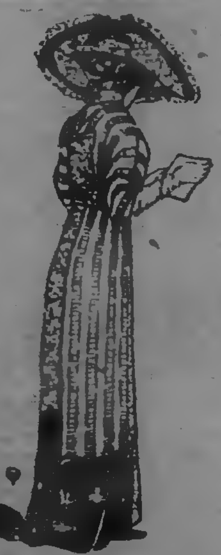
Satin hats were so fashionable in Paris last summer that it was thought they would be quite the smartest hats of the autumn, but they are not conspicuously popular, and quite as many beaver and velvet are already to be noticed. A becoming smart black satin hat is a delightful thing to own, but the material is in itself hard and unbecoming, and when put over too hard and stiff a frame does not look as one could wish. Over the softer frames it is much better, and the larger shapes are more becoming than the small. Combined with another material or trimmed effectively, satin hats are delightful for autumn wear, and it is really more sensible to have different materials for the different seasons. The all feather hats, so fashionable in Paris at this time of year, have never been popular in America. This year there are more to be seen, and it is to be desired that the fashion will eventually be accepted, for, like the satin hats, these should be a between season style.

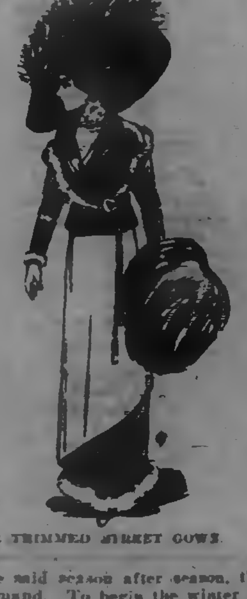


GREEN CLOTH AND VELVET GOWN.



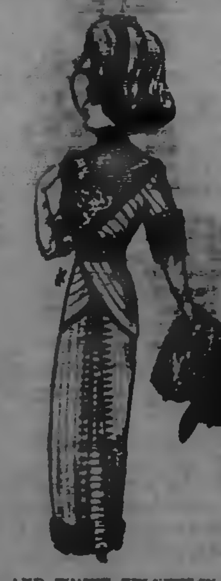
CLOTH AND VELVET GOWN.

Velvet hats are so universally becoming and smart that year after year, and now it may be said season after season, they are in demand. To begin the winter the fashionable woman invariably orders a small black velvet hat; later there is the larger shape required and also the large velvet trimmed if not entirely velvet theatre hat! There is no hard and fast rule as to the trimming; ostrich feathers, aigrettes and eggets, bows of ribbon, bird of paradise plumes and stiff loops of lace or tulle all are smart and effective. This season it is fashionable to put colored feathers on the black velvet hats—blue, white, wood color, gray, black and white and gray and white—these last most wonderful examples of fine feather work. A fashion of long ago has also been revived on the trimming of grebe feathers—the breasts, not the wings. This is a solid trimming, looking more like fur than feathers at a distance, and is fashionable not only for millinery, but for gowns, bands of it being used on velvet coats and costumes. On black or dark blue it is especially smart.



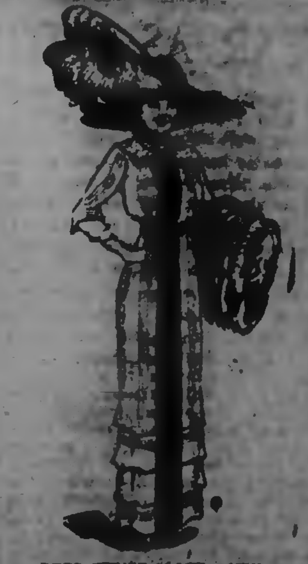
FUR TRIMMED STREET GOWN.

White aigrettes or white feathers on the black or dark blue velvet hats are always striking in effect and as a rule becoming. At the moment fashion demands that there shall be a lot of white used, but fashion may command and individual taste will only accede in so far as may be becoming, and too much white in the trimming of a hat never seems quite so smart as when there is only a small quantity. A black velvet hat, all black, extremely simple in design, is most popular, and this has but one touch of white in a stiff, thick, short aigrette placed quite far toward the back and at the left side. It is thrust through the band of velvet that encircles the crown and is the only trimming. It is in marked contrast to the all around band of [illegible] that is to be seen on one of the smart winter shapes.



BLACK AND WHITE VELVETEEN GOWN.

Theatre hats—the title is a misnomer, for the rule is accepted that only in the boxes at the theatre can hats be worn—are really designed for the dinner or supper at the fashionable restaurants. The exaggeratedly large hats come under this classification, but there are also most fascinating small toques and turbans, extremely becoming to both the younger and older women, designed to be worn with elaborate theatre and restaurant gowns. The draped turban of tulle was one of the favorite styles of last spring, but it is again included with the winter fashions, only with such variations as make it seem quite new. The fabrics of lace net, brocaded and embroidered satin and velvets all are possible; the hat to look really smart must give the effect of folds of material tied around the head, and if a study is made of the Turkish turban a most satisfactory up to date hat can be evolved.



DEEP CERISE CLOTH GOWN.

Such high prices are asked for hats this winter that the first visits paid to the fashionable milliners are, to say the least, depressing to the woman of good taste and limited income. There are shapes and trimmings quite impossible to copy, for in one case it is a carefully worked out beauty of line, in another it is a costly trimming—that is, costly in itself and not always because fashion has made it so. But this is not a season when all hats are high priced or impossible to copy. All the department shops are exhibiting fascinatingly attractive shapes that can perfectly well be trimmed by amateur talent, there are countless trimmings that are comparatively inexpensive, and it really would be a crime for a woman to go about with an unbecoming hat and give the excuse that she could not afford to buy anything better.

THE SCARF

MOST important of all details of the present style of dress is the scarf, which is worn both day and evening—not the same scarf, be it understood, but a scarf in keeping with each individual gown, the sole exception being the black satin lined with white. Originally intended for street wear was this scarf, and it is really most suitable for that purpose. If it is desired to have it really warm there is one thickness of flannel put between the outside and inside. White on the inside makes this scarf most becoming, and the smartest have the white an inch wider than the black, so that when it is worn close around the [illegible] is against the face [illegible] effect than black.

[illegible] and a half to three yards long and from three-eighths to half a yard wide and [illegible] gathered into long silk tassels in the [illegible]. The [illegible] makes [illegible] scarfs, for the wider satins are wide enough to be cut in halves; and it is the length, not the width, that is required.

With evening gowns the thinner scarfs are smartest. Net bordered with a wide band of satin is the newest style—this in white or colored all being in fashion. The chiffon scarfs are warmer than the net, but not so warm as the crepe de chine, which last, bordered with marabout trimming, are made to match any gown.

FEAR AS MOTIVE IN RELIGION

The special meetings which are being held this week in St. Paul's are being well attended, and a deep impression is being made upon those who come. The pastor spoke last night on the text "By Faith Noah, Being Warned of God of Things Not Seen as Yet, Moved with Fear Prepared An Ark for the Saving of His Household." He spoke of fear as a motive in religion. Some object to this motive being used. But why? Fear is a natural sentiment. It is as natural to fear as to hope, or trust, or love. It is a motive which is exercised in other spheres. It is the fear of failure that keeps business men from foolhardy investments. It is the fear of poverty and want that compels some men to work. It is not the highest motive, but it is a legitimate one. It is better to act through fear than not to act at all. It is not an unmanly thing to be afraid. In the great earthquake which wrought such havoc in San Francisco a few years ago, men did the manly thing, the rational thing, the right thing, when, moved with fear they fled into the street to escape death in the falling ruin. Our Lord Himself appealed to the motive of fear. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Some of the most wonderful conversions in the New Testament were the result of being moved with fear. The three thousand who were converted on the day of Pentecost were moved with fear when they cried "Sirs, what must we do?" God never brings judgment upon a nation without previous distinct and intelligible warnings. He warned Sodom through Lot. He warned the Egyptians through the Israelites. He warned the Israelites through their prophets. He warned Nineveh through Jonah. He warned Jerusalem and Judea through Christ and apostles. Well, will it be for you if you are moved with fear, and heed His warnings and flee from the wrath to come. And God only warns that He may save. When He told Noah that He would destroy the world for its wickedness, He made provision for the salvation of all who would avail themselves of it. Jesus Christ is the sinner's refuge; He is the sinner's hope. What the ark was to Noah, Christ is to all who trust Him. "Come Thou and all Thy House into the Ark." Those who trust in Christ are secure. There is a legend that a French Bishop, fleeing from his enemies, came with twelve companions to the seashore. At their wits' end to know what to do, they found two driftwood logs lying on the beach. They pushed them into the water and cast themselves upon them. The logs shaped themselves into the form of a cross, and they were borne by favorable winds to the Flemish shore. Thus the Bishop and his friends were saved. And the lesson of that legend is that no one ever cast himself upon the Crucified Christ, conscious of his own utter helplessness, who was not saved.

The singing last night by Miss Davies and by Mr. Mulligan was much appreciated and deepened the impression made by a very earnest message. Both will again this evening. Mr. Pogue will preach on the words "What Shall I do Then With Jesus Who is called Christ?"

FARMERS' INSTITUTE MET AT LAKEFIELD

Valuable Addresses on Agricultural Subjects by Able Speakers—The Reports of the Afternoon and Evening Sessions—Successful Meetings.

The regular winter district meetings under the auspices of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute were commenced yesterday at Ennismore, in the Town Hall. Mr. J. H. Garbutt, president of the Society, presided at both the afternoon and evening sessions. The afternoon session began at two o'clock. Mr. Garbutt made a short address and then introduced Mr. Anson Groh of Preston.

Mr. Groh's subject was, "Lucerne and other clover." If a man knows that his land is suited to 'alfalfa' it would mean millions to him if he would grow it, he said. The question is, are you more interested in what you grow or in the feeding of your stock? If you have cheese factories, you should have dairy cows and the very best that you can procure. If you will weigh your milk and test your cows you will understand them better.

There is also a satisfaction in knowing that again there is the boy on the farm. He will not stay, unless he is accomplishing something. But when they are getting along well and improving the stock they are filled with enthusiasm. Then you want to learn to feed. If the farmer develops, the farm develops, and the boy develops.

So far as feeding is concerned, we have scientists and we are glad to have them. A practical farmer makes discoveries but cannot explain them. Then the scientist does it. I am not a scientist, but I can say a little more of it. You want to know why and where for you do things, so that we should classify things. We have different things to feed. We don't feed much June grass in the winter time. If you took 100 lbs. of June grass and took the water away, you would only have left 34.0 lbs. of dry matter. And we could go on the whole afternoon and discuss the different things, but we will discuss the whole thing from the standpoint of the succulent food. White clover is found among the June grass, but white clover is not used much in this country. You confine yourselves among what we call the 'ruffage' and then we get down to the chops or concentrates, so we have the three classes of foods. All other foods are used, we might say, to fill them up, especially the 'ruffage' for that purpose. Then there is a point in the watering of cattle. A cow needs energy and heat. If cows are turned out and have to drink out of a frozen pond, they need both heat and energy and must have proper food to produce this. And when they are watered and in a warm stable with tempered water, it makes a big difference in the requirements of the food. We want to combine foods, but we want to know what kind we want to feed and what we want to grow. Green grass, for instance is too snappy and we want a certain amount of protein, or fat producing matter each day. Feeding hay, we must feed a cow a hundred pounds a day to give her the amount of protein she needs, and if you don't feed her 100 lbs. of hay you will not get the amount of milk you need. So that is the way it is, for we are not stuffing cows. You can't get a cow to eat enough timothy hay to give her protein enough, but feed her alfalfa and she gets something she likes and produces what she wants, but don't feed a cow for six months on alfalfa hay alone, or anything else. It is too dry, and alfalfa only works out as far as bulk and heat is concerned, so feed them corn ensilage. Feed 25 lbs. a day or perhaps add 8 lbs. and where you do this cut off about 1-3 of the alfalfa, and then the question is, 'is she getting protein enough?' No, she will lose; she has not enough succulents. That is why we must have concentrates, chop, etc. We must have the concentrates to make the food so much richer. You must combine the foods to keep up their heat and energy. This must be digestive and stuff that they will relish. Timothy hay won't work out. Alfalfa won't do alone. Concentrates will not do alone, so therefore we must combine them. Your timothy hay won't do. It would take a ton of timothy hay and ½ ton of alfalfa hay to make up as much fat as a ton of bran. The grain is the expensive part of the food, so you must mix them to balance the food. You don't have to plough up your field, to grow alfalfa, but you do to grow timothy. You will pay threshers to thresh your grain that you may mix it with your bad hay. Grow alfalfa and you will not need to mix so much grain.

There is another side to the question. A man must keep the weeds down. With alfalfa cut twice a year you have few weeds, but fertility is the question. When you grow alfalfa you have eight times as much; that is twice as much per acre, and you have more fertility in the soil than before you grew the crop. It belongs to the plant that gets its nitrogen from the air. The timothy gets its food from the surface and therefore makes the land poorer. Besides, the roots are near the surface. But the alfalfa goes away down where no other plant goes, and when you plough up those roots they rot. They go away down below the surface, where no farm implement will reach. Make the surface rich, and never mind the sub surface. The roots go away down and rot and make the land rich. On my farm, there are two fields of grain, two fields in clover and two fields in alfalfa. I only change these fields about twice in five years. You can change them to kill weeds or to improve your land. Of course, clover will die, if grown on the same field more than two years, but alfalfa will last for 60 years. But too much pasturing, or water too near the surface, or blue grass, will kill it. This will force us to change it once in seven or eight years. I don't like pasturing much on it. It is not dangerous to let cattle pasture on it, but take them off in good time. It's good for the stock, but it's not good for the hay crop. It is hard to kill in this country, but if the ground is properly ploughed it will kill it. As soon as your separate your crown, you kill your plant. You should sow about 18 lbs. of seed per acre."

In sowing fall wheat on alfalfa ground, you might get a catch, and you might not, but you run more risk unless ground is well cleaned. I think the whole thing is, that we are growing too much timothy."

The report of the meetings will be concluded in to-morrow's issue.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT MARK STREET

The address given by R. H. Whiteside last night was listened to with very deep interest by the people at Mark street, many regarding it as one of the most effective talks he has given in connection with the series of meetings now being held.

His theme was "The Sold Birthright," taken from He. 12:16, in the elaboration of which the folly of much of the present day bargaining and temporizing was made to appear. In closing his remarks he earnestly called upon men and women in the name of God to use their brains, and not allow themselves to be robbed of their God-given heritage. As on former nights, there were a number of decisions registered.

Two most beautiful duettes were sung during the service by Mr. Thornton and Miss Callander.

On Friday night Mr. Thornton is expected to assist in song again in the male quartette with which he is associated.

Special music will be heard to-night.

No. 8 Company

A meeting of No. 8 Company, for the purpose of organizing an indoor baseball team, will be held at the company's room in the armories Saturday evening at 7.30 o'clock. All members of the company interested in the sport are asked to be on hand.

Boy Scouts

Peewit Boy Scouts will meet in the armories at 7.45 Friday evening to march to the Market Hall to attend the band concert. All boys wishing to join the organization will kindly be at the armories Saturday night at 7 o'clock. Dr. McPherson will lecture on Saturday night from 9 to 9.30.

Children's Meetings

The children's meetings at Gospel Hall are being well attended. Mr. A. McMurdo has an exceptionally fine gift for teaching the little ones. His "chalk-talks" on Pilgrim's Progress are extremely diverting and helpful both for young and old. Don't miss hearing him to-night at 7 o'clock. The gospel meeting at 8 o'clock as usual. Speakers, Messrs. McMurdo and Walker. Come.

HAS ACCEPTED THE INVITATION

Rev. Dr. Shorey, the popular pastor of the Methodist Church, has accepted an invitation from the Cambridge Street Methodist Church, Lindsay, to become their pastor for the next conference year. Rev. Dr. Shorey is completing the fourth year of a successful pastorage here, and there is general regret that he cannot remain longer.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, the present pastor of the Lindsay Church, goes to Napanee to succeed Rev. W. H. Emsley, president of the Bay of Quinte Conference, who goes to the First Methodist Church at Picton.

Dr. Shorey received a number of other invitations.—Cobourg World.

THE CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

A short time ago, in answer to the question "What Canadian magazine have we to take the place of foreign women's journals?" the Montreal Gazette replied, "Write to The Canadian Home Journal, Toronto, for a sample copy." We are glad to give the same suggestion to our readers. It is a magazine of splendid quality and interest that must appeal to all Canadians.

December is a cheery, attractive number, breathing the Christmas spirit. It has very excellent stories. "The Turn of the Tide," by Virna Sheard; "The Comforting of Eugene" which must recall the many small troubles of childhood that seemed so momentous; "The Unconfessed Cross," by Katherine Hale; "A Pound of Tea" by Marion Waltham; some interesting chapters from Mrs. McClung's successful book, "The Second Chance," and the serial novel, "Jeanne of the Marshes," by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Christmas is the great "home" day, and next best to being home are letters from the folks, and remembrances, however small the intrinsic value may be. Even on opposite sides of the earth the wanderers unite to celebrate, and so far as possible to reproduce the home atmosphere. Nan Moulton tells of a South African Yule-tide in "Christmas in Natal." A new chapter in the life of Dickens, that great lover of Christmas, is interestingly told in "Dickens at Broadstairs," by Emily Weaver.

The children are well remembered in this Christmas number with a prize rebus, geographical puzzles, and a geographical Christmas dinner. There are prize stories, too, that the children tell about their pets.

Christmas suggestions fill many pages; there are novel and attractive table decorations, well illustrated from photographs; decorations for rooms; plans for Christmas entertainments, games, fortune telling, charades; Christmas menus and recipes appeal to the housekeeper who is looking for something a little different.

OBITUARY

MRS ANN ROCHE.

Yesterday's Lindsay Post says:—The death occurred this morning at the family homestead, lot 15, con 7, Ops, of Mrs. Ann Roche, wife of Mr. Patrick Roche, in her seventy-eighth year.

The deceased lady was born in Ireland, and after living a short time in the United States, moved to Canada, residing in Otonabee, Peterborough county, and afterwards to Douro township in the same county. Deceased had been a resident of Ops for about thirty years. She had been ill for some years, but her condition did not assume a serious phase until two days ago.

The late Mrs. Roche is survived by her husband, one son, James, of Ops, and two daughters, Mrs. Wm. McCabe, Ops, and Mrs. Dr. Hourigan, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The funeral will take place on Friday morning from the family residence at 8.30 o'clock to St. Mary's church, and thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery.

W. H. RACKHAM

This morning at five o'clock, at 474 Gilmour Street, a well known citizen of Peterborough for the past forty years, passed away in his sixty-first year, in the person of W. H. Rackham. His death was the result of a rather protracted illness of a chronic character. The late Mr. Rackham was a native of Norfolk, England, and came to Canada in 1871, and has been a resident of Peterborough since that time. He was for some time engaged in farming, but for some years past he has been living retired in the town. In his early years of residence he took an active interest in military matters, and was one of the first officers of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, at the time of its organization in 1875. He leaves behind one sister, Mrs. A. G. Bradley, Rye, Sussex, England; and two brothers, Rev. H. F. Rackham, Sawbridgeworth, England; and Mr. Walter Rackham of San Francisco. DIAZ AGAIN PRESIDENT; ELECTED FOR EIGHTH TIME

Recent Disturbances in Mexico Are Responsible for a Lack of Gaiety, But None of the Ceremony of Administering the Oath of Office is Neglected.

Mexico City, Dec. 2.—"It is very gratifying to me to say that my heart is full of faith in the progress of the people, who, like the Mexican, has known how to conquer by its own efforts a place among the lovers of toil, after having proved its valor in patriotic defence of country, and that never as to-day could I declare that Mexico belongs definitely to the group of new nations of assured stability, because against the firm guarantee of peace which we possess, no influence tending toward its dissolution can now or ever shall be able to prevail.

"As to the relations between Mexico and the United States and other friendly nations, never have they been more cordial."

The above is the authorized message of President Diaz to all nations on the day of his inauguration for the eighth time as chief executive of the Mexican nation, given expression through the medium of the Associated Press.

Peaceably and seemingly as a happy termination of the turmoil through which the nation has just passed, the ceremonies attending the taking of the oaths by General Diaz and Ramon Corrail, recently re-elected President and Vice-President, were conducted yesterday.

There was no discordant note and if the occasion was shorn of brilliant features of former years by reason of recent disturbance, there was no lack of dignified ceremonial.

Notwithstanding a realization that the possibility of any attempt by foes of the Diaz administration to interfere with yesterday's inauguration was remote, there was a feeling of relief apparent when the event was concluded.

There will be no change in the personnel of the Cabinet. In accordance with custom, each Minister submitted his resignation, but was asked to retain his portfolio.

HOSPITAL DESTROYED

Patients at Weston Sanitarium Have Narrow Escape.

Toronto, Dec. 2.—Fire breaking out in the engine room of the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives at Weston shortly after 2.30 yesterday morning, destroyed that building and necessitated the hurried removal of forty patients in the burned wing to nearby buildings. Half a hundred others in other hospital buildings also dressed hurriedly. It was stated late yesterday that none appeared any the worse for their experience, though one, a young man, Charles Gorman, who had been at death's door, succumbed during the day. Heroic conduct by the nurses and attendants undoubtedly prevented a casualty list.

The property destroyed was the main building of brick, two storeys, nurses' cottage, dining-rooms, and a two-storey roughcast building used for patients and as a kitchen. In addition most of the furnishings, food supplies and drugs are gone. The total loss is estimated at around $100,000, with insurance of some $30,000, distributed: Atlas, $16,500; Anglo American, $5,688; Gore, $3,187; Rimouski, $3,187; Economical, $3,188.

The patients, as they were assisted—many of them carried—from the burning building, were taken first to the King Edward Sanitarium nearby, where they were given stimulants. Yesterday thirty of them were sent by special train to the Gravenhurst Sanitarium.

McINTOSH SEEN AT KINGSTON

Kingston, Dec. 2.—Edward E. McIntosh, wanted in Toronto by the provincial police, was here this week Henry O'Brien, clerk at the Randolph Hotel, says he was at the hotel on Wednesday to call for his mail. Not having been seen since, it is supposed he was given the tip that a warrant was issued for him, and skipped out. It is supposed he crossed the border. O'Brien recognized McIntosh by a cut in a paper. McIntosh did not stay at the hotel, and it is believed he was boarding at a private house. The police of the city and county are looking for him.

THE FRENCH DISPLACING THE ENGLISH

Sherbrooke, Dec. 2.—The French-speaking population is increasing and the English-speaking decreasing in the eastern townships. This was shown very conclusively at Bedford, when the school commissioners of the townships sold three buildings, that had formerly been used as English-speaking schools, because there were no scholars. The English-speaking farmers are selling out to the French and going west.

WILL BE NO RATE WAR

Chicago, Dec. 2.—First-class passenger fares between Chicago and New York, over the Michigan Central and the Pan-Handle routes will be $20 after Jan. 15, according to advices received here late yesterday, subsequent to a secret meeting in New York between the representatives of these roads and of the Erie, Wabash, and Grand Trunk. This lays to rest the prediction of slashing rates and unprofitable competition.

Want St. Charles Dredged.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—The Quebec Board of Trade sent a deputation to Ottawa yesterday to ask for the dredging of the St. Charles River and transfer of marine headquarters from its present site to the St. Charles River. The construction of a wharf and new buildings were also sought. Consideration was promised.

KING GEORGE ARBITRATOR

London, Dec. 2.—King George, as arbitrator, yesterday received the counter cases in the Alsop claims dispute between the United States and Chile, as presented to the Foreign Office last summer by U. S. Ambassador Reid and Chilean Minister Cana. It is expected that His Majesty will render his decision within a month.

The United States claims something over $1,500,000 from Chile in satisfaction of money advanced to the Bolivian Government in 1874, in exchange for concessions in Arica. Before the agreement was fulfilled Arica passed to Chile in war. Chile subsequently agreed to assume the obligation of Bolivia to American concessionaires. The matter, however, has never been settled, and after prolonged negotiations, was submitted to the arbitration of King George.

THE PLUNDER WAS PLENTIFUL

Chicago, Dec. 2.—Four men, who have been arrested by Chicago police within the last two days, yesterday confessed that they were guilty of participating in over one hundred holdups in this city in the last four months. Each told his story independently of the others, and they coincided except as to several special instances, which fact was explained by one of them, who said: "Why, to tell the truth, I have held up so many of 'em I forget some of the details."

At one time this man boasted he had eight watches and said he took so much plunder from his victims he and his partners in crime could not dispose of it as fast as they got it, and had to "lay off work" for a while to do so.

The men in custody are: Tony Knearski, 22 years old, alleged leader of the band; Tony Rose, 20 years old; Wm. Viete, 22 years old, and Felix Peteraski, 23 years old.

AMERICAN SCHOONER WRECKED

London, Dec. 2.—The steamer British Sun, from Port Arthur, Texas, Nov. 10, for Portland, passed the Lizard last night, and signalled: "Have the crew of the American schooner Cox and Green of Boston aboard. She foundered in 39-60. Crew all well."

The American schooner Cox and Green, Captain Rickson, sailed from Baltimore Nov. 8 for Bath, Maine. She was of about 500 tons. She carried a crew of seven, and was built at Newburyport, Mass., in 1889.

Clergy In Jumpers.

Cleveland, Dec. 2.—In order to have a new tabernacle big enough to seat 5,000 people for union revival services to be held early next year, 150 ministers of the city yesterday announced their intention of donning jumpers and doing the carpenter work necessary themselves.

SPOILED THE SPORT

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Humane Inspector LeMoine got wind of what was to have been one of the biggest cocking mains ever pulled off within his district on Wednesday night and raided a barn on the Gatineau Road, about three miles out of Hull. The sports, who were mainly men from Ottawa and Hull, got wind of the inspector's intended visit; however, and managed to get away with their birds before he arrived. He estimates that sixty birds were to be used.

CONSERVATIVES SUPPORT MR. MONK'S AMENDMENT

After Mr. Borden's Amendment to the Reply to Speech From the Throne is Lost on a Division of 126 to 70 the Members of the Opposition Throw in Their Weight With Nationalists—Mr. Foster Sums Up.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—After a debate lasting nine days, the first division of the present Parliamentary session took place about two o'clock yesterday morning.

The first question submitted was Mr. Borden's amendment to that of Mr. Monk, regretting that the Government had given no indication of its intention of submitting the naval question to the people.

The vote was: Liberals 126, Conservatives 70.

The second division occurred immediately afterwards, on Monk's amendment to refer the whole question of participation in imperial armament to a plebiscite. The Conservatives voted for the Monk amendment, with the exception of Mr. Foster, who had left the chamber, and Alphonse Verville (Lib.). Col. Sam Hughes also voted with the Government on the Monk amendment. The vote was: Conservatives 67, Liberals 120.

Those who did not vote included: Chisholm (Huron), Sharpe (Lisgar), Macdonnel, Foster, Bristol, Wallace and Claire.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth will conclude the debate to-day with a reference to the award of The Hague Tribunal.

The House rose at 2.30 a.m.

Hon. Mr. Foster was the chief Conservative speaker yesterday and he was replied to by E. M. Macdonald (Liberal, Pictou, N.S.).

Hon. Geo. E. Foster (North Toronto), after the orders of the day had been called, took up the thread-worn debate on the address. He quickly disclosed his intention of scoring the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Discussing Mr. Brodeur's speech, the member for North Toronto said that the Minister had deprecated racial and religious appeals, expressed the hope that they would soon cease.

"So far as that statement is concerned," said Mr. Foster, "it is correct in spirit and right in theory. But how in practice have my hon. friends opposite realized the theory and ideals enunciated?" He was prepared to agree with the principle, and "once and for all put away from the politics of this country all these unworthy and damaging methods of political campaigns."

The member for North Toronto then presented to the House a Liberal campaign pamphlet, in French, which was used in the election of 1900. This pamphlet did not contain a word about one single question of policy. From the beginning to the end it was an appeal to the race instincts and religious instincts of the Province of Quebec. He read a speech by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, in which he had said the English-speaking people were being incited to vote against the Prime Minister because he was a French-Canadian.

The House became turbulent during this portion of Mr. Foster's speech. He had been reading headlines from the pamphlet, and Mr. Brodeur interjected the remark that if Mr. Foster went far enough he might find some article from Conservative newspapers—The Mail and The News.

C. A. Wilson (Laval) asked Mr. Foster if a French-Canadian member of Parliament, for example, had no right to inform his people if they were being traduced and vilified.

Discussing the naval question, Mr. Foster said he stood by the original resolution passed by the House of Commons.

"I stand for the whole resolution. Hon. gentlemen stand for only part of the resolution. I demand that the whole resolution be loyally adhered to." The Government had not carried out the terms of the resolution. He was still in favor of an emergency contribution.

Ralph Smith (Nanamio) said the resolution did not demand an emergency contribution.

In conclusion he said—"To-day we are in a humiliating position. To-day we no longer hold up our heads, and the reason is because Parliament has foisted upon the people, instead of the pure article, a counterfeit, which will give no aid to the Empire and no defence to the country itself. If my right hon. friend desires to settle all this confusion into which he has plunged the country, there is a simple way by which he can do it. Vote this amendment, take your supply, then dissolve this Parliament and appeal to the people."

E. M. Macdonald (Picton, N.S.), who replied to Mr. Foster in the evening, devoted practically his entire speech to an arraignment of what he considered a complete volte face on the part of the Opposition in respect to the naval question. He affirmed, amid Liberal cheers, that already the Conservatives throughout the country are beginning to take exception to the course being pursued by the leaders of party in the House. In Toronto last night a member of the Borden Club had taken exception to the policy adopted by the party, and had openly declared that, had he been in Drummond-Arthabaska, he would have voted for the candidate of the Laurier Government.

The member for Pictou in warm terms denounced the doctrines of the Nationalist element in Quebec, declaring that, if their will prevailed, the development of Canada would be retarded. They aimed, he said, at creating a party which would be in a position to make such demands upon whatever party might be in power as would prevent the development of the Dominion along broad national lines.

These were the people to whom the loyal Opposition in the House were pandering. Had not Mr. Monk moved an amendment to the address, there would not have been an amendment from the leader of the Opposition, whose amendment was moved in the hope of taking in all the elements opposed to the naval policy of the Government.

The standing committees of the committees of the Commons yesterday morning met and organized for the session. The chairmen chosen are largely those of last year: Railways and canals, Hugh Guthrie; banking and commerce, A. H. Miller; public accounts, A. B. Warburton; marine and fisheries, J. H. Sinclair; privileges and educations, William German; private bills, J. A. Ethier; standing orders, George W. McCraney; debates, H. Gervais; mines and minerals, James Conmee; forests and waterways, Hon. Clifford Sifton; agriculture, M. S. Schell.

In the Senate yesterday Sir Mackenzie Bowell called attention to the fact that there were three vacancies in the Senate, one from Quebec, one from Nova Scotia and one from Prince Edward Island. He suggested that in filling them the Government might select men who were not already in the House of Commons. This would enable the Government to avoid the awkward situation which might follow the opening of constituencies. The Senate adjourned until Jan. 11.

DIDN'T BELIEVE INSANITY CHARGE

Kingston, Dec. 2.—Justice Middleton dismissed the action of James Robertson, Lachute, Que., to set aside the will of his father, the late John Robertson of Hartington, on the ground that the deceased was insane at the time the will was drawn, and gave orders to have the will filed for probate.

CLEVERLY WORKED SWINDLE

Brandon, Man., Dec. 2.—A cleverly worked swindle for apparently small gains has been worked here. A Frenchman, giving the name of J. U. Riopel, C.E., arrived here recently, representing himself as of the "inland revenue department of mines," and said he was to superintend the rebuilding of the insane asylum, of which, he alleged, the Dominion Government was guaranteeing the bonds. He bought a million feet of lumber, contracted for a number of engines and apparatus, and also a residence, paying with checks on the Bank d'Hochelaga at Montreal.

Riopel was welcomed, wined and dined, but one man, wiring the Bank d'Hochelaga, was answered: "Checks no good. Beware of this man."

Riopel, who claimed Sir Frederick Borden for his father-in-law, cannot be found. He probably is ahead by small loans and entertainments.

Strike Finally Settled.

New York, Dec. 2.—Final settlement of the strike among express company employes, which tied up the express business of the big transcontinental companies in this city for several weeks recently, was effected early yesterday, when a meeting of the drivers and helpers voted to accept the terms offered by their employers.

BRUCHESI MAY BE NEXT POPE

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—A person in close touch with the highest officials of the Roman Catholic Church in Canada says that influences are now at work looking to the creation of a Canadian cardinal, with the ultimate end in view of securing for him the highest office of the church—namely, that of Supreme Pontiff.

It is stated that the man in view is Monsignor Bruchesi of Montreal. Three cardinals, who are members of the council charged with the election of a new Pope, was present at the Eucharistic Congress in Montreal last September. It is stated that Monsignor Bruchesi's relations with them were of the most cordial and intimate character.

PREMIER ASQUITH MAKES FUN OF REFERENDUM PROPOSAL

Any Sane and Responsible Statesman Who Suggested Such a Thing as Unionist Reform of Lords Would be Called a Madman.

London, Dec. 2.—There is a possibility of an unlooked for result in the attempt of A. J. Balfour, the Opposition leader, to remove tariff reform from the immediate fields of politics. The question looms larger than ever in the campaign to-day, insomuch that Mr. Balfour himself in a speech at Reading, was fain to explain that his party had not altered its view on this subject, and that tariff reform was still a chief plank in the party's constructive policy; but, he explained, the Unionists need to obtain the formal and the explicit consent of the people thereto. The policy of referendum, he said, was consistent with the true idea of popular government.

The fact is that Mr. Balfour's pronouncement Nov. 29, that he was willing to submit tariff reform to a referendum, has rather sundered than knit his party and supplied the Liberals with another effective argument against tariff reform, namely, that Mr. Balfour has been compelled to sidetrack it.

The interest in the speeches last night centered in Premier Asquith's reply to the Opposition leader. This was delivered at a great gathering at Wolverhampton. The Premier said:

"We are living in times of rapid movement, when it is a relief to wake any morning and not find some fresh part of the constitution reconstructed."

He described Mr. Balfour's turn-about face on the questions of the reform of the House of Lords and tariff reform as unique—almost indecent. He said he could not imagine a greater caricature of the referendum than in putting a few abstract questions to the people without concrete embodiment of their proposals. If anyone but a sane and responsible statesman had contemplated such a scheme, he would be called a madman.

After a study of the workingmen of the referendum in foreign countries, the premier said he had arrived at the conclusion that it had proved a most unsatisfactory and disappointing method of ascertaining public opinion.

Mr. Dibb was about forty years of age and very highly esteemed. He leaves a wife and two children.

THE GOOD HAVE PRIVILEGES WHICH NEWSPAPER HASN'T

Proprietor of Port Hope Guide and of Moving Picture Show Fined for Advertising and Conducting Game of Chance—Charities Can Do the Same Thing Paper Points Out

Port Hope Guide.

Mr. J. T. Steen, proprietor of the moving picture show, recently issued coupons for a club bag and the person holding the lucky number received the prize on Saturday evening. Monday morning Mr Steen received a summons to appear in court on a charge of unlawfully conducting a scheme or plan for giving property by tickets or other modes of chance. As an outcome of this action the proprietor of the Guide was also summoned for advertising the same. The case came up on Wednesday afternoon, and both men pleaded guilty. Mr. F. W. Wilson, of the Guide, pointed out that the copy of the advertisement was not submitted to him, and consequently the offence was committed through inadvertence. The case was disposed of by the parties paying the costs, $5.00 each, which goes to the complainant, and entering into a bond for the sum of $250.00 for judgment when called.

Very few of the Guide readers, or even legal men (unless their attention has been especially directed to it) are aware of what the Criminal Code means regarding lotteries and drawings. Sec. 236 reads—

"Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years imprisonment and a fine of $2,000" who (briefly stated) makes, or prints cards, advertises or is in any way responsible for any plan or scheme for lending, giving, selling, or in any way disposing of any property, by lots, cards, tickets, or any mode of chance whatever, or who sells or otherwise disposes of tickets or other means to the same purpose, or who conducts any lottery or scheme.

This applies, so far as publishers are concerned, to foreign lotteries as well.

Everyone is guilty of offence and liable on summary conviction to a penalty of $20 who buys, takes or receives any such lot, ticket, or other device.

THE GOOD MAY HAVE RAFFLES.

This Section (236) does not apply to raffles for prizes of small value at any bazaar held for any charitable or religious object if permission to hold the same has been obtained from the city or other municipal council, or from the mayor, reeve or other chief officer of the city, town, or other municipality, wherein such bazaar is held, and the articles raffled for thereat have been first offered for sale, and none of them are of a value exceeding fifty dollars.

Thus it may be seen that the publisher of a paper may become liable to the law through the neglect of the person in charge of a church or charitable drawing failing to obtain the requisite consent of a town official, or failing to offer the object for sale. The publisher is thus made the scapegoat for the shortcomings of the whole community.

What puzzles us, however, is the fact that under the law, a church—to whom the whole community looks for an example of the highest ideals—may do lawfully what an individual is criminalized for and liable to long imprisonment and heavy fine.

To our mind this discrimination of the wrong doing in favor of the churches and charity is not calculated to raise the standard of right living and thinking.

There is certainly room for an amendment to section 236 of the Criminal Code.

SEVEN DAYS

That is How the Hamilton Police Did the Job Act to Catch Thief

Special to the Review.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 2.—Two policemen at 3.30 this morning, hiding in F. A. Green's restaurant on King street east, heard a thief breaking in. The thief, after switching on the electric lights, saw the officers and dashed for liberty, but was captured outside by another officer. He proved to be John Ponnell, and at the police court this morning he was remanded for sentence. It developed that the officers had been hiding in the restaurant for the last seven days waiting for the thief's advent.

VIVE THE FARMER

Canadians have been winning important prizes at the Live Stock Exhibition at Chicago. Canada is an agricultural country. Her lands are fertile and her farmers wide awake. Not so long ago if one wished to please a farmer he would call him yeoman, but the tiller of the soil to-day is proud of the good name of farmer. The term has been expanded as the industry has widened to include the cattle raiser, the dairymen and kindred callings. They all depend on the land, and are carried on on the land, and the man who controls them and who coaxes from mother earth the sustenance for the various agricultural industries is the farmer.

An agriculturalist? That is a clumsy term; it is too long for every-day use. It is not as expressive as the good, solid, old-fashioned name farmer. The term farm brings up visions of sun-chased meadows, of fields rich with undulating grain, of sleek cattle on the hillsides, the bleating of lambs, the sporting of colts in the pasture, and all the poetical accompaniments of the labor that feeds the world. And the labor is not as it once was. The click and hum of machinery is heard in the field, in the dairy and in the barn, and have taken the place of the singing of the scythe under the whetstone, the thud of the churn dasher, and the thump of the flail. The farmer may not pay much attention to the latter day cry of back to the land, but he pursues his calling content if he is wise, and proud of his work, of the results it brings, and the good it does, and of the name by which the worker is known.

THE REFERENDUM

In their proposals in regard to the House of Lords the Unionists introduced the principle of the referendum—their idea being that any proposed important constitutional change should be submitted to the people. And now Mr. Balfour has brought the referendum idea much closer to the minds of the people, by promising, if the Unionists are returned to power, to give the electors an opportunity to directly pronounce upon the question of tariff reform.

The English system of government, which is also the Canadian system, does not permit the electorate to decide a question directly. When an election takes place there are usually several important questions under discussion upon which the parties are divided and while an elector may agree with one party on one question and with the other party on another subject, he cannot vote for both. He must in that case make up his mind which is the most important and vote accordingly, and in order to secure what he considers most important he must at the same time vote for one or more things to which he opposed.

At the present time in Britain there are Unionists who strongly favor the position taken by Mr. Balfour in regard to the House of Lords and Home Rule, but who are one with Mr. Asquith in his opposition to Tariff Reform. These politicians have been in the difficult position of being called upon to decide whether they would throw over the Lords in order to retain free trade, or let free trade be overturned in order to protect the Lords. Mr. Balfour's promise of a referendum on the tariff question will, and was intended to, relieve them from this difficulty, and they can now unite with him in the present electoral struggle. This illustrates a difficulty in which electors may be placed, and how the referendum may be used to extricate them from it.

This innovation is another evidence of the present day revolutionary tendency in England. The system of responsible government, so long maintained and so interwoven with the party system, laid upon each party the responsibility of forming its policy and of standing or falling with it as the electors should decide. When a party stated its policy to the country and it was was approved by the election of a majority of the party's supporters, there was certain to be an Administration in sympathy with the measure, it was given a mandate to enact and carry out, and the party's tenure of office was dependent upon the success of the measure it thus brought into force. Under these circumstances a party felt its responsibility, not only for the policy it proposed, but also for the ultimate results of that policy upon the welfare of the country.

How the referendum would work along with representative government is a problem that can only be decided by experience. It would have the advantage of giving the people an opportunity of directly deciding important questions and would free many electors, and parties, too, no doubt, from embarassment at election times, but if made use of to any extent elections would come to be a matter of deciding which party would be the country's administrators, and not its legislators. That is how the adoption of the principle of the referendum would be revolutionary.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Hamilton is another city that is not yet satisfied with its system of municipal government. It has had the Board of Control for a year or two and the Council has unanimously decided to ask for authority to have the controllers elected for two years, two of the four retiring each year.

A Canadian knight, Sir Henry Pellatt, has donated $2,500 yearly to the Society of Knights Bachelor, to enable the society to purchase the ancient Clifford's Inn for its headquarters. When they acquire the house who will keep it for them!

The Emperor of Germany quotes Scripture to prove that duelling is not wrong. Some men of good intentions can misapply texts as readily as the devil can quote them.

Two Chatham boys who were convicted of stealing, confessed that moving pictures were the cause of their downfall. Moving pictures can be wholesomely entertaining and properly educative, and they can be something else. The authorities should see that they are not something else.

At least one Canadian will be in the British Parliament after the election, for Mr. Donald MacMaster, who is a Unionist, has been re-elected without opposition.

It is said that Mr Joseph Martin's seat in the British House of Commons is in danger. Either his seat or the House is.

FIGHTING FOR THEIR LIVES

The Members of the Cabinet Are Going the Way of All Flesh, But Struggling On

Ottawa, November 30. — The Government has never faced so serious a situation as the present since it came into power in 1896. So dependant has Sir Wilfrid Laurier been on the Counsel of Hon. W. E. Fielding in constructing legislation, and so often has the finance minister pulled him out of a tight corner that the loss of Mr. Fielding to the Premier will be of the most serious matter. The Premier's first lieutenant is the ablest man in the Liberal party. He may lack the spectacular personality of some others, notably the Premier himself, but the fact remains that he has been the main stay of the Government for the last fourteen years. Without him the Administration is a rudderless storm driven craft. It is stated that Mr Fielding may be able to return to active duty next January, but meanwhile there is little prospect of this. It is more likely that he will not be back in Ottawa for much longer. It is understood that he has been advised to rest for about a year.

Another weakness which has developed is that the Secretary of State has contrived to awaken the hostility of the French-Canadians, especially those of the Nationalist persuasion, and that they have sworn to defeat him in the next election. It is admitted that he cannot be elected in Russell again, but it is stated that the party will find an Irish-Catholic constituency for him. It is obvious, however, that no political party would stick to a man who was proving a weakness to it. It is well known that there has been a battle royal between Mr. Parmelee, the King's Printer, and Mr. Murphy. It is understood that the Secretary of State tried to get Mr. Parmelee dismissed, but this evoked a storm of protest. Mr. Parmelee is a former Quebec member, and if dismissed would assuredly enter the House again. The public Accounts Committee will reveal much this session, and it is promised that there will be a furious time over the Printing Bureau Scandal. Men were dismissed before they had a chance to defend themselves, and it is freely stated that when Mr. Murphy found that the enquiry was leading to a revelation of the scandalous means taken by the Government to raise campaign funds, he stopped and contented himself with making scapegoats of some of the employees by declaring them incompetent. Therefore they were fired. It is pointed out that this should have been the function of Mr. Parmelee, but he was not given the power by the Minister in charge, Mr. Murphy.

Another disappointment to the Liberal party is that Hon Rodolphe Lemieux, the Postmaster General, is in South Africa, and will not be here until some time in January. This lessens still further the fighting strength of the Government.

The situation is further complicated by the result of the Drummond-Arthabaska election. Mr. Brodeur has lost prestige and the Quebec members generally are resenting the position in which they have been placed by the Government over the navy bill.

From Ministers such as Messrs. Pugsley and Graham, not very much help can be expected by the Prime Minister. They are kept exceedingly busy minding their own affairs. Indeed the former will be one of the ministers who will not lend much credit to the Government's version of the session, as there are one or two matters with which he has been connected that will ensure some warm debating exercise an Mr. Pugsley's wits to defend.

As to the others, Mr. Aylesworth is too deaf to be of any use in the House and has been known to debate a subject that was not under discussion. Mr. Paterson has reached the "slippered ease" stage. Mr. Mackenzie King is green. Sir Frederick Borden is tired of politics. Mr. Brodeur is ill. Sir Richard Cartwright is hors de combat, and Mr. Fisher is no use on general occasions.

In a word the Cabinet is done. They have had their day, and it is past. They are going the way of all flesh.

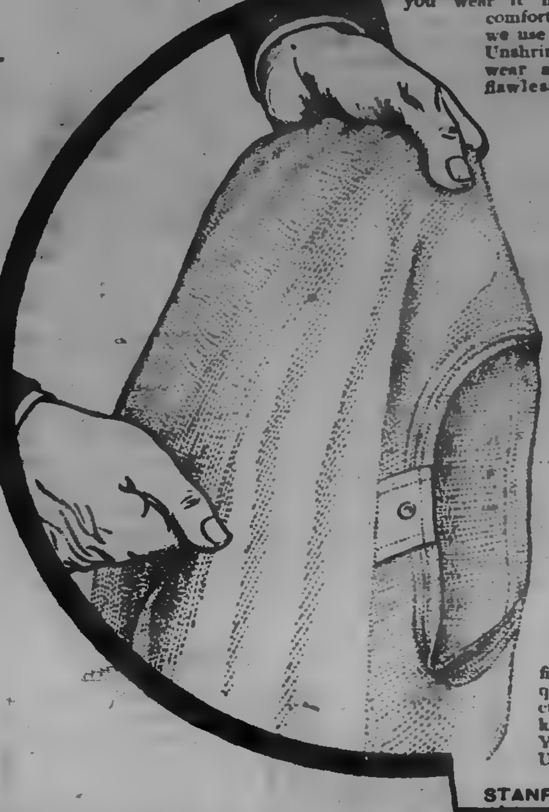
If it offers you an extra season's wear, surely it's worth while insisting on Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear! Particularly since every moment you wear it means perfect comfort. The yarns we use in Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear are virtually flawless — spun so carefully that not a yard escapes our spinners' critical eyes. Then, patented, ingenious machines knit these fine yarns into a wonderfully elastic fabric that yields gently to the slightest movement of your body yet stubbornly resists wear. Every stitch in the knitting is locked—so ravelling is impossible.



Yielding, Elastic; yet Strong to Wear.

STANFIELD'S Unshrinkable UNDERWEAR

Made both for women and for men in perfectly fitting sizes. Twenty-one different weights and qualities:—from warm, heavy ribbed garments particularly suitable for outdoor workers to the soft, finely knitted underwear so soothing to sensitive skins. Your local dealer sells Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear. Catalog on request.

By Stewart Edward White

Orde and his wife sat together on the top step. He slipped his arm about her. They breathed deep of the happiness that filled their lives. Two shadowy figures defined themselves approaching up the concrete walk.

"Hello!" called Orde.

"Hello!" a voice responded.

"Taylor and Clara," said Orde to Carroll, with satisfaction, "just the man I wanted to see." The lawyer and his wife mounted the steps.

Clara Taylor stopped short and considered Orde for a moment.

"Let us away," she said seriously to Carroll. "My prophetic soul tells me they are going to talk business, and if any more business is talked in my presence I shall expire. Come, Carroll; let's wander down the street and see Mina Heinzman."

The two sauntered away.

"Look here, Taylor," broke in Orde abruptly; "you told me the other day you had fifteen or twenty thousand you wanted to place somewhere."

"Yes," replied Taylor.

"Well, I believe I have just the proposition."

"What is it?"

"California pine," replied Orde.

"California pine," repeated Taylor. "California's a long way off, and there is no market, is there?"

"It's cheap," replied Orde succinctly. "I don't say it will be good for immediate returns, but in twenty or thirty years it ought to pay big on a small investment made now."

Taylor laughed.

"Laugh all you please," rejoined Orde, "but I tell you Michigan and Wisconsin pine is doomed. Twenty or thirty years from now there won't be any white pine for sale."

"Nonsense!" objected Taylor. "You're talking wild."

"All right," said Orde quietly. "Well, what do you think of Indiana as a good field for timber investment?"

"There used to be. And all the southern Michigan farm belt was timbered, and around here. We have our stumps to show for it, but there are no evidences at all farther south. You take your map and see how much area has been cut already. That'll open your eyes. And, remember, all that has been done by crude methods. The demand increases as the country grows and methods improve. It would not surprise me if some day thirty or forty millions would constitute an average cut."

"Why is it that no one"—

"Because," Orde cut him short, "the big things are for the fellow who can see far enough ahead."

"What kind of a proposition have you?" asked Taylor after a pause.

"I can get 10,000 acres at an average price of $8 an acre," replied Orde, "about 400,000,000 feet in timber."

"That's about 20 cents a thousand."

Orde nodded.

"And of course you couldn't operate for twenty or thirty years, and there's your interest on your money and taxes and the risk of fire and"—

"Of course," agreed Orde impatiently, "but you're getting your stumpage for 20 cents, and in thirty years it should be worth a dollar and a half." At the present time sugar pine such as Orde described would cost $3.50 to $4.

Taylor relapsed into thought.

"Look here, Orde," he broke out finally, "how old are you?"

"Thirty-eight. Why?"

"How much timber have you in Michigan?"

"About 10,000,000 that we've picked up on the river since the Daly purchase and 300,000,000 in the northern peninsula."

"Which will take you twenty years to cut and make you a million dollars. Then why this investment thirty years ahead?"

"It's for Bobby," explained Orde simply. "A man likes to have his son continue on in his business. I can't do it here, but there I can. It would take fifty years to cut that pine, and that will give Bobby a steady income and a steady business."

"Bobby will be well enough off anyway. He won't have to go into business."

Orde's brow puckered.

"I know a man. Bobby is going to work. A man is not a success in life unless he does something, and Bobby is going to be a success. Why, Taylor," he chuckled, "the little rascal fills the wood box, for a cent a time, and that's all the pocket money he gets. He's saving now to buy a thousand dollar boat. I've agreed to pool in half. At his present rate of income I'm safe for about sixty years yet."

Chapter 28

ORDE said nothing to Newmark concerning this purposed new investment.

"It is for Bobby," he told himself, "and I want Bobby and no one else to run it. Joe would want to take charge naturally."

He walked downtown next morning, busily formulating his scheme.

"Joe," said Orde, "just how do we stand on that upper peninsula stumpage?"

"We've made two payments of $17,000 each and have still two to make of the same amount."

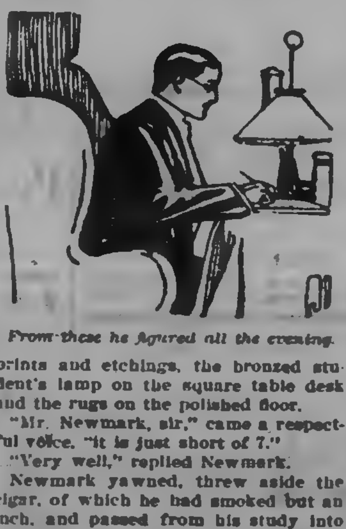
"What could we borrow on it?"

"Fifty or seventy-five thousand."

"Joe," said Orde, "I want to raise about $75,000 on my share in this concern."

Newmark said nothing, but for some time thought busily. His light blue eyes narrowed to a slit.

"I'll have to figure on it awhile," said he at last and turned back to his mail. All day he worked hard. At 6 o'clock he walked to his home. Here he turned into a study, quietly and richly furnished ten years in advance of the taste then prevalent in Monrovia, where he sank into a deep cushioned chair and lit the much chewed cigar. He looked with approval on the dark walnut bookcases, the framed prints and etchings, the bronzed student's lamp on the square table desk and the rugs on the polished floor.



From these he figured all the evening.

"Very well," replied Newmark.

Newmark yawned, threw aside the cigar, of which he had smoked but an inch, and passed from his study into his bedroom across the hall. He bathed in the adjoining bathroom, shaved carefully between the two wax lights which were his whim and dressed in what were then known as swallowtail clothes. Then, with all the deliberation of one under fire of a hundred eyes, he proceeded to the dining room. His butler, Mallock, too, wore the swallowtail, but its buttons were of gilt.

He ate deliberately and with enjoyment the meal, exquisitely prepared and exquisitely presented to him. Afterward he returned to the study for his coffee. He opened a drawer in his desk, extracting therefrom some bank books and small personal account books. From these he figured all the evening. When he had finished his cold eye exhibited a gleam of satisfaction. He had resolved on a course of action.

"Orde," said Newmark next morning as the former entered the office, "I think I can arrange this matter."

Orde drew up a chair.

"I talked last evening with a man from Detroit named Thayer, who thinks he may advance $75,000 on a mortgage on our northern peninsula stumpage. For that, of course, we will give the firm's note with interest at 10 per cent. I will turn this over to you."

"That's"— began Orde.

"Hold on," interrupted Newmark. "As collateral security you will deposit for me your stock in the Boom company, indorsed in blank. If you do not pay the full amount of the firm's note to Thayer, then the stock will be turned in to me."

"I see," said Orde.

"Now, don't misunderstand me," said Newmark dryly. "This is your own affair, and I do not urge it on you If we raise as much as $75,000 on that upper peninsula stumpage it will be all it can stand, for next year we must make a third payment on it. If you take that money it is of course proper that you pay the interest on it. And if there's any possibility of the foreclosure of the mortgage it is only right that you run all the risk of loss—not myself."

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

Problems Which Confront the Aviator in Action.

In tracing the development of flying it all looks very simple now that it has been accomplished. Lillienthal gliding was the art first removed from actual flying, and it was a tragic close of his life of devotion to an idea when in 1895 he was killed after 2,000 successful trips. But back of Lillienthal's gliding the same idea that has developed the aeroplane is found in kiteflying.

It is pressure against the air that makes the kite soar; it is pressure against the air that makes the aeroplane soar—pressure promoted by the rapidly revolving propeller. Ascent, descent, balance and direction are the problems which confront the aviator when he takes his seat in the air craft. In every movement while he is in the air there must be constant alertness to adjust his machine for varying air currents or "holes in the atmosphere." If the engine fails to work there is left the probability of reaching earth again safely by gliding downward. A short descent gives momentum to glide along for more distance to gain a desired point. Most of the accidents have happened as the result of some part of the aeroplane giving way. That is why the aeroplanes are guarded so closely in their respective hangars to keep away meddlesome sightseers, who are liable to tamper or "monkey" with the machines. When Mr. Harmon's biplane crashed to the marsh land curious memento hunters made way with a great many of the parts, the loss of which prevented him from getting it ready for the air again during the meet.—William Chapple in National Magazine.

A Frilled Lizard.

Living specimens of a strange frilled lizard of Australia have been transported to England, where photography has most convincingly proved the truth of the legend that these animals, which sometimes attain a length of three feet, are in the habit of running about erect on their hind legs. The lizards are furnished with a broad frill, or collar, round the neck, which lies folded unless the animal is threatened. In that case it immediately spreads its frill like a suddenly opened umbrella to frighten off the enemy. When running on its hind legs, with its long tail swinging in the air, it presents an irresistibly ludicrous appearance. There was a time in the jurassic age when this method of locomotion was common among giant reptiles, but now the chlamydosaurus is the sole surviving species of reptiles that assumes an erect attitude when running.—Chicago Record-Herald.

An Automobile Tempest.

Germany's Hessian Automobile club recently issued a "decalogue for cart drivers," calling upon them in more or less peremptory terms to pay prompt attention to the signals of motor horns. This document was criticised by a peasant reichstag member, Herr Kohler, who said: "I should like to recommend the following as an eleventh commandment for all cartmen: 'Go and get yourself a license for firearms and then a thoroughly serviceable revolver, so that you can protect yourself when you are fallen upon by the modern vermin which render the country roads unsafe and trifle with human life.'" The automobile club has retaliated by prosecuting Herr Kohler for inciting to crime.

After seventeen years of existence the commission that condemned land for the Harlem River Speedway, ended its report.

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

COLLEGE STREET, TORONTO

READY FOR MOTHER.

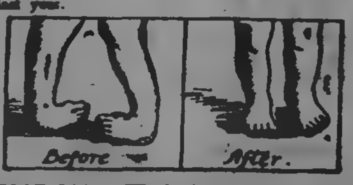
This Institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,837 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay and were treated free.

There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

The sick child from the most remote corner of Ontario has the same claim as the child living within sight of the great House of Mercy in College Street, Toronto. Our cause is the children's cause. Could there be one that has a stronger claim on the people of this Province?

If the Hospital is to continue its great work, it must appeal to your pocketbook as well as to your heart. Let your Dollars be messages of mercy to the suffering little children of Ontario.

OBSERVATIONS on the EYE

Many animals can see with each eye separately, but man cannot do so. The horse, for instance, can see on both sides of him, and when we stand in front of him he can see us with only one eye at a time, because both his eyes cannot act together. The ancient Greek spoke of the eyes as the windows of the soul. They might have gone further and said of the body also. By glancing at a person's eye we can estimate his character pretty well and an observing physician can often tell by the eye the exact nature of a person's sickness.

"Look After Your Eyes"

When the eyes are affected, the whole general health is affected as well. We make no charge for examination. If your eyesight is perfect we will be pleased to tell you so. If, however, there is any defect which needs correcting, we guarantee to fit you with glasses that will surely correct it.

INTEREST BEING MANIFESTED IN FARMERS CLUBS

The recent Farmers' Institute meetings have done much to stir up the farmers of the district, and from their inspiration has sprung up among them a desire for what is known as Farmers' Clubs. These are now in process of organization in many rural communities and their success has been assured from the very start. In connection with the movement, Mr. H. C. Duff, B. S. A., of Norwood, was in Lakehurst on Wednesday evening, where he addressed the annual cheese factory business meeting, and it was decided to organize a Farmers' Club at that place. The following officers were elected: President — H. P. Coons, Vice-President — Wilbert Elliot, Secretary-Treasurer — William Thompson, Directors — Geo. Weir and James Wilson.

The meeting was enthusiastic and about thirty-three joined. Their first meeting will be held on Dec. 10, and an address by the President and Mr. Archie Wilson, will be two important features of the programme.

A concert under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, will be given in the Conservatory Music Hall, on Friday evening, December 9.

50c and 65c Embroidered Blouse Fronts
Two Hours Only Saturday a.m., 12 1-2c

When we say this is the strongest "Early Rising" Bargain we have yet offered we mean every word of it. These Blouse Fronts come to us direct from an Irish manufacturer, and we have no hesitation in saying some one is making a very big loss. That's of no consequence—the goods are here (400 of them) and will be sold for two hours Saturday morning for the price quoted. Each front contains ¼ of a yard of pure Irish Linen, that would, without the embroidery, be worth 40c yard, so when we put the actual price of the fronts at 50c and 60c, we are putting the price really lower than the goods warrant.

The plain linen to make up the waist will be sold special during the two hours at 29c and 39c yd. We will positively not sell more than 6 Fronts to any customer. Phone orders will be filled after 9:30 o'clock, if the 400 are not sold out by that hour. Two Hour Price 12½c each

C.P.R. RIGHT AFTER NAVIGATION RIGHTS

Mr. P. P. Young, of Young's Point, president of the Stoney Lake Navigation Co. was communicated with by phone to-day by the Review, in connection with the rumor that his company had sold its line to the C. P. R. Mr. Young said the line had not been sold, although the C. P. R. were making overtures with a view of buying it. He said no terms had been arrived at, however.

The railway company is undoubtedly very anxious to close the deal, it is understood from a reliable source and also to get control of another line of boats. Concerning this latter proposition however, the Review was bound to secrecy.

Mr. W. H. Robertson received a telegram last night from Rev. Dr. Gordon principal of Queen's College, Kingston stating that he would be unable through severe illness to be present at the banquet of Queen's College Alumni Association which takes place at the National Hotel to-night. The principal was to have been a guest at Mr Robertson's home during his visit to Peterborough.

Dr. Gordon stated in his message that he was keenly disappointed at not being able to be here. The members of the Alumni Association will also feel extremely sorry, and will extend to Dr Gordon their heartfelt sympathy in his illness and hoped for his speedy recovery.

FOUR MONTHS' TERM IN THE COUNTY JAIL

Magistrate Edmison Makes Conviction Against Larry Kiloran of Norwood Charged with Illegal Sale of Liquor—Other Case Adjourned.

County Magistrate Edmison in giving judgment to-day in the Norwood liquor case, returned a conviction against Larry Kiloran, the accused, and committed him to the county jail for a term of four months.

He had been previously convicted and was not open to a fine.

In this case two detectives visited the hotel at Norwood on fair day, October 12th, and in their evidence at the hearing subsequent to the laying of an information, swore that they were served with drinks.

A quantity of port wine was secured and sent to Toronto to be analized. The report showed the percentage of alcohol to be 4.59 against 2.50, the percentage allowed by law to hotels, under the Local Option Law and of which the business conducted by the accused was under.

The defence claimed that no port wine was sold, there being none in the hotel at the time. The other drinks were legally sold.

The other charge for the latter part of September stands adjourned.

Mr. Elias Williams, liquor license inspector, for East Peterborough, who has been very active in the enforcement of the liquor law, laid both informations.

PILATE'S DILEMMA AN EVER PRESENT ONE

(Meeting at St. Paul's.)

The service at St. Paul's last evening was by far the largest of the week. The people have been turning out as they have not done before to any such effort, and many are speaking of definite blessing received. Mr. Pogue spoke last night on Pilate's question. "What shall I do then with Jesus who is called Christ?" He said that the man had not lived who had not Pilate's question to ask and answer. It is a question for all time and all men. The alternatives which presented themselves to Pilate that day in the judgment hall have presented themselves to men ever since—Barabbas or Christ?—the world or Christ?—heaven or hell. Pilate had to answer question without the full knowledge of who Christ was. When we answer it, it is with the light of nineteen centuries streaming upon His Divine face. Pilate's doom was awful, but of how much sorer punishment must we be though worthy, if, with our additional light, we reject Him. Ours is the greater sin: hence ours will be the greater condemnation. Everything depends upon what you do with Christ. Your salvation from sin's guilt, your acceptance or rejection before God, depend altogether upon your answer to this question. "He that believeth on the Son is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the only begotten Son of God." The rejection of Christ is the greatest sin man can commit, for it is the rejection of the greatest manifestation of love that God could give. And it is a sin for which there is no forgiveness. Only by accepting Christ is a holy life possible. Most men want to do right, want to keep their garments "unspotted from the world." But how? is the problem which they cannot solve. Jesus Christ is the only answer to the question. There is power in the blood, there is power in the life of Christ. Just as the power of the rising life of spring throws off all the dead leaves that have been clinging to the trees throughout the long winter, so the power of the life of Christ within the heart throws off all the dead leaves of habit and of a foul and sinful life. What will you do with Christ? You can let Him stand at the door of your heart without a word of recognition; or you can positively reject Him; or you may accept Him into your heart and life. If you accept Him you will become a child of God. "To as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God." If you do not accept Him, then there is another question that I should like to ask: What will Christ do with you? When Christ quits His mediatorial throne and ascends the throne of judgment, what will He do with you?

Mr. Mulligan sang two solos last night with power and great effect. He will sing at to-night's meeting also.

There will be a special service for girls held this afternoon at 4.30, and an evangelistic service for boys at 7.15.

"CALL OF THE WEST"

Probably not since the production of Augustus Thomas' virile play of American life, "Arizona," has there been presented to the public the equal of the stirring drama of the early days on the borders of civilization—a story of the days when might was right, and when the redmen of the forest and the steadily encroaching white hordes were battling for supremacy in the great northwest—entitled "Call of the Wild." This realistic drama is dramatized from the intensely interesting novel, "John Ermine of the Yellowstone," which is the crowning work of the pen of Louis Evan Shipman, and the vehicle in which James K. Hackett scored one of his greatest successes when the play was produced at the Manhattan Theatre, New York. Since its extended run in the metropolis the play has met with applause from the public and praise from the critics, the country over, and will come to the Grand on Tuesday next, with Mr. Franklin Woodruff in the leading role of John Ermine, the half-breed redskin.

The graduating exercises of the Nicholls Hospital Training School for Nurses will be held in the Collegiate Institute Hall on Friday evening next, December 2nd, at 8 o'clock.

An interesting programme will be presented and the public are invited.

Nice Words for Grand Trunk Pacific

A member of a party who journeyed into the Peace River District last July and August, and travelled over the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway between Winnipeg and Edmonton writes to the company as follows: "I desire to congratulate the Grand Trunk Pacific on its excellent service, and I want to go on record as saying that no matter which way one views it, your line has certainly delivered the goods. Our party thought it nothing short of marvelous that in two years' time a railroad should be running as only the G.T.P. runs. The cuisine was as enjoyable as was the smooth-running road-bed.

SPORTING COMMENT

An old time football star, in picking an all star team, consideration, youth and speed, names Ken Overend for the scrimmage.

The Hamilton Spectator says: — According to word received from Peterboro this week, Saturday's tail-twisting affair cost the Otonabee crowd pretty dear. They all went in, hook, line and sinker, on the yellow and black, sentiment figuring strongly in the play, owing to the fact that Ben Simpson is an old Peterboro boy, and the crowd were pulling for him strong. Financial embarrassment is felt as a result, just as well as it is evident around town.

No it wasn't quite that steep Bobbie.

Old English Recipe For the Famous Soupe a la Crecy.

In the "Illustrated London Cookery Book," by Frederick Bishop, late cuisiner to St. James' palace, Earl Grey, the Marquis of Stafford, Baron Rothschild, Earl Norbury, Captain Duncombe and many of the first families of Great Britain (1852), we find this recipe for soupe a la Crecy:

"Cut half a pound of lean ham in dice, three onions, four turnips, twelve carrots (the outer side red only), a head of celery, a fagot of sweet herbs, two blades of mace, six cloves, a bay leaf and half a pound of salt butter. Fry all down in a stewpan until they get a little brown; then add some second stock and stew until all the roots are quite tender; then rub it through a tammy sieve or tammy cloth with two long spoons. If very thick add more stock. Season with cayenne and black pepper and salt and a good bit of sugar. Send up on a napkin some nice fried bread cut in small dice and not greasy."

This is far less elaborate than it sounds and is, indeed, in the main the recognized recipe for the royal soup. The spice is, if anything, a trifle overdone, and the carrots want to be well chosen, as the slightest stringiness destroys the homogeneity of the compound. The bread dice are important and should be fried in the very best butter or superlatively good olive oil.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CORDITE.

Made of Two Powerful Explosives Kneaded Into Paste.

Cordite is the outcome of the strange paradox that if you mix together two powerful explosives the result is a smokeless slow burning powder. Nitroglycerin and gun cotton mixed together with a little petroleum jelly, make cordite. It is curious to see the two deadly explosives being kneaded together into a paste by women with the same unconcern as dough is kneaded for bread. Indeed, machines similar to those used in bakeries take up the work and knead the buff colored cordite paste for seven hours. Then it is forced through molds and issues in long cords—hence the name cordite—the thickness of which is varied according to the weapon in which it is to be used.

For big guns cordite is half an inch thick and cut into lengths of thirty-seven inches. Rather more than a thousand of these cordite sticks packed in two bundles make up the cartridge for a twelve inch gun. For the rifle cordite is pressed into a very thin string, like the finest macaroni, and sixty of these strands one inch and a half long make the neat little bundle which lies inside the cartridge case. For some European armies cordite is made in flat thin strips like whalebone. Kept away from fire, cordite can be handled with impunity.—London Graphic.

Mountains of Moab.

Most travelers who visit the Holy Land content themselves with a visit to that restricted part west of Jordan. The mountainous regions of Moab as seen by them from Jerusalem are lost in a purple haze that constantly hangs over them, and the great stretches beyond are covered in mystery. This is true partly because of the fewer historical incidents connected with the eastern regions, but mainly on account of the great abyss of the Jordan valley that has always acted as a barrier. Few who descend into the valley 1,300 feet below sea level undertake to climb the hills beyond, which rise to a height of 3,000 feet. Though its glory is far outshone by that of western Palestine, still, both in the old and the new dispensations, it has a history of its own and from an economic standpoint will always enter very largely into the life of Palestine.—Christian Herald.

Victor Hugo's Double.

Victor Hugo had a real double in flesh and blood, who exploited his physical resemblance to the man of genius. He cut his beard like Hugo's, copied the master's dress in its smallest details and so for eighteen years divided with the master the admiration of the public. His especial delight was to pose in a poetical attitude in front of a Punch and Judy show. He did this at a particular spot every Thursday afternoon for years, thoroughly enjoying the murmurs of curiosity and applause proceeding from the gaping crowd which he deceived. We do not hear that he reaped any other reward but his pleasure.

Didn't Like the Suit.

"Sir," said the young man as he entered the library for the purpose of interviewing the father of the only girl, "I am in love with your daughter. Have you any objection to my suit?"

The old man looked the y. m. over from head to foot.

"I sure have," he replied. "Why, I wouldn't wear a misfit suit like that to a dog fight. Why don't you try some other tailor?"—Chicago News.

"That's strange. Most young mothers can place that sort of responsibility in a jiffy."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

SPLENDID MEETINGS ON THE SECOND DAY OF INSTITUTE

Addresses at Lakefield on Crop Rotation and Principles of Breeding at Afternoon Meeting--Entertainment in the Evening Was a Great Success--Ennismore Meeting

The second day of the regular winter meetings of the Farmers' Institute of West Peterborough was marked by enthusiastic gatherings. The town hall at Lakefield was the place of the meetings for the second day and while the attendance in the afternoon was not exceedingly large yet an animated session was held which could not fail but be a source of help and instruction to the body of representative farmers present.

The afternoon session opened about two-thirty with Mr. J. H. Garbutt presiding. Mr. Wm. Collins, the secretary-treasurer, was also on the platform. In a few suitable words the chairman introduced Mr. Ellis, of "Farm and Dairy" staff, who addressed the gathering first.

Mr. Ellis wished them to understand that he was talking like one farmer to another. At his home in Nova Scotia he had heard there was no place like Ontario. It was the experience of other men he wished to speak of.

There are greater chances for investment in farming land than in any other. There are excellent advantages in drainage.

He also spoke of pure bred sires and of the immense profits which will accrue in wise investment in pure-bred stock. The value of good seed was also taken up by the speaker. Underdrainage, purebred stock and good seeding are three of the most important elements in the farmers' affairs.

ROTATION OF CROPS.

Mr. Anson Groh, of Preston, was next introduced. His address was on the "Systematic Rotation of Crops." "The subject alone," said Mr. Groh, "suggests system." Very often if you change the man you will change everything. If a man will get to work and systematize his farm work he will greatly improve his farm. One of the first things he must inquire is, what is his farm for? Has it a definite object? It must be stock-raising, cattle-feeding or grain-growing or something with an end in view. Many farmers are not aiming at anything in particular.

First, what is your farm fitted for and what are you fitted for? By systematizing the work you will save yourself much unnecessary expense. On every farm, whether it be dairying or cattle-raising be sure you know what you are aiming at. Everything must work together and you must get acquainted with your resources. If you are going to have good cows you must feed them well and also increase the fertility of your soil. A plan must be arranged whereby the things can be made to work together for the object of saving unnecessary time and waste and labor.

Nature will often help a farmer if he studies his environment. The farmer and Nature often help each other. Mr. Groh told the story of his efforts in making a successful farm, one of the first things is to fill the soil with organic matter.

Nitrogen is excellent as it is an organic matter and if it is lacking your soil might just as well be considered as useless. If that organic matter consists of legumes then it will be more advantageous. Use clovers in your soil.

If we want to build up the fertility of the land organic matter must be prevalent. Warmth, air and moisture are required and it will germinate.

If your land has these requirements you will get a full crop. Anything that decays in your land is producing moisture. We want a system that puts more in the soil than it takes out.

We are improving the quality of our food by growing legumes which increase the fertility of the soil.

The best kind of crops to grow were dwelt on at some length by the speaker. The system that you must work out for the fertilizing of the soil calls for legumes, clover and so on. It is practically a systematic three-cornered system with the three requirements in proper proportions.

ALFALFA A GREAT FEED.

A cow, when fed with silage will use an enormous amount of silage, alfalfa is much ahead of clover in value and will give nearly double as rich a crop. Alfalfa will eventually revolutionize farming more than anything else advocated to-day. It will be a great help to the farmer. Get a good field of alfalfa and you have a great source of increase. If farming is such a terrible thing to make a living at, what is the use of trying to cultivate stony ground and irregular land as many farmers do, when they can use it as alfalfa land? Clovers and alfalfa are away ahead of everything as they produce you what you want in the soil. These two growths also help to kill weeds more than anything else. To kill weeds is a great factor in the agricultural world today.

Mr. Groh's address was intently listened to and at its conclusion he was heartily applauded. At this juncture Mr. Collins, the secretary, urged those who had not renewed their subscription to do so at once and also advised them to subscribe to the two farmers' journals, the "Weekly Sun" and the "Canadian Farm" as they were splendid periodicals for the farmers.

PRINCIPLES OF BREEDING

Mr. H. C. Duff, B.S.A., of Norwood, was next introduced and spoke briefly in the "Principles of Breeding."

He advised the farmers, especially the young men, to take in the special courses being offered in the near future for the study of the breeding of stock, especially the course in Guelph. He also commended the practice which is being widely spread now or organizing Farmers' Clubs. It will not only help the farmer by the lectures given by capable speakers, but also it arouses some lively arguments. One of their discussions will be how to attract buyers, and what breeds to specialize in, to enable them to make profitable sales. These and other organizations are a great help to the young farmers. In Norwood they intend having a very important meeting of the Farmers' Clubs. Many other places are asking for Farmers' Clubs, and they are anxious to hold a general conference in order to discuss how to further agriculture. Within three years he was of the opinion that there would be trucks going around, gathering the eggs from the sellers and delivering them in Peterborough, in a much sounder condition and greatly cheaper than if they were sent by express. Remarks along similar lines concluded Mr. Duff's address and the afternoon session.

BRIGHT ENTERTAINMENT.

In connection with the Farmers' Institute the Women's Institute of West Peterborough held a very useful meeting in the afternoon in the Foresters' Hall, Lakefield, where supper was also served. Mrs. (Dr.) McAlpine delivered a very interesting address, somewhat similar to her address in Ennismore on Wednesday evening.

The evening session of the Farmers' Institute was held jointly with the Women's Institute, and was one of extreme interest, being enhanced in pleasure by several musical numbers. A larger audience than in the afternoon was present the ladies especially turning out well. The addresses given by the delegates and the entertainment provided were much enjoyed.

The programme was opened by an instrumental piano duet by Miss Alice Hunter and Miss Murdock which was well received.

The chairman, Mr. E. A. Tanner, Reeve of Lakefield in a neat speech, explained the nature of the Farmers' Institute meetings.

"There is no province that occupies a more important place in agricultural work" said he, "than does Ontario." There are 175,000 people in the province engaged in tilling the soil. The farmer is a creator of wealth and brings the wealth up from the ground and it is this that is making the province go ahead by leaps and bounds."

A cornet solo by Mr. Riddell was then given and received hearty applause.

FARM POULTRY.

Mr. H. C. Duff district representative at Norwood was the next speaker. The subject of "Farm Poultry" was discussed by him. In this country we are coming to the conclusion that there is a good deal of money made in poultry. Regarding the value of egg circles in this county if you had seen the improvement in quality recently you would come to the conclusion that the change was remarkable. The Windsor Hotel Montreal which uses most of the eggs sent from there now used just about twice as many as formerly and this certainly speaks well for this district. It would pay us said Mr. Duff if we would stick to one breed of hens the barred Rock, for instance, being hard to beat and is worthy of being raised exclusively.

One particular breed and stick to it—never mix up the breed. Many new henhouses are being built these days and the farmers are taking pride in them. However one drawback he noticed was their expensiveness. The kind we want are houses that can be cheaply built with plenty of fresh air and no draughts.

Feeding chickens is another important point. In concluding Mr. Duff said that the people of the whole province were looking to Peterborough as one of the greatest egg-producing communities in the province.

A vocal solo "Sugar Moon," by Miss Webster was the next number and was a popular one with the audience.

An address by Mr. Groh then followed on "Canadian Boys and Girls." He stated that he was scarcely capable of speaking on such a subject.

Two classes of boys always exist. One class is always hunting for a job the other class are being hunted. Men of character and stability are being hunted. Every one in this life should have something to do and find out what he is really suited for. Do what you have to do well and others will hunt you. Never look for anything soft but work hard at what you are at. The whole thing is to find out what you are fitted for and then do it. Do the things as they come to you. Everybody is good for something. We too often get dissatisfied with our lot in life.

Another thing worth notice is that you are being constantly under surveillance always being being measured up when you are not expecting. You cannot do anything you like when boys and girls and then later on when you are grown up forget all about it and think that everybody else forgets it. One important thing is education. Some of those who go to college often come out with big heads and false notions. If a person once settles down to seek and search after something something definite, then aid is worthy to that person. Early in life he should have some ambition.

"Get them to realize they are here for a purpose and not for a snap."

"If you want to be a millionaire be a farmer" said Mr. Groh.

"There is more real good coming to the farmer than ever came to a millionaire. The country boy gets character, life and vigor. Everything that is good has originated on the farm, and the boys and girls who have amounted to anything came from the farm. About 85 per cent. of successful men and women came off the farms. The men who are doing the things in life came from the farm. You may have all the freedom of life on the farm. If the farms won't grow good boys, then assuredly the city never will."

In concluding his address Mr. Groh urged the people to go ahead, assert their opinions, and have the courage of their convictions. The farmers' greatest drawback is that they have not developed their speaking abilities. They can talk well in the blacksmith shop, but not on the platform. If the farmer is going to get his stand he must learn to speak and develop himself. If the boys and girls will learn to do this, then one of the greatest problems of youth is solved.

After this address a recitation, in costume, was given by the Misses Vincent, and evoked loud applause.

PERFECT WOMANHOOD.

Dr. McAlpine was next introduced. When speaking to a mixed audience she wondered why such a subject as "Perfect Womanhood" had been assigned to her. While much of a serious nature had been expounded on question, still it was as keen as ever. There are fundamental differences between men and women which give different spheres to their lives. Women know how to endure pain, for men are notoriously susceptible to pain. However, there are other different characteristics, two of which are physically and morally. Men are better at logic, they reason things out in a cold, clear-cut manner. Women often obtain their conclusions by intuition, which often enables them to grasp opinions without the long process of reasoning. Women's gift of intuition is oftentimes wonderful. While solid reasoning is not despised, she was pleading for the combined power of intuition and reasoning, as each mutually assists the other.

This power held by women enables them to know instantly what is right in social affairs. This is why women will always lead in the social world. Women also are more emotional; they have the heart side much more prominently developed than have men. The womanly traits of sympathy, love and tenderness which express the feelings so strongly, that constitute the women, must be fostered.

Often women have to go out and fight the world, and it is these womanly traits that make her such a power, and which they always assert for the good of the world generally.

Woman has a tremendous work to do in the world. It is a woman's duty to strive for a strong physique to enable her to cope properly with the hardships of the world.

In the old days there was a terrible prejudice against woman having any brains, or at least asserting them. Jane Auster had to hide her identity as an author on this ground, and her real name was not known as the author of her books until after her death.

The best educated women in the country should be the mothers. A perfect woman, if she wishes to be perfect, must have a certain degree of mental development. A strong personality must be developed also, if she would be complete. Women should keep alive other qualities also. It has been said that men do not understand women and perhaps it is just as well, because we always love the mysterious. Idealism is another strong trait of womanhood. It would be the greatest calamity if it would disappear from our women.

Some women we find, however, who live in a world of idealism. The ideal woman would be the one who would be happy medium between those two mighty characteristics.

Dr. McAlpine's address was of an excellent character, and was delivered in a scholarly manner.

A duet by the Misses Burgess proved to be very acceptable, and was heartily applauded. It was entitled "Fifty Years Ago"

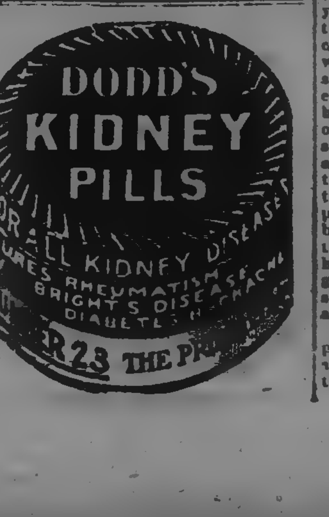
Mr. Cowan, editor of "Farm and Dairy," was the concluding speaker. He received a liberal welcome. "There is a great element of truth," said he, "in the saying that many farmers might become millionaires. There must be some great reason why farmers quite frequently emigrate to the city. Whatever the reason is, I think you will agree that after spending a lifetime on the farm they do not make more money out of it."

The remainder of Mr. Cowan's address was practically the same as his address on Wednesday evening, and brought out startling facts in connection with the monopolization of the wealth of the land by the wealthy men.

His address was startling and instructive.

Miss Jory, owing to illness, was unable to take part in the program.

Mr. E. M. Elliott, county treasurer of Peterborough, made a very acceptable short address, and was heartily welcomed back on the platform of the Farmers' Institute. He wished to state his appreciation of the enjoyment he derived from the evening, and intimated that his heart was always open to Institute work. He corroborated many of the statements made by the previous speakers, and bestowed his best wishes on the movement of the Farmers' Institute.



Misses Baptie and Moore, in a very charming vocal duet delighted the audience, and the session was closed by the hearty singing of "God Save the King."

Everybody was unanimous in the opinion that it had been one of the most successful in its history.

Mr. E. M. Elliott moved a vote of thanks, which was heartily endorsed.

Meeting at Ennismore

THE FARMER'S HORSE

Mr. McKelicon, of Norwood, speaking at Ennismore on Wednesday on "The Farmer's Horse," said, "In speaking of this subject I only want to make a few remarks, and then the discussion will follow. What is the farmer's horse? What is the best kind to raise? There is the heavy draughts, which are very scarce; and then there are lighter breeds. But in selling colts the complaint usually runs that they are too light.' I am not going to touch on poor horses, because the heavy draughts need not necessarily be pure breeds.

"There are hundreds of heavy horses in the city, and the city people must depend upon the farmers for their supply of these horses. Heavy horses are called for because the light ones are no use for heavy work in the cities. There are parts of the country where people are against heavy horses. In driving in the winter the sleigh tracks are too close together for the heavy horses to walk on them. This is one reason that the heavy horse is not cared for by the farmer."

Mr. Flood, cheese man, read a report of Ennismore cheese factory, which concluded the items on the afternoon's programme.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening meeting was well attended, the hall being crowded to the door. A violin solo, followed by a selection on a gramaphone, started the proceedings of the evening, after which Mr. Anson Groh, of Preston, gave a very interesting talk on "Benefits of Farmers' Institutes."

"It is not my topic, but perhaps I will say a few things about it," said the speaker. "If I don't make it to the point, you will make allowance for the fact that I am speaking on another man's topic.

"If we can't double the income from the farm, it is because there is lack of co-operation, but organizing Farmers' Clubs is the time when we can pull together. I would like to see the farmers' clubs progress. There are great things done by Farmers' Institutes. There is a great thing being done by bringing you people here to-night to talk over the affairs that concern you. We have a country that produces cows that produce 3,000 pounds of milk per year, and Ontario with 4,000 pounds. But the Farmers' Institute are bringing about all this. To-day we have all got silos; it is because the Farmers' Institute hammered it into them. We know our local conditions, and we know what parts of the country are fitted for a particular product. We have a chance to make fine surveys of the country and can advocate the principles of our observation to the farmers. The Department of Agriculture can see these things and can see the value of the Farmers' Institute. Books were written on agriculture, and the farmer would not bother with them. These books were introduced into the school, and yet they were despised, until now the people are beginning to see that there is some good in these books. Out of those things came the movements of to-day, which did not come from the hands of professors. From that came the Farmers' Institute, Agricultural College at Guelph, Farmers' Clubs, and other movements towards better modes of agriculture. Great inventions have developed from these movements which mean millions to the country. There is the scientific side and the practical side. There are difficulties that arise up before the practical farmer and the scientific man can help him. He doesn't know everything, but he knows a lot, and can aid a great deal. You have the practical trouble, whether it is a disease of plants or other things, and we can put these before the scientific men and they can help us. And all this is due to the Farmers' Institute. And, I must say that you are a queer farmer if you are not interested in some branch of agricultural work. No man accomplishes anything if he is not interested in it. You should read agricultural papers and you will learn their values. You will never forget the fundamental education you will get from it. The next generation will be different from this, just as this is different from the last. I would advise every one of you to join the Farmers' Institute and then you will have a lot of good, interesting reading.

Mr. C. Telford sang a very much appreciated song, accompanied by the piano and cornet, which was followed by another selection on the gramaphone.

Dr. McAlpine, of Toronto, was the next speaker. She took as her subject, "How to be well and happy." After a little introductory talk, she told them that they did not need to be told how to be well and happy, for they were already so. "But," said the speaker "I will endeavor to tell you 'how to keep well and happy.' In order to be well we must be happy, and in order to be happy we must be well. It is quite needless for me to say that if you want to be happy you must be well. I don't think that anybody that is perfectly well, can be anything else but happy. If a wife should find her husband drunk she would say 'Oh, the old thing, etc. etc. She would say, 'Oh, well, he has chronic indigestion' and go on and be happy and her husband should treat his wife the same. When a bad disease comes over the country and people say that it is a visitation of Providence. Not so it is simply an epidemic. Tuberculosis is a bad disease every eighth funeral, the victim died from that. We know how to prevent it so that we should guard against it. And when it is shown to us what we do we should act accordingly.

Take a common cold for an example. It is caused [illegible] These are always present around the nose and throat and the reason they don't always take hold of us is because the fighting qualities of our bodies prevents them. Suppose we sit in this room for a number of years as it is unventilated the fighting qualities of our bodies are lowered. There are different things that lower the fighting qualities one is anxiety. Suppose a case of smallpox breaking out near you, you would be afraid of taking it. The fears take hold of the resistance of the body and lowers its fighting qualities. Many people have an idea that if you are anyway well, that some time you will get sick, and if you get good medicine you will get cured. That is what patent medicine men work on. And so it comes about that you have their firms flourishing all through the province.

Medicines simply helps nature, it is not that they cure. There may be half a dozen drugs that go to the spot, but everything won't. The idea that a person can get ill and be cured by patent medicines does a lot of harm. We must get all these things out of our heads, or we will be unhappy. You can't be happy unless you are perfectly clear of all these functions. Any person who worries too strenuously will have a shorter life. One must have several interests in life. It seems to me in rural communities, the women have a tendency to get in to a rough way of living, and it only takes a little thing to set one unhappy. Now, if you had a Women's Institute in your midst and attended it, it would take the worry off your minds and make life more interesting. I have heard of other places starting a Womens' Institute, and I don't see why the people of this community cannot. And so I hope if I ever come here again you will have a flourishing institute.

This excellent speech was followed by a song by Mr. J. K. Galvin.

The next speaker was the editor of the Peterborough Farm and Dairy, Mr. H. B. Cowan. His subject was; "Why farmers do not become rich." The principal features of his speech are as follows; "On starting out, I would like to know a man that has made a million dollars off the farm. Is there anybody here who knows one? I was talking to one of the best farmers in Ontario, and he said he did not know of three farmers, who had made $25,000 on the farm. What is the reason? That is what I will try to answer."

"Sometimes a potter turns out a pot that is a misfit and he sets out to find out the reason. That is what we will do. Millionaires are not such great men as we think. People try to get into society with millionaires, and millionaires do not know any more than ourselves, and we have no reason to be afraid of them. If all the wealth of this continent was distributed evenly, would everybody have a million. Not much. For one man who makes a million, there are thousands who suffer. There are only two classes of people—the class who work and the people who live on the work of others. In the majority of cases the millionaires are the drones, as it were. Everybody is depending on the farms. All classes of people are making wealth and they have a common cause against the "drones." These men are taking out of your pockets, nearly as directly as if they put their hands in, a certain amount of your wealth. There are three great classes of monopoly. Any man here can easily get to be a millionaire if he will slip into the cities and get control of the natural resources. The last 50 years has seen a tremendous increase in the production of wealth. Steam vessels take the place of sailing vessels, etc., but are the farmers any richer than they were? We have seen the advantage of wealth in the hands of a few people. We have seen people invest millions of dollars, and we have seen people almost starve. We have seen one-eighth of the people of the United States control seven-eights of the wealth of the United States. It is simply because these people are able to dictate the price of things. It is due to that reason that there has been a decrease of 63,000 in the population of Ontario. These drones are taking your living from you. What are we going to do about it? Simply to realize that these conditions exist. We should have more meetings, just like these, we should develop the Farmers' Clubs and discuss these things. It does not matter what government is in power, these conditions exist, but improvements are coming. The Farmers' Institute will improve things. Yet we do not see the improvements that we should see. As a class, we are standing together to get our rights. And we hope to see our farmers get the amount of wealth they should.

Mr. McKellican, of Norwood, then spoke on "The relation of the Agricultural College to the farmer."

I see by the bills that I am supposed to speak on "the relation of the Agricultural College to the farmers," he said, "but I do not wish you to understand that I am going to confine myself to the Agricultural College alone. I may speak of men such as Prof. Dean. People may say that they cannot farm. Possibly not, but they can give us some advice. They have the experimental farm. We can have the benefit of their experiments. Some farmers think that they know all about farming, but they do not, and they do not derive the benefit from the college that they should. I have attended the college and can give it nothing but praise. Some people judge the college by the poor class of farmers it turns out, but a man must or should be, a farmer before he attends. A farmer sends his son right through to college and expects that he should return a full fledged farmer, but they are foolish. A boy must have some practical knowledge and simply go there to be improved. If you have any sons you are going to send to college, when he comes back give him a chance. Don't treat him the same as before he went. Give him all the responsibility you can. Don't hand over all the farm, but let him try some particular branch, and if he does not succeed, you can soon see that you have put him at the wrong occupation. We are paying the professors at Guelph and we want to get the best out of them. We should read the results of experiments of these men, and we should attend these meetings. That is the only way to get even with them. There is something to be gained by getting together and working together, and I would be glad to help you, if you ever thought of organizing a farmers' club here.

Mr. E. Telford then rendered a much appreciated vocal selection, which was heartily encored.

Mr. Telford, former president of the Institute was then asked to speak. He said: "I did not expect to be called upon to speak this evening, but I will say a few words. I have been a farmer for a great number of years, and I will still stick to it. I think that the young people of to-day cannot help but benefit by the Farmers' Institute meetings. There are profits to be derived from it. It was only the other day I saw a friend writing upon the economy of the people of America. He thought that the people of France could economise better. I don't think I will take up any more time, said the speaker, as it is getting late.

Rev. Fr. Fitzpatrick then made a few remarks in which he congratulated them upon the success of the evening. He said: "It was time enough to bid the devil good-morning when you met him," and also a few other humerous remarks.

Mr. Garbutt then passed a few closing remarks, and the meeting closed by singing the national anthem.

Fourteen new members were enlisted as members of the Institute.

HISTORICAL ADDRESS ON LIFE OF CANADA

Col. MacQueen, of Toronto, Before Canadian Club—The Early Struggles and the Planting of the National Flag on the Plains of Abraham—Next Speaker President Falconer.

Another well attended and interesting meeting of the Peterborough Canadian Club was held last evening at the Hotel National the visiting speaker for the occasion being Col. MacQueen of Toronto.

He spoke about Canada referring principally to the militia, and in a manner that was intensely interesting. He told of great deeds of the militia and its officers which are now bright pages of Canadian history and his wish was that all Canadians would join together in the one great aim—that of endeavoring to build up the nation to the high position it was worthy of occupying.

Dr. Cameron the president of the Club was the chairman of the evening and the attendance numbered about seventy-five.

After the menu list had received the attention of the gathering in the usual flattering manner the meeting was called to order and the president noted that the present membership of fifty should be augmented by the addition of new members which he thought could be secured by individual effort on the part of the present members. He hoped for a membership of two hundred and fifty. In future, he said, the meeting would commence at eight o'clock sharp, and that tickets would only be available at the office of the Hotel National. The executive would not deal with the tickets in the future.

The address was divided in four parts, and at the conclusion Messrs. W. McIlroy and H. Morphet gave patriotic songs which were enthusiastically applauded. Mr. McIlroy was heard in "O Canada," "Rule Britania," and Mr. Morphet in "The Maple Leaf" and "Heroes and Gentlemen." Mr. R. J. Devey presided at the piano.

Col. MacQueen, following his introduction to the gathering by the chairman, expressed his pleasure at being asked to speak on a subject very dear and near to him. His prefaced his remarks with a story told by the late Dr. Beers, a pioneer Canadian and father of Canada's national game, lacrosse, and which brought out this point, that Canadian writers are apt to use their pen, in telling of other countries and overlook their own home—Canada.

He told of the discoveries coming to this land from different lands and of their accomplishments, particularizing on Jacques Cartier, who first sailed up that glorious river the noble St. Lawrence.

Next he told of the many early struggles for supremacy of the country, bringing his hearers up to the year 1774, which found the French laying claim to all known and unknown Canada. The English only owned a small strip on the Atlantic. Then came Washington and the commencement of the seven years' war. The first celebration of the 1st of July found Washington captured and then followed the French regime. Col. MacQueen here pointed out that the deeds of the French were accomplished, not by natives of France, but by French Canadians. It was a French Canadian gentleman and officer who had taken Washington, a providential occurrence, to the mind of the speaker, as otherwise he might have been killed and so not become the great man he did.

Then came the year 1784, when England sent out good generals. The capture of Quebec was brought about by Wolfe and his small army, but with this small number was the old story of British discipline as on parade in the face of death.

The flag in 1759 went up to stay, and we Canadians, English and French, will keep it there, said the speaker amidst great applause. Every actor now lies silent in the grave, but it was on the Plains of Abraham that it was destined that both French and Canadians should live together under one flag.

Next came the attempt of the American army to take Canada, and its subsequent defeat of its purpose. Then followed the war of 1812, with Hull invading Canada, the capitulation of Detroit to General Brock, and the answer to the American boast that Canada could be taken without soldiers.

Col. MacQueen took up the succeeding historical events in the history of Canada, referring to Canada raising 40,000 men in two weeks at the time of the Fenian Raid, to the struggles in the south-west, and the response and work done by Canadians at the time of the Boer war. And if all would do their part Canada would become a veritable garden—beautiful to look upon and delightful to live in.

Dr. Morrison and Mr. S. R. Armstrong moved a vote of thanks to the speaker, and this was tendered by the president to Col. MacQueen who made a neat acknowledgement.

During the early part of the evening music was supplied by a Victor "Victrola," kindly loaned by the Green Music Company. Red Seal Records were used, the selections being of a high order of merit and greatly enjoyed.

MANN—BALL.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at "The Pines," Bridgenorth, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ball, on Wednesday, Nov. 30th, at six o'clock, when their only daughter Mary Edna Delene, became the charming bride of Mr. Garbutt Mann, youngest son of the late James Hull Mann. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. Mr. Crookshanks in the presence of their many relatives and friends.

The bride entered the drawing-room on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Pauline Udy. The bride was becomingly attired in a beautiful gown of ivory silk permo resilda, seeded with pearls and with touches of hand-pointed lace and embroidery. The long veil fell gracefully over her shoulders and she carried a shower bouquet of roses and ferns. She was unattended.

After the ceremony the guests proceeded to the spacious dining-room, where a dainty breakfast was served.

The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful gold watch and chain.

She received many useful presents of silverware, cut-glass and china, besides a number of cheques.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Mann left for their home, "Oakwood farm," amid showers of confetti and good wishes.

Mrs. Mann will be at home to her friends after Dec. 12th.

HISTORICAL BATTLE NOW ON TO-NIGHT DECIDES 63 CONTESTS

Fifteen Candidates Are Elected by Acclamation, of Whom Three Are Liberals--"Joe" Martin and Hamer Greenwood Have Hot Fight on Their Hands.

London, Dec. 3.—Excluding the unopposed returns yesterday there are 63 contests to-day. The Unionists hope, if the moderate man supports them, to gain ten seats. If he abstains or supports the Liberals, there will not be much perceptible change.

Little change is expected in the Midlands, but reports from Manchester are very encouraging to the Liberals, who expect to do twenty per cent. better than at the last election. This would mean a gain of many seats.

The Unionists have issued a leaflet reproducing the opinion of Joseph Martin, published by Collier's Magazine. This referred to him as a millionaire, who had drawn pay from the C.P.R., though he opposed corporations. Martin is having a hotter fight in East St. Pancras than in January. He has two opponents—Hopkins, a Unionist and wealthy business man, who has been quietly working the constituency for some time past, and Jacob Banister, who is standing as a woman suffrage advocate. The constituency is being invaded by militant suffragettes, whose motto is "turn out this miscreant Ministry." They make great use of Martin's own speech in the Commons, in which he said he had lost all confidence in Asquith.

At Sunderland, which is a two-member constituency, Hamar Greenwood is bracketed with Gladstone, a Labor candidate, against Samuel Storey, a leading merchant and shipowner and brother of a former lord mayor of London, and Joynson-Hicks, who defeated Winston Churchill at Manchester. Everyone agrees that the fight will be close. The Unionist Yorkshire Post says Goldstone is of little account, but Greenwood fights most vigorously, and his attack called for unwearied watchfulness and resource on the part of the Unionists.

Although his seat is uncontested, Donald McMaster is issuing a spirited election address advocating a strong navy, a tariff reformist referendum and a reformed House of Lords, as the only safeguard of a true democracy.

The Cape Times says the Unionist proposals are far more in the spirit of the deadlock provisions in the Commonwealth and South African Union Act than the purely destructive policy of the Liberals.

Manchester South, Haworth, Liberal, was returned unopposed. The Unionist Glazebrook's nomination arrived at the nomination station six minutes too late. Following are fourteen other candidates returned unopposed yesterday. They number twelve Unionists and two Liberals:

Aston Manor—E. Cecil.
Birmingham (Bordsley)—Jesse Collings.
Birmington (Edgbaston)—Sir F. W. Lowe.
Birmingham (North)—J. T. Middlemore.
Birmingham (West)—Hon. Joseph Chamberlain.
Bury St. Edmunds—Hon. W. E. Guinness.
Dover—Hon. George Wyndham.
Hythe—Sir E. Sassoon.
London (City)—Hon. A. J. Balfour, Hon. F. G. Banbury.
Liverpool (Everton) — Harmwood Banner.
Morpeth—Hon. T. Burt.
Swansea District—Sir B. Jones (Lib.).
South Shields—Rea (Lib.).

In the final words of the last general election, the Canadian Associated Press expresses the opinion that the question of tariff reform must remain undecided pending a settlement of the House of Lords' position on the constitution, the reason being that many people favoring tariff reform could not regard the present Chamber as other than an anachronism. Events have widely justified this view and unless the issue in the present contest is indecisive, which is not improbable, the road will be closed for epoch marking legislation by one party or the other.

Last night all the great guns were booming. Balfour spoke at Grimsby, followed by Winston Churchill, who traveled a hundred miles in a special train, studying a hurried transcribe of the Unionist leader's speech handed him en route, and replied to Balfour at midnight. Grimsby and Northwest Manchester are points of great interest, for the Liberals will be greatly pleased if they down Doughty again and Bonar Law.

Balfour made a studied appeal to the "moderate men," whom he thought were "coming over to us" because of Redmond's domination. He was accused of destroying the Parliamentary system by introducing the referendum, but the destroyers were the Government. They wished to destroy the power of the second Chamber and gag debate in the first. About home rule, Balfour was passionate. Home rule never figured in a radical election address, and they never explained in their speeches. None knew what was meant by home rule, yet if returned the Government would claim a mandate for home rule. It would be an outrage.

Lloyd-George, at Ipswich, said: "What is going on is a kind of a Dutch auction. The Lord first put it up and said, 'Why, you buy us at our own price.' The people replied, 'Not likely.' Then they came down and said, 'Why; pay us a reformed character, half peers, half something else, a kind of shandygaff institution.' Then, they said, 'Why, you take us at any price.' No bid. Next, they say, 'Why, you buy us at the price of a referendum.' We reply, 'Much too expensive.' They say, 'Then we will give you tariff reform.' If you return Liberal members here to-morrow your example will be followed, and you will get a house of lords 'cheap.'"

FOUND GUILTY OF SEEKING BRIBE

New York, Dec. 3.—The jury in the case of G. W. Yeandle, who has been on trial in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court for offering to sell for $2,500 his vote as a juryman to the defence while serving on the jury sworn to try Edward G. Rosenheimer for the killing of Miss Grace Hough, returned a verdict of guilty yesterday afternoon. Yeandle was remanded for one week for sentence. The maximum sentence for the crime is twenty years.

What Laurier Gave.

London, Dec. 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—T. P. O'Connor, replying to an offer of £100 for every sovereign Laurier subscribed to the Irish cause, said that it meant £2,000 would be added to the funds.

House Adjourns Dec. 14.

Ottawa, Dec. 3.—The House of Commons will adjourn for the Christmas recess on Dec. 14. It will reassemble on Jan. 10.

NORTHWESTERN HARD ON ROCKS

Seattle, Wash., Dec. 3.—The Alaska Steamship Co.'s steamer Northwestern is hard and fast on the rocks at False Bay, San Juan Island, four miles from Roche Harbor. She went on at almost high tide, has thirteen feet of water in her forward hold, and may be a total loss.

The Northwestern left Seattle for Valdez, Alaska, Thursday night with 28 passengers and 600 tons of freight. She struck the rocks at 2.40 a.m. The British steamer Tes, which was near, responded to a wireless call from the Northwestern, and took over the passengers and mail, which it is expected will be landed at Victoria.

The foreign board is also enjoined in the resolution to seek the abrogation of the opium treaty with Great Britain and so prevent further importation from India.

MUNICIPALITIES MUST SHARE

Montreal, Dec. 3.—Chairman Mabee of the Railway Commission spoke out yesterday with no uncertain sound as to the relative responsibility as to level crossings.

The chairman said it would be absolute ruin to saddle the companies with the whole cost of safety appliances, and that the municipalities will have to pay their share. In fact, it was no use for them to try to get out of this responsibility.

It would be decided, concluded the chairman, whether a third is too much for the municipalities to pay.

Seizures of Furs.

North Bay, Dec. 3.—Game Warden Parks and Provincial Officer McRae made a round-up of contraband furs on Thursday, which has thrown a big scare into this thriving industry. One consignment of muskrat and bearskins was seized while being expressed from Latchford to Toronto, the next seizure was of mink, muskrat and other furs in transit.

GENERAL CENSURE

Merlin, Dec. 3.—That several parties contributed, by negligence, to the death of Christopher Boyer, who was killed while attempting to cross with a traction engine a newly-built cement bridge on the Four Rod road, Raleigh Township, was the verdict last night of the coroner's jury that investigated the circumstances.

The verdict given censures the township council for unbusinesslike methods of letting contracts and for allowing such a bridge to be open for public travel before being inspected by the engineer; censures the engineer for not condemning and closing the bridge at the time he inspected it, and find him party responsible for the accident, and finds that the commissioner was at fault in not being in continuous attendance while the work progressed.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 3.—Followed by a crowd of several hundred persons, John Wendling, charged with the murder of Alma Kelner, was yesterday afternoon marched through the streets with the judge and trial jury from the court house to St. John's Church, the scene of the alleged crime. The prisoner was nervous and seemed relieved when taken back to the court room, although no demonstration was made by the crowd.

It is almost a mile from the court house to the church. When the trip started, Judge Gregory turned to the people and asked them not to follow. Court officials accompanied the jury and prisoner through the church where the prosecution contends that Alma Kelner was killed, and then to the parochial school beneath which the supposed body of the child was found.

The defence closed its case yesterday and court adjourned until to-day, when arguments will be made.

ARCHBISHOP BRUCHESI DENIES RUMOR

Montreal, Dec. 3.—Archbishop Bruchesi smilingly anticipated a press representative's questioning regarding The Toronto Globe's Ottawa despatch respecting his grace's alleged designs on the Holy See.

"It is all too false and absurd to bother about," he said. "Of course, the suggestion that I had begun my campaign to secure the office of pontiff through bribery is wicked, it carries its own refutation on the face of it. Who ever wrote the nonsense, shows a lamentable lack of knowledge of the procedure of the church."

EXPENDITURE IS GROWING; AN INCREASE OF $6,035,575

In Reviewing Decision of Hague Tribunal Minister of Justice Says That Canada's Right to the Inland Sea Has Been Upheld With Britain's Aid.

Ottawa, Dec. 3.—The main estimates covering the estimated expenditure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1912, were tabled in the House yesterday, in the absence of Mr. Fielding, by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. They provide for an expenditure of $138,853,200, an increase of $6,035,575, over the main estimates for the current fiscal year. The principal increases are:

Public debt, $989,525.
Agriculture, $1,039,500.
Militia, $592,201.
Ocean and river service, $303,500.
Postoffice, $626,080.
Railways and canals, $630,754.

There are a number of decreases, the largest being $348,050 in miscellaneous expenditure.

Of the total expenditure $100,674,627 is chargeable to consolidated fund, while $38,188,573 is chargeable to capital account.

The proposed vote for the naval service is $3,831,500, as compared with $3,676,500 for the current year. The increase is represented by a sum of $185,000 to provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations, and $45,000 for the maintenance of tidal stations, sums originally voted under the lighthouse and ocean and river service. For the naval service proper three million dollars is provided, being the same amount as for the current year. This sum covers the purchase and maintenance of ships, the upkeep of dockyards, and the maintenance of training schools. The details are not stated.

Hon. Sydney Fisher's appropriations include a vote of one million, an increase of $950,000 to cover the cost of taking the census in June next. This accounts for the large increase in the agricultural vote mentioned above. The vote for immigration will be $1,066,250, an increase of about $25,000.

The chief increases in the amount to be voted for militia and defence are: $150,000 for annual drill, and $100,000 for clothing. There is a new vote of $50,000 to encourage the cadet movement. New votes for military buildings and works include Kenora Armory, $15,000; Kingston Royal Military College lodgekeeper's house, $4,000; model and gun shed, $11,000; new stable for B Battery, $1,000; London magazine, $8,000; Orillia armory, $15,000; to complete Ottawa magazines, $6,000; accommodation for School of Musketry at Rockliffe, $15,000; Prince Albert armory, $10,800; Winnipeg magazine, $8,000.

For surveys and construction on the National Transcontinental Railway the sum of $27,000,000 is provided, the same as for the current year. Two million dollars is provided for the Quebec bridge.

There is a $17,000 increase in the vote for the Railway Commission, which now stands at $138,000.

The harbor and river votes include $650,000 for harbor improvements at Fort William and Port Arthur; $58,000 for improvements at St. Andrews Rapids, Red River; $126,000 for improvements at Tiffin; and $150,000 for improvements at Victoria Harbor, Ont.

An address which might be termed the official report to Parliament on the award rendered by The Hague tribunal on the fisheries arbitration last summer was delivered by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, to the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, on the resumption of the debate on the address to his excellency.

In line with his previous utterances in Ottawa and Newmarket, Mr. Aylesworth said: "The result of these proceedings is in itself a source of legitimate gratification. It was a victory for the principle of arbitration and a triumph for peace.

"It was the first occasion in which a matter of such international importance had been so settled. He laid special stress upon the value of the decision in regard to the right of United States fishermen to operate in the bays on the coasts."

Mr. Aylesworth again gave an effective denial to doubt expressed that colonial interests were not well looked after by British statesmen.

"It is no more than simple justice to say, in respect of the arrangements which have been from time to time entered into in regard to various matters of difficulty that have arisen between United States and Great Britain, that the general interests of the empire at large have been well conserved by the representatives of the British crown in these negotiations."

BANK OF MONTREAL MUST GIVE UP WOMAN'S PROPERTY

In Important Decision Privy Council Decides That Prominent Hamilton Lady is Freed From all Liability to the Bank as a Result of Signing Over Her Home to Them.

London, Dec. 3.—Lord McNaughton yesterday delivered the Privy Council judgment in the case of the Bank of Montreal v. Stuart.

The company went into liquidation, and the bank got from Mrs. Stuart transfers of all her property, including "Inglewood," the Stuart home at Hamilton, and where the present King was at one time a guest. In December, 1906, Mrs. Stuart began proceedings against the bank. The action was tried before Justice Mabee on Dec. 10, 1907.

After referring to several transactions, his lordship said the evidence was clear that in all these transactions Mrs. Stuart, who was a confirmed invalid, acted in passive obedience to her husband's directions. She had no will of her own, nor had she any means of independent judgment, even if she had desired to do so. She was ready to sign anything her husband asked her to sign and to do anything he told her to do.

"At the same time," says the judgment, "it was right to say that in her evidence in this action she repudiated the notion that any influence was exerted, or any pressure put upon her, or that her husband made any misrepresentation to her. She says she acted of her own free will, to relieve her husband in his distress, and that she would have scorned to consult anyone. She certainly knew that she was incurring liability in order to help her husband and the company in which he was interested. Her declaration, in the course of examination, that she acted of her own free will and not under her husband's influence, is merely to show how depreciated but how lasting the influence of her husband was."

It seems to their lordships that in this case there is, according to the recognized doctrine of the courts, equity to entitle Mrs. Stuart to relief from the unfair advantage of which Mrs. Stuart's confidence in her husband was taken by Stuart; and also, it must be added by Mr. Bruce.

"Their lordships' opinion is that the order of the Supreme Court of Canada is right, though they are unable to concur in the reasons on which that order was founded, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs."

MISTAKEN SIGNALS WAS THE CAUSE

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Dec. 3.—Mistaken signals is the cause assigned by the captain of the C.P.R. steamer Athabaska for the collision in which his steamer sank the tug General off the foot of Little Island, St. Mary's Passage, Wednesday, with the loss of three lives.

He says: "The night was clear. The tug General was sighted when a mile away. I gave a blast. This was unheeded, and another blast was blown. At this time the two vessels were plainly visible to one another. The General was headed for my starboard quarter.

"I signalled to inform that I would steer a straight course. A few moments after the helm was put hard over on the General, and an attempt was made to cross my bows and go on my port side. With a crash the vessels met, and two minutes later the General sank.

INVESTIGATION RESULTS

As this city is establishing a hospital for the treatment of certain contagious diseases, the results of the investigation into the workings of the isolation hospital in Toronto, held by Judge Winchester, will be of interest and may be of assistance to those who will be responsible for the management of the local institution.

While commending Dr. Sheard, who was Medical Health Officer, and his staff, and acquitting the officials of the hospital of negligence or lack of attention, the Judge found that there has been cross-infection that is, that patients who had been admitted suffering from one disease had contracted another while in the hospital. The engineers had been very careless, moving about from one part of the hospital to another, handling mattresses and linen, mingling with the nurses and maids and ladling out milk without changing their clothes or taking any precautions. Medical men who attended patients in the hospital were also censured for not robing themselves or taking any other precaution to prevent contagion, and it was found that the maids of the scarlet fever and diphteria wards commingled also without taking any precautions.

While persons who are not familiar with contagious diseases may pass a placarded house with bated breath, and breathe easier when on the oppositite side of the street, the trouble is that others who are brought into daily contact with such diseases in the course of duty may become so fearless that they no longer recognize the importance of the measures required for preventing contagion, and their carelessness becomes a danger to others. Those who will be responsible for the new hospital should and no doubt will prescribe such rules as will protect the patients and the public. Judge Winchester recommends separate buildings in Toronto for the different diseases, but this may be partly on account of the large number of cases in the inadequate accomodation. But the fact that two diseases will be treated in the one building here, as they have been in Toronto and are in many other places, makes it the more necessary to have rules adequate for the purpose of preventing cross-infection and watchfulness to see that the rules are fully carried out.

In preparing the plans for the Peterborough building, precautions were taken to prevent cross-infection, and with proper care there should be no trouble from this cause.

CHURCHLESS PEOPLE

Toronto has the reputation of being a particularly good city, yet a Toronto clergyman states that after a careful computation based upon results of the recent home visitation he could say that fifty per cent. of the people in Toronto do not attend church. Indeed, the figures he quoted seemed to show that he understated rather than overstated the case. And what is true in Toronto is no doubt, to a lesser or greater degree, true in other cities.

There must be something wrong with the people, but is it not also the case that there must be something wrong with the churches? It is the duty of the leaders among them to give the matter serious attention and find out why half the people neglect to assemble themselves together for religious duties, yet there would appear to be a lack somewhere.

Is it because those who do attend church are not sufficiently in earnest?

Do strangers find that the atmosphere is repellent rather than attractive?

A formal hand-shake at the door—making a pump-handle of his arm, as a former Peterborough pastor said—may do something to impart a home-like feeling, but unless this is accompanied by a social inclusiveness at other times and other places it will not accomplish much. The population of Canada is continually shifting, and it is in the moving from one place to another that a number of people drop out of church attendance. This is perhaps, especially the case with young people, and when they become older they do not always resume attendance.

Christianity, with its recognition of the brotherhood of man and its principles of love, should attract and retain more than one-half of a people that are law-abiding and moral minded. There is nothing wrong with the religion the churches are maintained to teach; it must prevail. The churches accomplish a great deal for the communities. Even those who do not so far recognise that as to attend their services are benefitted by them. But there must be a reason why they are not more successful, and finding out the fact by home visitations will not bring a remedy unless the reason is sought and found and removed.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Liberal papers are praising the Minister of Marine for having abolished the use of the patronage list in his department. They do well to praise him now, for when the facts are known they will not likely have the opportunity.

James J. Hill, the American railway magnate, predicts hard times, and says it will be a result of governmental and individual extravagance. Will the collecting of money to pay dividends on watered stocks have anything to do with it?

It is a singular fact that although in the recent elections in the United States a majority of Democrats were elected to Congress, another session will be held before they take their seats, and the Republican majority will continue to legislate. We in Canada would not tolerate a session of an old Parliament after a new one had been elected, but they do not seem to mind it across the line.

"Certainly," said Orde.

"From another point of view," went on Newmark, "you are practically mortgaging your interest in the Boom company for $75,000. That would make, on the usual basis of a mortgage, your share worth above $200,000, and $400,000 is a high valuation of our property."

"That looks more than decent on your part," said Orde.

"Of course it's none of my business what you intend to do with this," went on Newmark, "but unless you're sure you can meet these notes I should strongly advise against it."

"For how long a time could I get this?" asked Orde at length.

"I couldn't promise it for longer than five years," replied Newmark.

"That would make about $15,000 a year and interest. Well, I don't see why I can't carry that easily on our present showing and prospects."

"If nothing untoward happens," insisted Newmark.

"We're driving 150,000,000 at a profit of about 60 cents a thousand. That's $90,000—in five years $450,000. We ought to clean up $5 a thousand on our mill. That's about a hundred thousand on what we've got left."

"And that little barge business nets us about twelve or fifteen thousand a year."

"For the five years about $00,000 more. Let's see—that's a total of, say, $800,000 in five years."

"We will have to take up in that time," said Newmark, "two payments on timber, the note on the First National, the Commercial note, the liabilities on the Boom company—$300,000 all told."

"Correct," said Orde. "Good enough. I ought to get along on a margin like that."

He set to figuring. The results he eyed doubtfully. Each year he must pay in interest the sum of $7,500. Each year he would have to count on a proportionate saving of $15,000 toward payment of the notes. In addition, he must live.

But Orde was fond of risks.

"Never mind. It's for Bobby," said he to himself. "And maybe the rate of interest will go down, and I'll be able to borrow on the California tract if anything does go wrong."

He stepped across the hall into Taylor's office.

"Frank," began Orde immediately, "I came to see you about that California timber matter. Now, what I want is this"— He proceeded to outline carefully the agreement between himself and Newmark, while the lawyer took notes and occasionally interjected a question.

"All right," said the latter when the details had been mastered. "I'll draw the necessary notes and papers."

"Now," went on Orde, producing the bundle of papers from his pocket, "here's the abstract of title. I wish you'd look it over. It's a long one, but not complicated, as near as I can make out. Trace seems to have acquired this tract mostly from the original homesteaders and the like, who, of course, take title direct from the government. I want you to look it over, to be sure everything's shipshape.

"One other thing," concluded Orde. "I want this investment to get no farther than the office door. You see, this is for Bobby, and nothing spoils a man sooner than to imagine the thing's all cut and dried for him, and nothing keeps him going like the thought that he's got to rustle his own opportunities. Bobby's going to have the best education possible. He's going to learn to be a lumberman by practical experience, and that practical experience he'll get with other people. No working for his dad in Bobby's, I can tell you. Then, when he's worked into the harness a little, the old man will take him out and show him the fine big sugar pine and say to him: 'There, my boy; there's your opportunity, and you've earned it. How does Orde & Son sound to you?' "

"How does Orde & Son sound to you?"

Taylor nodded several times.

"I believe you're on the right track. Count on me."

As Orde walked home that evening after a hot day his mind was full of speculation as to the immediate future. He had a local reputation for wealth, and no one knew better than himself how important it is for a man in debt to keep up appearances. Nevertheless decided retrenchment would be necessary.

Chapter 29

NEWMARK marched precisely down the street to Heinzman's office. He found the little German in. Newmark demanded a private interview and without preliminary plunged into the business that had brought him.

"Heinzman," said he abruptly, "my partner wants to raise $75,000 for his personal use. I have agreed to get him that money from the firm."

"Proceed," said Heinzman shrewdly.

"As security in case he cannot pay the notes the firm will have to give he has signed an agreement to turn over to me his undivided one-half interest in our enterprise."

"Vell? You vant to borrow dot money of me?" asked Heinzman. "I could not raise it."

"I know that perfectly well," replied Newmark coolly. "You are going to have difficulty meeting your July notes as it is."

Heinzman hardly seemed to breathe, but red blazed in his eye.

"I intend," went on Newmark, "to furnish this money myself. It must, however, seem to be loaned by another. I want you to lend this money on mortgage."

"What for?" asked Heinzman.

"For a one-tenth of Orde's share in case he does not meet those notes."

"But he vill meet the notes," objected Heinzman. "You are a prosperous concern. I know somethings of your business also."

"He thinks he will," rejoined Newmark grimly. "I will merely point out to you that his entire income is from the firm and that from this income he must save twenty odd thousand a year."

"If the firm has hard luck"— said Heinzman.

"Exactly," finished Newmark.

"Vy you come to me?" demanded Heinzman at length.

"Well, I'm offering you a chance to get even with Orde. I don't imagine you love him."

"Vat's de matter mit my gettin' efen with you, too?" cried Heinzman. "Ain't you beat me out at Lansing?"

Newmark smiled coldly under his clipped mustache.

"I'm offering you the chance of making anywhere from thirty to fifty thousand dollars."

"Perhaps. And suppose this liddle scheme don't work out."

"And," pursued Newmark calmly, "I'll carry you over in your present obligations." He suddenly hit the arm of his chair with his clinched fist. "Heinzman, if you don't make those July payments what's to become of you? Where's your timber and your mills and your new house and that pretty daughter of yours?"

Heinzman winced visibly.

"I vill get an extension of time," said he feebly.

"Will you?" countermarked Newmark.

"Vell, maybe," laughed Heinzman uneasily. "It looks to me like a winner."

"All right, then," said Newmark briskly. "I'll make out a mortgage at 10 per cent for you, and you'll lend the money on it. At the proper time, if things happen that way, you will foreclose. That's all you have to do with it. Then when the timberland comes to you under foreclosure you will reconvey an undivided nine-tenths interest—for proper consideration, of course, and without recording the deed."

Heinzman laughed with assumed lightness.

"Suppose I fool you," said he. "I guess I joost keep it for mineself."

Newmark looked at him coldly.

"I wouldn't," he advised. "You may remember the member from Lapeer county in that charter fight and the $500 for his vote. Try it on and see how much evidence I can bring up. It's called bribery in this stage and means penitentiary usually."

"You don't take a joke," complained Heinzman.

Newmark arose.

"It's understood, then?" he asked.

"How so I know you play fair?" asked the German.

"You don't. It's a case where we have to depend more or less on each other. But I don't see what you stand to lose, and anyway you'll get carried over those July payments," Newmark reminded him.

Heinzman was plainly uneasy.

"If you reduce the firm's profits he is going to suspect," he admonished.

"Who said anything about reducing the firm's profits?" said Newmark impatiently. "If it does work out that way we'll win a big thing. If it does not we'll lose nothing."

He nodded to Heinzman and left the office. As he entered the office of his own firm his eye fell on Orde's bulky form. He paused involuntarily, and a slight shiver shook his frame—the dainty, instinctive repulsion of a cat for a large, robustious dog. Controlling himself, he stepped forward.

"I've made the loan," he announced. "The banks wouldn't touch northern peninsula, so I had to go to private individuals."

"Don't care who deals it out," laughed Orde.

"Thayer backed out, so finally I got the whole amount from Heinzman," Newmark announced.

"Business is business," replied Newmark.

From the moment Orde completed the secret purchase of the California timberlands from Trace he became an unwitting participant in one of the strangest duels known to business history. Newmark opposed to him all the subtleties, all the ruses and expedients to which his position lent itself. Orde, sublimely unconscious, deployed the magnificent resources of strength, energy, organization and combative spirit that animated his pioneer's soul.

Newmark worked under this disadvantage: He had carefully to avoid the slightest appearance of an attitude inimical to the firm's very best prosperity. If the smallest incident should bring clearly before Orde that Newmark might have an interest in reducing profits he would know the logic of the latter's devious ways. For this reason Newmark did not dare make bad sales, awkward transactions. The profits of the first year were not quite up to the usual standard, but they sufficed. Newmark's finesse cut in two the firm's income of the second year. Orde roused himself. With his old time energy he hurried the woods work until an especially big cut gave promise of recouping the losses of the year before. Newmark found himself struggling against a force greater than he had imagined it to be.

The end of the fourth year found Newmark puzzled. Orde had paid regularly the interest on his notes. How much he had been able to save toward the redemption of the notes themselves his partner was unable to decide.

What Orde regarded as petty annoyances had made the problem of paying for the California timber a matter of great difficulty. A pressure whose points of support he could not place was closing on him. Against this pressure he exerted himself. The margin of safety was not as broad as he had reckoned. But in any case, if worse came to worst, he could always mortgage the California timber for enough to make [illegible] and more. [illegible] ever, he opposed a sentimental obstinacy. It was Bobby's, and he objected to incumbering it.

Affairs stood thus in the autumn before the year the notes would come due. Navigation remained open into November. No severe storms had swept the lakes. The barge and her two tows had made one more trip than had been thought possible.

The weather continued so mild that Orde decided that they take on a load for Jones & Mabley of Chicago.

"Did intend to ship by rail," said he. "They're all 'uppers,' so it would pay all right. But we can save all kinds of money by water, and they ought to skip over there in twelve to fifteen hours."

Orde departed for the woods to start the cutting as soon as the first belated snow should fall.

"All loaded by noon, sir," he said.

Newmark looked up in surprise.

"Well, why do you tell me?" he inquired.

"I want your orders."

"My orders? Why?"

"This is a bad time of year," explained Captain Floyd, "and the storm signal's up. All the signs are right for a blow."

Newmark whirled in his chair.

"Are you afraid?" he sneered.

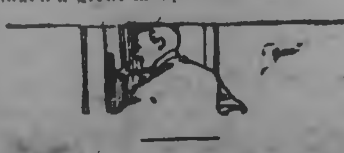
Captain Floyd's countenance burned a dark red.

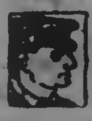
"I only want your orders," was all he said. "I thought we might wait to see."

"Then go," snapped Newmark. "You heard Mr. Orde's orders to sail as soon as you were loaded."

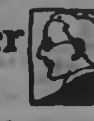
Captain Floyd went out.

Newmark arose and looked out of the window. From the government's flagpole he caught the flash of red from the lazily floating signal. He was little weatherwise, and he shook his head skeptically. Nevertheless it was a chance, and he took it, as he had taken a great many others.





Chapter 30



TO Carroll's delight, Orde returned unexpectedly from the woods late that night. He was so busy these days that she welcomed any chance to see him.

After breakfast Carroll accompanied her husband to the front door. When they opened it a blast of air rushed in, whirling some dead leaves with it.

"I guess the fine weather's over," said Orde, looking up at the sky.

A dull lead color had succeeded the soft gray. The heavens seemed to have settled down closer to the earth. Whirlwinds scurried among the dead leaves on the lawns, chasing them madly around in circles.

"Winter's coming," shivered Carroll.

Carroll resolved to take a drive, as she enjoyed blustery weather. She stopped for Mina Heinzman, and the two walked around to the stable, where the men harnessed old Prince into the phaeton.

They entered Main street, where there was a great banging and clanging of swinging signs and a few loose shutters. All the sidewalk displays of vegetables and other goods had been taken in, and the doors, customarily wide open, were now shut fast.

"I wonder where all the farmers' wagons are?" marveled the practical Mina. "Surely they would not stay home Saturday afternoon just for this wind?"

Fresh Air in Winter

In winter, it is hard to get fresh air in certain rooms. Some rooms in a house are usually colder than others, and if you open the windows it is hard again to heat the room properly.

If you keep the windows closed you don't get fresh air; if you keep them open you cannot quickly reheat the room. The solves the difficulty. You can leave the windows in a room open all day in winter, and when you close them apply a match to a Perfection Oil Heater and heat the room to any temperature you desire in a few minutes.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel. It burns for nine hours. It has a cool handle and a damper top. It has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be quickly cleaned. An indicator always shows amount of oil in the font.

The filler-cap does not need to be screwed down. It is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

OBSERVATIONS on the EYE

Many animals can see with each eye separately, but man cannot do so. The horse, for instance, can see on both sides of him, and when we stand in front of him he can see us with only one eye at a time, because both his eyes cannot act together. The ancient Greek spoke of the eyes as the windows of the soul. They might have gone further and said of the body also. By glancing at a person's eye we can estimate his character pretty well and an observing physician can often tell by the eye the exact nature of a person's sickness.

"Look After Your Eyes"

When the eyes are affected, the whole general health is affected as well. We make no charge for examination. If your eyesight is perfect we will be pleased to tell you so. If, however, there is any defect which needs correcting, we guarantee to fit you with glasses that will surely correct it.

DICKSON CO. OWN ALL WATER POWER AT LAKEFIELD

(Lakefield News.)

By purchasing the water power from Mr. S. R. Leggott, the Dickson Co., of Peterboro, now own the entire water power in Lakefield. The deal was put through last week and ended what might have resulted in serious complications. Mr. Leggott, who, some time ago purchased the old Griffin planing mill and water power, decided to build a new power house for his electric light plant, and last week commenced blasting out the old tail race of the water power. The Dickson Co. objected to the proceedings, and on Friday sent men up from Peterboro to stop the work and to use force if necessary. The men saw how things were and refused to work, which was a lucky thing for them, as a large number of men in the village were ready to back Mr. Leggott up with any assistance he might require. Peaceful negotiations were then commenced with the result that Mr. Leggot sold his water power and mill to the Dickson Co. for a good figure.

DEBATE ON RECIPROCITY BY THE NORMALITES

Decision of the Judges in Favor of the Affirmative

A debate featured the regular meeting of the Normal School Literary Society, held yesterday. The subject "Resolved that Reciprocity with United States Would be Beneficial to Canada," brought out some splendid arguments, and after a lengthy deliberation by the judges a decision in favor of the affirmative was returned.

The debaters were Misses Dix, Smith, Ford and Mr. Donnely for the affirmative, and Misses Knowles, Gibson, Davey and Mr. Smith for the negative.

President Clubine occupied the chair and other numbers on the programme were:

Vocal Duet — Misses Armstrong and Garbutt with piano and violin accompaniment by Misses Davies and Flavelle.

Instrumental Solo — Miss Monoghan.

Speech — The president.

A TYPICAL WINTER MARKET

The market this morning was a typical December one, and you could feel in the air that Christmas was drawing nigh. Without exception, it was the busiest, most largely attended and best patronized of the season.

The following were the quotations this morning—

Pork, 11 1-2 to 12 1-2c, by the quarter.
Beef, 7c and 8c, by the quarter.
Butter, 25c per pound.
Eggs, 35c a dozen
Geese, $1.30 and $1.35.
Chickens, 75c a pair.
Turkeys, $1.70 to $2.00.
Apples (Spys), $2, by the bag.

A remarkably large amount of hay was prominent to-day. About nine loads were on at 11 o'clock. Fourteen dollars was the price.

BLACKLISTER GAVE THE NAMES OF TWO MEN

Who Supplied Him With Liquor—Charge of Shop-breaking—Harry Watters Goes to the Hill Again.

Magistrate Dumble reserved judgment for a week, in a blacklist case this morning.

The accused pleaded guilty to a violation on Wednesday of this week, alleged by Inspector Stewart, and when called to the witness box, in answer to the inspector, furnished the court with the names of two men who furnished him with the liquor.

He also answered that these men had supplied him on other occasions.

Witness was not positive that they knew him to be hated but thought that they were aware of his position. Neither had procured liquor for him during the time between July 5th and November 17th, when he was off the list.

NOT GUILTY.

Alfred Meakins didn't lose any time in responding with a plea of "not guilty" to the charge that on the 24th of October he broke into the premises of Alex Elliott and stole one-half dozen bottles of gin.

The Chief wasn't ready to proceed and a remand to jail till next Friday was ordered.

THREE MONTHS.

Harry Watters will eat his Christmas dinner at Castle Nesbitt.

Harry finished a term yesterday and once clear of the stone walls, partook of the flowing bowl. Quite naturally the police copped him.

But Waters knows no other hearth. He was deported across the briny deep, but proved loyal to his friends on the hill and returned here.

It is three months this time.

AN APPEAL TO THE CITIZENS

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—It is the intention of the Salvation Army in this city to organize systematic relief work among the poorer classes during the ensuing winter. And in this connection I wish to make an appeal to citizens for cast-off clothing of all kinds, shoes, etc. We have in connection with our local corps a band of energetic workers—Our League of Mercy—who are not only willing at all times to look after poor cases, but who also devote considerable time in sewing and mending clothing for those in need. It has been a pleasure to many of the citizens during the past winters to co-operate with us in this work by sending their cast-off clothing, etc., and I am assured it is only necessary to issue this appeal to enlist the same hearty response again this season.

In connection with this relief work I am also desirous of organizing a poor relief fund, and I am persuaded there are many philanthropic friends who would be willing to assist us in this connection. All donations to this fund will be kept separate from our general funds, and will be conscientiously and carefully used in the alleviation of distress and want among deserving people during the winter days.

Donations in cash, as well as orders for groceries, flour, fuel, meat, boots and shoes, or other serviceable goods, will be acknowledged by mail.

Thanking you for your insertion of this appeal.

Respectfully yours,
ENSIGN J. H. MERRETT,
Commanding Officer.

THE LATE WILLIAM SMITH

Citizens in general will learn with regret of the death of Mr. William Smith, which occurred last evening at the late residence, 30 Aberdeen Avenue.

The late Mr. Smith was forced through illness to resign last midsummer from the principalship of the Central School, a position he filled for some thirty years. His condition at times improved, but only temporarily. Some time ago he was confined to his home and then to his bed, gradually sinking till the end came.

The deceased was born in Cavan township sixty-three years ago, and he received his early education in the Central school, of which in 1879 he was appointed principal. He was a teacher highly regarded by his pupils, and many of those who are now successful men and women can look back to happy school days spent under the tuition of the late William Smith. He was valued as a principal and teacher by the Board of Education, and that body received his resignation with deep regret. In religion the deceased was a Presbyterian and a member of St. Paul's church.

Surviving him, besides his bereaved widow, is a family of six daughters and three sons.

The funeral will be private, and it is requested that no flowers be sent.

"NOT OUTS" HELD MASQUERADE

The "Not Outs" fancy dress ball, last evening, in the conservatory of Music Hall, was largely attended and a very brilliant affair. About seventy-five couples were present, many in costume and all wearing masks. Dancing commenced at 8 o'clock and continued till eleven, when an interval was given for the serving of refreshments. These were served by six young men dressed as "Cream of Wheat," and six girls attired as milk maids. The affair broke up at twelve o'clock.

"Salome" is banished from Chicago repertoire of opera company.

VERY ATTRACTIVE PROGRAMME

For Knights of Pythias Concert at Conservatory Hall on Friday

The local Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, has arranged for a concert to be given in the Conservatory of Music Hall, next Friday evening, the 9th inst.

The programme will be given by the Imperial Male quartette of London, Miss Julia Choate, F. Clarke and the Conservatory of Music Orchestra.

The Orchestra has been heard to advantage so often that little need be said of its ability to please an audience.

Mr. Clarke as a banjo soloist has become a popular entertainer in Peterborough, and that Miss Choate as an accomplished violinist is well known.

The Imperial Male Quartette makes its first appearance in this city. The fact that the Quartette is lately of the Chicago Lyceum Bureau is sufficient guarantee of its ability as a musical organization.

The members of the quartette will also be heard in solos and duets.

The press notices from their home city, London, Ont. and elsewhere indicate the splendid entertaining ability of the quartette.

GRADUATION EXERCISES OF NURSES HELD LAST NIGHT

Splendid Addresses by Prominant Men—Affirmation and Conferring of Diplomas—Presentation of Medals and Reading of Valedictories—A Splendid Musical Program.

Those ministering angels of mercy, the sweet girl graduates of the Peterborough Nicholls Hospital, came into their own last evening at a distinctly high class and agreeable function, namely, the graduation exercises for the classes of the years 1909 and 1910. The ceremony was held in the commodious Collegiate Institute Hall, and the large patronage of intelligent and interested citizens generally demonstrated forcibly the amount of interest which is displayed in the good work which the Nicholls Hospital is carrying on in this city. As stated previously, the graduating exercises at last night's occasion covered two classes, viz., those who finished their course in 1909 and those who completed it this year. The event was thus made much more interesting.

The platform of the hall was beautifully decorated with cloth rosettes, prettily strung around the walls, and the effect of the setting was pleasing in the extreme. On the platform were Mr. Richard Hall, chairman; Dr. R. W. Bruce Smith, superintendent of hospitals and charities, and Rev. Canon J. C. Davidson.

Mr. Richard Hall, in his capacity as chairman, in a few timely remarks opened the program. He was delighted to be able to state that the hospital was prospering, and the work increasing year by year, and people are more than ever realizing its advantages. It was with great pleasure that he was able to call on Canon Davidson for a few remarks.

CANON DAVIDSON'S ADDRESS

Rev. Canon Davidson cordially endorsed the statements of Mr. Hall. In his official capacity as a minister of the gospel, on making his pastoral visitations he was frequently brought into contact with the nurses, and it was with great pleasure that he was able to speak so creditably of them from his observations of their noble mission. The nurse's calling was indeed a noble one, and if a nurse devoted herself heart and soul to her ministrations, then indeed she was worthy of the appellation heroine, in the highest sense of the term.

Remarks of a similar nature were spoken by Mr Davidson, and that his eulogism was endorsed by the audience was evidenced by the hearty applause which followed. In the course of his remarks he also urged the nurses to be ready to sacrifice all to their calling, and richly would their sacrifices be rewarded. They should seek to minister not alone to the physical nature of their patient, but always, when possible mingle with their physical attentions the soothing balm of comfort which is bestowed from above.

DR BRUCE SMITH.

Dr Bruce Smith the eminent and well known physician, was next introduced. He gave numerous and interesting statistics of the bestowals of money to many hospitals in cities and towns of the province for the advancement towards making their various hospitals more efficient, and was glad to see that the same generous principle was not absent here.

"The hospital spirit," he said, "is not a new thing. It is very old, and the influence of it is spreading. It is marking the advance of Christian influence and Christian civilization."

He extended his sincerest congratulations to the nurses, as they were present to receive diplomas, enabling them to launch forth on a career so noble and full of love.

The profession was indeed a heavenly one, and the nurse who possesses the attributes of tact, skill, patience and firmness must indeed be a success in the profession. He urged them to cultivate to the utmost those powers, and also in every way be an example, both morally, physically and spiritually, to the world. Self-preservation came first, then a stainless moral status, and an upright life. Each graduate nurse must hold her character sacred, and assuredly great blessings will accrue. The spirit of optimism must be encouraged, and let cheerfulness always be associated with doing acts of kindness.

Dr. Smith's words struck a responsive and favorable note with those present, and he received a great ovation on concluding his stirring and encouraging address.

PRESENTATION OF BANDAGING PRIZES.

The most interesting part of the evening then commenced.

Miss Della I. McGill was presented with the bandaging prize of the class of 1910, the presentation being made by Dr. Frederick with a few suitable remarks.

Miss McGill seemed to be a favorite with the audience, and she received hearty applause.

AWARDING OF DIPLOMAS.

The affirmation and confering of diplomas was next proceeded with, the nurses all occupying the front seats in the hall, and repeating the form of ordination for such an occasion. Then all the nurses filed on to the platform, where the presentation of medals took place. The nurses were overwhelmed with beautiful bouquets of flowers also presented to them by several little boys and girls in charge of Miss Withel Hewett, nurse-in-training.

NICHOLL'S HOSPITAL

Miss Ethel Davidson received the bandaging prize for 1909. Miss Euna P. Kennedy proved to be a very close second in this competition this year.

The superintendent, Miss F. E. De La Matter, in a very nice address, wished to assure the staff, the doctors and those present of her gratitude, and that of the assistant superintendent, Miss M. E. McGregor, for the honor bestowed upon them. Her words met with instant favor, and were exceedingly appreciated.

The reading of the valedictory for the class of 1909 was performed by Miss Ethel Davidson. It was as follows—

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen,—Upon me has fallen the honor of speaking this evening for my class, but as there are two classes graduating and I represent the smaller of three nurses, I shall make my remarks as brief as possible.

I want for a few moments to look back over our three years of work in the Nicholls Hospital.

We entered in 1907, filled with ambition and in happy ignorance of the struggle that lay before us—a struggle the severity of which only those who have gone through it can understand.

During those three years 1660 patients passed through the hospital. They represented operations, major and minor, typhoid fever, nervous diseases, and nearly all the other ailments which fall to the lot of man.

In connection with these it was the duty of the hospital staff to carry out as faithfully as possible the doctor's orders and we think that the large number of complete recoveries stand as a testimonial to the skill of four medical men and the competency of our nursing staff.

MR JOHN CRANE
An Energetic and Useful Member of Nicholls Hospital Board

We wish to night to convey to our superintendent, Miss De La Matter, and our assistant superintendent, Miss McGregor, our grateful thanks for the kind and ready help they have always given to us in our many difficulties. It was under their capable direction that we worked our way from probationers to head nurses, and now that we have reached our goal and are to-night receiving our diplomas, it is with great regret that we say farewell to the old hospital. For there many warm friendships have been formed, among both the staff and the patients, and there also we have learned many lessons that we will carry with us through our lives.

Our patients might be divided into two classes—those who bravely endured pain and sorrow, whom we all felt it was a privilege to know—and who cheerily faced the troubles that had fallen on them. And the other class who needed to be sustained and helped through their sufferings.

And again we want to thank the doctors and older nurses for the kindly help they always gave us in our difficult cases and for the patient, cheerful example they always set us.

During the three years many improvements were made in the hospital. Miss De La Matter has worked unceasingly to add to the comfort of both patients and nurses and we would like to take this opportunity of thanking her for the many comforts she added to the nurses quarters, and Mr. Richard Hall and the Board of Trustees for the ready support they gave her in the matter. As for our doctors and all they have done to assist us in our studies, we can find no words to express our thanks. The many hours they have spent in the lecture room, their patient instruction in the wards, their kindness and courtesy during the three years. I cannot convey to them, as we would wish, our thanks.

But fortunately the other class has its valedictory address also and Miss Hill will help me to convey to the hospital and all those connected with it, our gratitude.

Miss Julia M. Hill read the valedictory for the year 1910, which is given herewith—

The saying of farewell calls forth different feelings with different people at different ages and under different conditions of life.

The child whose emotional nature is undeveloped is keenly interested in the change which a farewell suggests, lives only in what is to come, and wastes little sentiment in lingering. But in maturer people whose experiences of life have developed character and parting of the ways and breaking up of the habits of some years, or the embarking upon the serious business of life, means much that is likely to be reviewed with very mingled feelings. It is then with keen regret that we say farewell to our period of probation and training, and to those who have during these years of anxious struggling after professional knowledge and experience, so kindly and wisely guided our faltering and often erring footsteps.

To the Board of Management of the Hospital, whose watchful provision for its needs has made possible the training we have received, we, the members of the graduating class, tender our thanks and wish them continued success in a work, which they are so ably carrying on in the city of Peterborough.

To the doctors of the staff we owe a deep debt, and in saying farewell to the Nicholls Hospital, we should like to express our gratitude to them for the patient training in technical knowledge which they have given us. We thank them also for what is higher than technical skill, a proper sense of the value and sacredness of human life and noble example of unselfishness and devotion, and duty.

But our warmest expression of gratitude and our keenest regrets are called forth by parting with our superintendent and assistant superintendent, Miss De La Matter and Miss McGregor. Our daily contact with them and their constant supervision and unwearing helpfulness have been by far the most important factor in our training the most determinous influence upon our lives. Their wide experience of the trials and difficulties of the nurses' life has enabled them to smooth over the rough places in our paths, while sparing us none of the hard discipline which is so necessary a part of the nurse's training.

In closing, we look not only backward with pleasure and regret on the days that are no more, but with a hope and confidence to the career, the success of which we feel to be guaranteed by the fact that in the Nicholls Hospital we were trained to scorn delights and live laborious days.

A SPLENDID MUSICAL PROGRAM.

The pleasure of the evening was enhanced by a high-class musical program, which delighted all.

Miss Helen Davies, always popular, was at her best last evening, and sang a beautiful solo to excellent advantage.

Miss Maud Butler, of Toronto, by her rendition of a charming vocal selection, captivated the audience, and had to respond to an encore. Both her numbers were given with splendid effect, and she revealed herself to be the possessor of a voice of great range and sympathy. She, in addition, has a pleasing stage personality.

Miss Gertrude Reid also sang well, her solo being difficult, and requiring a voice of great range and expression.

A violin solo by Dr. H. G. Park, D Paed., also drew forth deserved applause.

The accompanists for the evening were Miss Davies, Miss Rossamond Mr. John Crane.

SPORTING NEWS

A TALK ABOUT SPORT

A regular and welcome caller at this office, remained somewhat longer than usual yesterday afternoon. A talk on hockey was the cause. One matter and then another was remarked on, and finally the conversation narrowed down, to the quality of the sporting blood shown by the players in the city.

He deplored the fact that players played the dummy act when asked to "shell out" and pay for their sport. In his opinion, this element in athletics was largely responsible for the very much in evidence dependence in sports.

And he wasn't in our opinion very far out. It is too true that the youngsters of to-day have not the spirit of the players once in the same position, but now out of the famous games. Ask Rollie Glover, Chris. Graham or any others of the old Brigade, who paid for their first, second or third outfit. Ask them who called around at the house or tailed them on the street, in an endeavor to get their autograph on a piece of printed paper. In the first place they would tell you they would tell you they used the contents of their own penny bank, and the second answer would be "nobody" with the explanation that they were tickled to death to even get a chance.

How many are there like that today. About one in a dozen — perhaps. How many players in the city baseball league this past season went down in their jeans to assist in the meeting of accounts for balls, bats, suits, etc. Not many.

The trouble is, the managers and other officers of athletic clubs, foster this spirit of the players in their attempt to beat the other club in the race for players who are hardly to blame if their feeling of importance expands as it has in some cases to a mark where it is "how much is there in it."

If clubs would shut down on these nursery methods, the problem to a great extent would be answered.

AT THE CRYSTAL SUNDAY NIGHT

One of the sweetest male quartettes ever sung is the old Southern melody, "Steal Away." It will be sung on Sunday evening at thwe Crystal Theatre by the Y.M.C.A. male quartette. The four men who compose the quartette are practicing every day and are becoming more familiar with each other's voices. Those who heard the selections last Sunday will be anxious to hear the songs on Sunday night. Of you have never attended this meeting you ought to try it next Sunday night. There will be a five minute address on the subject, "Hardened Necks." All are welcome.

The Sunday morning Bible Study Club will have an interesting lesson on Sunday morning at 9.30. All men are invited.

EXCITING RUNAWAY LAST NIGHT

E. A. Oke's delivery horse ran away in East City last evening about six o'clock and caused considerable excitement for a while. The bolt connecting the shafts and the cart dropped out, thus allowing the animal freedom, which it immediately seized. It ran from Engleburn Avenue, where the mishap took place, across Hunter street bridge, and at the corner of George and Hunter streets struck a little terrier dog owned by Miss Bertha Jones, and came near sending it to the dog heaven. In front of Creamman's store the horse fell over on the pavement. After a little it was assisted to its feet. The dog, however, was badly cut and had to be taken to a veterinary for proper attention.

LAST SERVICES TO-MORROW

The services last night at Mark Street was of the nature of a blessed climax to the interesting services that have been held during the week.

Mr. Whiteside will conclude his work here to-morrow night, when many will hear his parting counsel with sincere regret that his engagements will not permit of his longer stay.

The order of services for the day will be as follows:

Prayer in the basement at 10 o'clock a.m.

And the closing service in the evening.

CHILDREN BRIGHT IN PETERBORO

"The Peterboro Children are Indeed Bright," remarked Adam McMurdo the artist evangelist at the close of the Childrens Meetings at the Gospel Hall, last night. A special meeting had been arranged to review the work of the past week and award the prizes. The new hymns the children learned were sung heartily. The programme commenced with a duet by Chas. Hewson and Wm. Millar. Sarah Millar recited "The Fate of the Spring Poem" and later sung a beautiful hymn. Frank and Charles Hewson rendered a Christmas carrol, while the little Walker sisters, Agnes and Mary sang sweetly. In the review work which followed, the competition was keen, but with the assistance of Messrs. Binnie and Keller, the following children were selected as prize winners: Sarah Millar, Mary Hewson Roy Anderson, Reta Ouibell, Wallace Mulligan, Charles Telford and Agnes and Mary Walker. The address of the evening was given by Robert McMurdo, which was enjoyed by all.

BRIGHT ADDRESS TO THE Y.M.C.A. BOY SCOUTS

Mr. A. S Hopper, Provincial Y.M.C.A., Toronto, delivered a very interesting and instructive talk to the Y.M.C.A. troop of Boy Scouts last evening. About thirty-five Scouts attended and at the close of Mr. Hopper's address, signified their appreciation by the heartiness of their applause.

After lucidly explaining the correct system of organization and the various ways in which their wants might be made to the board of directors, Mr. Hopper said that they did not want spoon-fed babies, but fellows who would do something, and who would advance each other's welfare, and the interests of the scout movement generally. He then compared the average boy with the grain of wheat, which, if not planted, did not increase or multiply, and said that each Scout must be prepared to sink out of sight occasionally if by so doing he might add to the happiness of others, and help someone to a life which was higher, larger, better and truer.

Truth would always come to the top as truth always had. The Scouts must always do the big thing and nothing which would make them feel small and mean.

Mr. Hopper warned the Scouts not to be kicker, or they might spoil all the good they undertook to do, like the Jersey cow back on the farm where the speaker was raised, which invariably kicked and spilled all the milk just as the milking was finished.

Mr. Hopper spoke of the opportunity Peterborough afforded for them to do great things, and warmly complimented the association in raising forty members for the troops within a month, also congratulating the boys on their smartness and general appearance.

They must not he added, neglect to attend the Bible class, as their spiritual development was as important as their physical development.

By checking themselves from doing wrong they would not only receive the Lord's blessing or the blessings of people around them, but would also have the blessing in their own lives.

Mr. Tait, boys' secretary of the Y.M.C.A., thanked Mr. Hopper on behalf of the Scouts, after which the troop formed up and marched to the armories, where they were put through a stiff drill by Scoutmaster Hodges and Patrol Leaders Armstrong and Hamilton respectively.

It illustrates the earnestness of the boys that when asked whether they would prefer to attend the band concert or drill in the armories they unanimously decided in favor of drill. We unhesitatingly add that we see a great future before the Boy Scouts' movement in general and in view of the splendid spirit of discipline, fellowship and brotherhood which characterizes the movement, we hope to see it prosper.

RURAL TELEPHONES HOW TO ORGANIZE

In connection with the growth of rural telephone companies throughout the Dominion, a new book has recently appeared on the market which will be of special interest to many of our readers.

Realizing the need for practical information on the subject, the Northern Electric & Manufacturing Company has recently revised into a large volume its bulletin on "How to Build Rural Telephone Lines." This book, bound in stiff, cloth-covered binding, contains over a hundred profusely illustrated pages of comprehensive information, carefully indexed into seven chapters.

"How to Build Rural Telephone Lines" deals with the complete story of the telephone, mutual and stock company organization, line-survey and construction, the installation of the instruments, the material required, the instrument itself and the government regulations on the subject. Each and every one of these subjects dealt with fully and at length.

With this book in hand, anyone who can follow printed instructions can handle the complete organization and construction of a rural telephone company, from start to finish. Notwithstanding its cost, the Northern Electric will send this book free—but only on request and when the name of this paper, in which this article appears, is mentioned. We would advise all of our readers who are in any degree interested in the subject of rural telephones to write for it.

"I HAD ONE OF MY RAGING HEADACHES

When I First Used "Fruit-a-tives"

Wm. PITT

SHANLY, ONT. SEPT. 23, 1910.

You certainly have the Greatest Discovered Headache Cure, in the world. Before "Fruit-a-tives" came before the public, I suffered tortures from headaches, caused mostly from stomach disorders. I tried many different remedies without any relief.

One of your travellers called on me shortly after you started selling "Fruit-a-tives", and on that day I had one of my raging headache, and had my head almost in a raw sore from external applications. I hated to see any person coming into the store (I am a general store keeper at the above address and have been in the same store 25 years) much less a commercial traveller, and I told him, very curtly, that I had a headache and "want none of his Patent medicine", but he very good-naturedly offered me a sample of "Fruit-a-tives", and insisted on my trying them. I did so, with what I would call amazing results. They completely cured me and since then (nearly six years ago) it is only necessary for me to take one occasionally to preserve me in my present good health. I was 65 years old yesterday.

You are at liberty to publish this letter and my photo, if you think it would induce some others to use your splendid remedy. (Signed) Wm. PITT.

Chance had led to the discovery of hundreds of pounds' worth of jewellery at Sunlaws House, near Kelso-on-Tweed, the Border residence of Mr. John Clay, the Chicago Cattle King. Mr. Clay recently came over from America to take up the mastership of the Berwickshire Foxhounds. An old and dirty looking iron box, which had long since been relegated to the lumber heap, came under the notice of a dealer in scrap iron the other day, and he offered to purchase it. Fortunately, as subsequent events proved, the dealer and the estate manager could not come to terms. His curiosity having been aroused, the estate agent took steps to have the box opened soon after the dealer had gone, but the task was no easy one, and was only accomplished with the aid of a blacksmith. A great surprise was in store for those who watched the smith's operations, for on the box being opened their gaze was met by a rich assortment of jewellery, including rings, watches, and necklaces of great value. Sunlaws House, which is the property of Col. Scott-Kerr, was badly damaged by fire 25 years ago, and it is suggested that the box was amongst the articles rescued, and was afterwards overlooked. The jewellery is said to have belonged to Col. Scott-Kerr's mother. Fortunately for the owner, a customer of a Shepherd's Bush-road (London) furniture warehouse was about to buy a second-hand cupboard for 4s., when he saw a defect. He said he would call later, and if the defect was remedied would purchase the article. The dealer, Mr. C. H. Green, examined the cupboard, and found a drawer at the back containing shares valued at £200, a Post Office Savings Bank book worth £97 19s., two £5 notes, two sovereigns in a purse, twelve sovereigns in a woollen bag, and eight sovereigns in a paper bag. In all the value of the find was £414. The money has been returned to the owner.

A HINDU WIZARD.

His Trick That Puzzled an Occidental Master of Magic.

Some of the tricks of the Hindu wizards are past understanding, according to an occidental master of magic who was speaking of his oriental rivals. This is what he says he saw a Hindu wizard do in a club in Lucknow:

"He took a board and placed it on four glass goblets, thus elevating it from the floor. A youngster sitting on the board was requested to place his hands together, palms up. Then the juggler took a glass of water and poured it into the outstretched hands of the boy. In the meantime the boy had been mesmerized, and his attention was fixed on a point indicated by the magician. Gradually the water turned green in color and then developed into a jelly which increased in density until it became as solid as a stone. Out of the center of this appeared the head of a snake, which gradually developed until in the place of the water there appeared a hissing reptile. I was amazed. I can assure you, but the trick was not yet completed. Hitting the reptile upon the head with his wand, the juggler took it up carefully and placed it back in the glass. As we looked it became transformed into a jelly, which in turn melted into a greenish colored water. Clearer and clearer became the fluid until it was of its original color, and then the juggler placed it to his lips and drank the entire contents. This was the most wonderful trick I ever saw performed, and it is as mysterious to me today as it was then."

BANKING IN ENGLAND.

Started by London Goldsmiths in the Seventeenth Century.

The business of banking was not introduced into England until the seventeenth century, when it began to be undertaken by goldsmiths in London, who appear to have borrowed it from Holland. It was attacked, as innovations commonly are. Mr. Gilbert in his "History and Principles of Banking" quotes from a pamphlet published in 1676, entitled "The Mystery of the New Fashioned Goldsmiths or Bankers Discovered," a passage that may be reproduced:

"Much about the same time—the time of the civil commotion—the goldsmiths (or new fashioned bankers) began to receive the rents of gentlemen's estates remitted to town and to allow them and others who put cash into their hands some interest for it if it remained but a single month in their hands or even a lesser time. There was a great allurement to put money into their hands, which would bear interest till the day they wanted it, and they could also draw it out by £100 or £50, etc., at a time as they wanted it with infinitely less trouble than if they had lent it out on either real or personal security. The consequence was that it quickly brought a great quantity of cash into their hands, so that the chief or greatest of them was now enabled to supply Cromwell with money in advance on the revenues as his occasion required upon great advantages to themselves."

A Chinese Hero.

At Loping Hsien is a statue draped in full dress of a mandarin (the puting or police master) named Chin, who gave his life for the people. An exile who was in the camp at Jaochow and who owed the hsien (district magistrate) a grudge, rode a black horse to Loping and, having killed the hsien, got back for the Jaochow roll call next morning. As the murderer could not be found orders came from the capital that a large number of the people should be killed. To prevent this slaughter of innocent folk the puting, a good old man, said he stabbed the hsien after a few words over the wine cups, and he was consequently beheaded. No resident of the district would deal the fatal blow, but an itinerant cobbler or bamboo worker did it for a reward of 40 taels. Tradition adds that he was struck dead by lightning after leaving the execution ground. —Chinese Mercury.

Sameness of Opinion.

"I suppose," said the young man with the soiled collar and baggy trousers as he sat down beside a stranger on one of the park benches, "you would not take me for a member of a millionaire's family, would you?"

"No," answered the stranger after sizing him up; "frankly speaking, I wouldn't."

"Neither would the millionaire," rejoined the young man sadly. "I asked him last night."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

MISSION BAND GAVE SPLENDID CONCERT

The Mission Band of Knox church brought honor to itself last evening because of the excellent concert given by them. The audience was all that could be desired, standing room being at a premium. The girls and boys who took part in the programme performed their difficult parts with ease and gave great pleasure to the audience. Much credit is due to the president of the band, Miss Jessie Millar, and to Mrs. Keith, Miss Dunlop and Mrs. Sherwood, who trained the members of the Band for the concert. One of the features of the programme was the Pageant of Missions representing conditions of life in China, Japan, India, Korea and Canada. The singing was excellent. The programme was as follows:

Hymn—By the members of the Band.
Chairman's remarks.
Star dialogue.
Recitation—Izena Irwin.
Doll chorus.
Piano solo—Jessie Mervin.
Boys' chorus.
Solo—Cora Peters.
Dialogue—Zetta McCaw and Lizzie Thompson.
Piano Solo—Mrs. Charles Butters.
Pageant of Missions.
Address—Mrs. Purdy, Cobourg.
God Save the King.

Mrs. Purdy, the secretary of Mission Bands for the Presbytery of Peterborough, gave an interesting address on "Magnets," and pointed out some very practical lessons to the members of the Band. The thanks of the Band are due to Mrs. Butters.

MISS HURLEY WON THE ORATORICAL CONTEST

St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society provided a very enjoyable programme, at St. Alphonsus Lyceum last evening.

Four young ladies, Misses McGrath, Holland, Hurley and Picard, took part in an oratorical contest, taking present day subjects for their speeches, and acquitting themselves in a highly creditable manner.

The judges who were Rev. Father McColl and Messrs. L. M. Hayes, K. C., and W. J. O'Brien, decided Miss Florence Hurley as the winner. Miss Hurley spoke on the natural resources of Canada, and Mr. Hayes, in returning the decision of the judges and presenting the prize, complimented Miss Hurley and also the other speakers. Mr. O'Brien too, passed commendary remarks and Rev. Father McColl, as critic of the Society, referred to the points brought out in each of the speeches. Miss Kane presided and was assisted by Rev. Father Casey.

Other numbers on the programme were as follows:

Violin Duet — Misses Dorris and McCarthy.
Vocal Solo — Miss Ethel Jays.
Song — "Spanish Cavalier" Master Dick Coughlin.

While the judges were deciding as to the winner of the contest, Master Coughlin, sang Silver Bell, and as an encore "What's the matter with Father."

The meeting was brought to a close by the singing of God Save the King.

At the next meeting a Dicken's evening will be observed.

SOUND AND ABLE ADDRESSES BY QUEEN'S PROFESSORS

Were Features of Alumni Dinner at Hotel National---Eloquent Responses to the Toasts---A Notable Event in History of Local Association.

A brilliant dinner was given last night at the Hotel National by the local Queen's University Alumni on the occasion of the second annual meeting of the society since its reorganization. The dining room was handsomely and tastefully adorned with national and college colors, and "Queen's University" was hung across the room in prominent letters.

Principal Gordon, of Queen's University, was to have honored the function, but was unfortunately prevented from attending owing to being taken ill at the eleventh hour. Keen regret was expressed at his absence.

The principal speakers were Prof. Campbell, Dr. Knight and Rev. Prof. Laird.

After the dinner, for which a most attractive menu was provided, Mr. E. L. Goodwill, president of the society, and toastmaster, expressed great regret that Principal Gordon was unable to be in attendance, but remarked that the gathering had with it, however, three distinguished professors, Dr. A. P. Knight, Prof. P. G. Campbell and Prof. Robert Laird.

Mr. Goodwill proposed the toast to "The King" which was heartily honored and then to "Canada," calling upon Prof. Campbell and Hon. J. R. Stratton to respond.

"CANADA" HONORED.

Prof. Campbell said that during the eight odd years he had been at Queen's he knew only the undergraduate life of that university. For the first time he had been in Canada he was meeting with a college alumni. Every alumni formed that trilogy in connection with every university—the students the professors and the college. He humorously referred to the fact that he might be a little dogmatic in what he was going to say owing to his addressing students rather than gatherings of the order before which he was speaking.

The toast of Canada said the speaker must fire the heart of every man who was a true born Canadian either by birth or, as he was, by adoption and choice.

Canada had a great heritge in its magnificent resources but the danger in a new country rising to the height of nationhood was materialism. This ideal was not character but money making.

On account of these dangers we must have our ideals in some sort of order. One of the ideals of to-day was "Canada for the Canadians."

In a city not more than 150 miles from here we heard it in reference to the militia. We heard it in the mercantile world. We heard it in our universities. We heard it in the world of manufacture. In all of these provinces named the old country man was often given the preference to the Canadian.

But to-day in Canada we would not get good men to willingly enlist in the militia. In the matter of getting good professors for the universities his delicate modesty forbade him saying very much.

"Canada for Candaians" was a good motto if properly interpreted but if Canada fifty years ago had adopted the policy of letting no one in the country she would never have attained her present development.

In Australia twelve years ago he found that colony in a state of stagnation because the cry in full swing then was "Australia for Australians." He was afraid there was danger that the same cry "Canada for Canadins" was going to grow in the wrong direction. It sounded patriotic but was it?

He knew of no country that was able to produce everything for its own needs. "Those of you who are smokers will know that Canada produces very bad tobacco. Those of you who are teetotlars will not know that Canada cannot produce good Scotch whiskey."

The ideal of the Empire was free trade trade within the empire and as much preference as was desired outside.

The individual that lived for himself was dead already. The nation that lived for itself would never in the true sense be a nation. We should feel proud of being Canadians but we should also feel proud because we were part of that race that was the greatest in the world. We should stand for high unity within the Empire—this stood for progress. Our Canadian universities were turning out our statesmen our teachers, our honest lawyers our clergymen and the gentlemen of the fourth estate—the press. These were the makers of Canada.

THE UNIVERSITY IN CANADA.

Hon. J. R. Stratton in reply to the toast spoke of the great advantage of universities in Canadian life. There were twenty of them in Canada and he would like to see more of them and see them given generous government aid. He spoke of the fact that there were 35 members of the local Queen's Alumni Association and that there were many members of the learned professions in Peterborough who were graduates of Queen's.

Canada was big enough to-day to welcome the man from any land no matter what his religion might be as long as he was a man.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific Canada was a growing country. Canada was the granary of the world and we had as fertile soil as any country on earth. Even this was appreciated. He believed that the people of other nations would flock to Canada in millions.

Mr. Stratton spoke forcibly of the value of Canada's educational institutions of which the universities were as essential to the development of Canadians as were the public schools.

RAH RAH, RAH.

Prof. Laird and Prof. Knight responded.

PROF. LAIRD.

Prof. Laird was sorry that the Principal was not present to respond to the toast himself. The latter had expressed himself as very much regretting his inability to attend.

Prof. Laird remarked that he was present at the reorganization of the Alumni in Peterborough last year. He cordially complimented Mr. Goodwill on his splendid organization of the local society and congratulated him on his judgment and good taste in having so many of the ladies present to give the gathering a touch of grace and beauty. He was also very much pleased to see so many graduates of sister universities and paid a warm tribute to them for the fine assistance they had always been ready to give Queen's.

QUEEN'S HEALTHY.

Speaking of the university Prof. Laird said it was well and thriving—it was by no means sick. Queen's today was in a period of expansion. Twelve new appointments had been made to the staff this year.

This was the year that Queen's reached three score and ten. It was in 1841 that Queen's received her charter and began her work.

"And although we are growing old the only pains we know are growing pains."

In 1877 there came to Queen's a man with whose name the highest attainments in Queen's would ever be linked—Prof. Grant.

FINE GROWTH OF QUEEN'S.

By interesting statistics the speaker showed the splendid growth of Queen's. Ten years ago there were 660 students at Queen's. To-day there were 1,625. Ten years ago the revenue was $75,000 a year. To-day it was $211,000, said the speaker. Queen's had a strong and undeniable place in our Canadian life. She touched the country from east to west, from north to south. Queen's was alive to-day than ever in the past for the urgent need of the Canadian democracy, for higher education. This democracy, if it was to succeed, must be uplifted and our problems to-day were really moral problems. University men in Canada had upon them unusual obligations, and Queen's had always tried to live up to their great obligations.

NEED OF PUBLIC HEALTH COURSE

Prof. Knight referred to the fact that it seemed appropriate that he should have on one side of him Mr. Dumble, a graduate of Toronto, through Victoria, and on the other side Prof. Laird, a graduate of Queen's.

As a graduate of both, he would, perhaps, be privileged to point out a neglected study in their arts course—that of public health. It was true that Toronto University had a department of domestic science, but this was spoken of half apologetically, and he had no sympathy with that attitude. A domestic science department was one of the greatest importance, it had to do with the health of the individual and the public. One of the departments at Ottawa was the Conservation Commission, which had for one of its offices public health. The educated people of Canada had to assist in the important work of the commission and the way to fit them to do it was by educating the students on the subject of health.

The death rate of infants in Canada was the extremely high one of 145 in 1,000.

The average length of human life to-day, as shown by statistics, was longer than it used to be. The outlook was hopeful, and the very fact that the average length of human life in Switzerland had been doubled showed what could be accomplished in this respect. It was the duty of the university to educate its art students in the important study of health. The most prolific source of death was consumption, and the average undergraduate could be taught what to do in treating consumption and other infectious diseases—there was no mystery about it.

The professor treated very interestingly and in a practical, convincing way of the necessity of knowledge of disease and the sources of ill health. He emphasized the need of generally improved sanitary conditions.

"Sister Universities," was proposed by Mr. J. A. Reed, and responded to by Mr. D. W. Dumble, K.C. (Victoria), Rev. H. J. Keith, (McGill); Rev. J. R. Webb, (McMaster); Judge Huycke, (Victoria); Dr. Cameron, (Trinity).

Rev. Mr. Best, of Beaverton, proposed the toast to "The Graduates," which was responded to by County School Inspector R. Lees.

A vote of thanks to the speakers was passed on motion of Messrs. J. H. Burnham and W. H. Collier.

THE 1911 OFFICERS.

The officers were elected as follows—

SHIPS FOR THE NAVY

Government Will Call For Tenders for Ten Vessels.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—The Government will, in a few days, call for tenders for four cruisers of the Bristol type, and six destroyers of the improved river class, in accordance with the naval construction program decided upon last session. Plans and specifications to rthe new warships have been drafter in harmony with the suggestions of the Admiralty. The vessels will have all the latest improvement in armament, engine power, speed, and general equipment. Three years' time will be given for the delivery of the first ships. The first of the new cruisers and destroyers will, therefore, be commissioned for service in 1914.

It is expected that two Canadian companies, with a British connection, respectively, with the Vickers' Sons & Maxim, and the Harlond-may also be tenders received from other British firms. The specifications require building in Canada, and this involves the establishment of the first of branch shipbuilding plants on the Atlantic coast. It is undersood that whichever firm gets the contract will be prepared to arrange for construction in Canada. No United States tender will be considered. The total cost of the ten vessels is estimated at between ten and twelve million, but, in view of the requirement regarding construction in Canada, it may be found that tenders will aggregate considerably in excess of this.

A definite announcement as to the steps that have been taken by the Government to carry out he naval construction program, determined on last session, will probably be made shortly in the Commons.

IS HE JACK THE RIPPER?

Los Angeles, Dec. 5.—Having admitted during lucid moments to the police that he fled from England fifteen years ago in fear of being arrested as "Jack the Ripper," who committed the notorious Whitechapel crimes of the later 80's, Jack Shaw is being detained in the insane ward of the county hospital. Shaw was arrested through the efforts of the legal aid society, the complaint being that he attempted to murder Edith Tyson, his wife's sister, last Wednesday. The man's mental condition was found to be such that he was locked up in the insane ward. His past life will be investigated and the local authorities will notify the London police of their suspicions. Shaw has not admitted that he is the notorious "Jack the Ripper," but his constant references to the subject indicate that it is deeply impressed upon his mind. He is fifty years old.

PROF. HARCOURT BEREAVED

Guelph, Dec. 5.—The wife of Prof. Harcourt, head of the chemistry department of the Ontario Agricultural College, met with a tragic death early yesterday, having taken oxalic acid in mistake for Epsom salt, both being kept in the kitchen. Mrs. Harcourt has been under the doctor's care for several weeks. When the mistake was discovered a physician was sent for, and also Mrs. John Yule, her mother. Mrs. Harcourt, remarking that it would be awful if she should die before her mother arrived, but Mrs. Yule was just too late. Mrs. Harcourt leaves a two-months-old child.

Announcement of the death was made yesterday morning at Chalmers' Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Harcourt was an active member.

FOUR UNIONIST GAINS NET RESULT OF SATURDAY'S VOTING IN ENGLAND

Standing of Parties After First Day of Polling is: Liberal 51, Labor 7, Nationalist 5, and Unionist 62—Both Sides Say They Are Pleased.

London, Dec. 5.—Although the pollings in the general election Saturday indicate that the next Parliament will be similar in complexion to that of the dissolved House, and both sides late last night professed to be pleased with the result of the first day's contests, a careful analysis of the figures in the political clubs appeared to give greatest satisfaction to the Liberals who declare themselves more than contented. They point out the fact that every Unionist majority in Birmingham was reduced, and that the Liberals improved their position in Wolverhampton and other Midland districts devoted to manufacturing interests, and under Chamberlain influence.

London again proved disappointing to the Unionists, and encouraging to the Liberals, who had not expected to regain Peckham. The London boroughs, like Birmingham, also show increased majorities for the Liberals, who believe their successors in Manchester and London will greatly influence the coming contests.

On the other hand, the Unionists are able to point to significant victories, while they improved their position in a larger number of constituencies than did the Liberals.

The struggle between the Redmond and the O'Brienites will be bitter. The Conservatives in Ireland will, wherever possible, concentrate their attack on the Redmondite candidates, by voting for the O'Brienites.

The return of H. St. Maur, the Liberal candidate in Exeter, over H. E. Duke, Unionist, which was announced late Saturday night, was an unexpected Liberal gain, Duke having captured the seat in the January elections by 26 votes. The polling Saturday gave St. Maur 4,876 and Duke 4,872.

Polling takes place to-day in 67 constituencies, returning 75 members These constituencies were represented in the old Parliament by 35 Unionists, 33 Liberals, 6 Laborites, and one Nationalist. Of these seventeen are London boroughs, and both sides are making a keen fight in St. Pancras, and the Islington division.

Including those unopposed, 125 members had been elected to the new Parliament at the close of Saturday's polling. The standing of the parties is as follows: Government coalition, Liberals 51, Labor 7, Irish Nationalists 5. Totol 63. Opposition, Unionists 62.

The Unionists gained seven seats, six from the Liberals — Salford (South), Ashton-under-Lyme, Warrington, Darlington, King's Lynn and Grimsby, and one from the Laborites, Wigan. Liberals won four seats from the Unionists—Manchester (South west), Rochester, the Peckham division of Camberwell, and Exeter. So the net gain of the Unionists is four seats.

The results are not quite up to the expectations of the Unionists, but, even at that, if the current continues to run in their favor as it has started, the Government will be placed in a very awkward position, and in all probability would resign. Neither party received the lead from London and Manchester that it desired, although on the whole the Government came off the better, as it succeeded in holding the northwest division of Manchester against A. Bonar Law, one of the chief exponents of tariff reform, who was greatly assisted in his campaign by Mr. Balfour's pledge to submit the question of protection to a referendum.

HAS PLENTY OF MONEY NOW

New York, Dec. 5.—Three short weeks ago John M. McCluskey, a farm hand, was loading a wagon with turnips on a little farm as Busby, just back of Glasgow, Scotland, and, wondering how he would get through the week on two shillings and sixpence. Yesterday, McCluskey, accompanied by Andrew Wilson, a New York lawyer, was a passenger on the steamer Campania from England, and comes to take title to a fortune estimated at a million dollars, left him by his brother, a paper box manufacturer in this city. WILL MAKE CUT IH UPPER BERTH

Montreal, Dec. 5.—It is announced in railway circles that there is every possibility of sleeping berth rates being reduced in Canada to the level just announced by the Pullman Co. in the United States. In future the minimum rates on the other side of the border will be $1.25 instead of $1.50 for upper berths and that in all instances other than this the upper berths will cost 80 per cent. of the lower. In the case of lower berths being $2, therefore, the charge for the upper berth will be about $1.60.

BACK FROM THE DEAD

New York, Dec. 5.—Just as the undertaker put out his hands to lift the body of three-year-old Lillian Viand yesterday to prepare her for burial, the child sat bolt upright in her winding sheet, opened her eyes and cried: "Mama, I want my mama, I'm cold."

The undertaker fell back in a chair, nearly fainting, but regaining presence of mind, snatched up blankets, wrapped the child in them and rushed downstairs with her to the parents. A doctor was brought and said he believed the child's life had come back permanently.

The little girl had been ill five days with convulsions. Yesterday afternoon she stiffened, her eyes glazed and none of the familiar tests showed any signs of life.

MARY B. EDDY, GREAT CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST, PASSES PEACEFULLY AWAY

Founder of Wealthy Sect Died Late on Saturday, But News Was Kept Secret Until the Close of the Service in Mother Church in Boston.

Boston .Mass., Dec. 5.—Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, is dead. Announcement of the passing of the aged leader, which occurred late Saturday night at her home at Chestnut Hill, a suburb, was made at the morning service of the mother church in this city yesterday.

"Natural causes," explains the death, according to George L. West, a district medical examiner, who was summoned a few hours after Mrs. Eddy passed away. Later Dr. West added to his statement by saying that the more immediate cause was probably pneumonia.

The news of Mrs. Eddy's death was made known simultaneously by Judge Clifford P. Smith, first reader of the mother church, at the close of the morning service, and by Alfred Farlow of the Christian Science publication committee, in a statement to the press. According to Mr. Farlow, Mrs. Eddy passed away at a quarter before eleven o'clock Saturday night.

"She has been indisposed for about nine days," said Mr. Farlow's statement, "but had been up and dressed, and as late as Thursday transacted some business with one of the officials of the Christian Science Church. She took her daily afternoon drive until two days before her going. Saturday night she fell quietly asleep and those around her could at first hardly realize that she had gone. Her thought was clear until the last and she left no final messages.

"No physician was in attendance, but she had the assistance of the students who comprised her household. With her at the time of her departure were Calvin A. Frye, Mrs. L. E. Sargeant, Mrs. Ella S. Rathvon, Rev. Irving S. Tomlinson, her corresponding secretary; William R. Rathvon, and her secretary, Adam H. Dickey.

"No arrangements regarding the time or the place of her burial have yet been decided upon. It is well known to her household that she believed in simplicity on such occasions, and in compliance with this knowledge it is expected tha the service will be private and of a simple nature, consisting probably of prayer and readings from the Bible, with some brief selections from the Christian Science text book. Only her relatives, her household and the officials of the church are expected to be in attendance.

MARY BAKER EDDY.
As She Looked in Her Prime.

"A telegram was sent to her son, George W. Glover of Lead, S.D., apprising him of his mother's demise and requesting information as to his attendance and that of his family.

"Mrs. Eddy was born in Bow, N.H., July 16, 1821, and was therefore in her 90th year."

There were few of the congregation at the morning service at the mother church yesterday who knew that the life of the leader and teacher had ended. The service was as usual, and the two readers, Judge Smith and Mrs. Leland T. Powers, presented the sermon of the day, "God, the only cause, and Creator," with voices that were without emotion and had no suggestion of sadness. At the close of the service Judge Smith rose, read a farewell address and annouced the leader's death.

Then the greater part of the congregation left their seats in silence. There were no words of sorrow, although many a tear was shed. The great organ pealed its recessional as triumphantly as ever.

Miss Sibyl Wilbur, the latest of Mrs. Eddy's biographers, whose "Life" was approved by the leader herself and the church authorities, says that "no mystery to-day surrounds Mrs. Eddy's life story. Her birth, her ancestry for two hundred years, her education, her social development, her individual service to the world, have been scrutinized with the strong searchlight of both love and criticism."

Other less friendly commentators on Mrs. Eddy's works and life have criticized her with more or less severity, and some have denounced her as an imposter.

Her life was begun in New Hampshire. Her father, Mark Baker, was a respectable farmer of Bow.

Mary, the youngest daughter, was of delicate health from her birth. She is said to have perplexed her father with sage sayings and grave doings.

In the early 40's, George Washington Glover, formerly of Concord, became associated with Samuel Baker, the third son, and as a result Mary Baker and he were married at Christmas time in 1843 at Tilton, N.H. The next few months were passed by the Glovers in the south, where Mrs. Eddy saw slavery in its worst forms, and there the June after her marriage she was left a widow.

Mary Baker Glover spent the next few years with her sister Abigail, and other relatives in New Hampshire, and began literary work with several articles on her observations of slavery in the south. She also taught school.

After nine years of widowhood, Mrs. Eddy married Dr. Daniel Patterson, a New Hampshire dentist. The marriage was not a happy one.

A notable event of Mrs. Eddy's life was her meeting in 1862 with Phineas Quimby, a mesmeric healer, at a hotel in Portland, Me. Quimoy was the son of a poor blacksmith.

Mrs. Eddy became imbued with metaphysical ideas and started on a career in that line which made her one of the most famous of the world's mental healers. Later she denounced Quimby's methods.

After spending two years in Portland, Mrs. Patterson rejoined her husband in Lynn, where she lived five years, continuing studies of metaphysics. It was in that city that she suffered an accident through a fall on the ice which the doctor said was severe, but from which she recovered, she said, in one night. It was this incident that led directly to the promulgation of her discovery of Christian Science.

In 1877, four years after her separation from Mr. Patterson, the founder of the new belief was married to Asa Gilbert Eddy.

Mrs. Eddy established the Massachusetts Metophysical College in Boston in 1881. Her teachings were taken up and accepted at first by a few followers and as years went on, but a larger and stronger number, until the denomination yesterday extends to many lands and numbers millions of adherents.

WENT OVER TO THE REBELS

Chihuahua, Dec. 3.—(Via El Paso, Texas, Dec. 5.)—Reports of the battle at Padernalles, Tuesday, were confirmed Friday.

Some of the Mexican regulars who were taken prisoners went over to the rebels. The Mexican soldiers in the fight were those who left the train at San Andreas on Nov. 22, when the train was wrecked. They had been living in the country, and hunger drove them to Padernalles, where the fight occurred. The revolutionists are not all peons, but many ranchers are in their number, and it is thought the revolutionary commandant at San Andreas is Francisco Vallez y Vasquez, an assayer of Chihuahua.

Gov. Jose Maria Sanchez expects further active fighting in Chihuahua State.

Cudahy Gave Away Entire Income.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Examination of the estate of the late Michael Cudahy disclosed yesterday that church and philanthropic enterprises have been receiving virtually all of his vast income for the last three years.

Chinese Raid.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Two Chinese opium and gambling dens were raided by the police here yesterday and twenty-one Chinamen arrested. A considerable quantity of opium was seized.

BODY FOUND IN THE LAKE

Toronto, Dec. 5.—John W. Ramsey, 28 Bellwoods avenue, discovered the body of a man floating in the lake close to the shore, at Sunnyside, at 11.40 a.m. yesterday. The police found that it was the body of John J. Rowbottom, who had boarded at 322 Dufferin street for two days prior to Nov. 28, since when he had been missing. Only five cents was found in his pockets.

He had been employed by the Toronto Railway Co. as a "probationer" conductor. Prior to going to the Dufferin street address, he had roomed at 258 Bartlett street. He came from England last June, being brought out by the Salvation Army. He was 36 years of age and single.

Sending Warships to Macao.

Hong Kong, Dec. 5.—The authorities at Pekin Saturday ordered a Chinese flotilla to Macao, where there was a revolt recently in the Portuguese army and navy, forcing the governor to make certain c[illegible], including the driving out [illegible] ligious orders.

The Italian cruiser Calubria has also gone thither to protect Italian interests.

Evangelization Of Quebec

Rev. J. R. Webb will give an address in the Orange Hall on Monday evening, at 8 o'clock on "The Evangelization of Quebec."

CABINET MINISTERS IN BRITAIN

London, Dec. 4.—It is natural that when members of the Dominion Cabinet are in Britain they should endeavor to confine both their statements in the press and in social and business circles to generalities regarding the resources of the Dominion as well as in connection with matters of policy on which they are questioned. Now, however, the business world as well as the prospective emigrant is so eager to hear about special areas that it is no wonder the Hon. W. C. Grimmer, Surveyor-General of New Brunswick, and the Hon. Price Ellison, Finance Minister of British Columbia, have had scarcely a spare moment since their arrival.

In the case of New Brunswick Mr. Grimmer's visit was particularly opportune; for no member of the Government has been in England for a long time and the province has come into more notice since the character of its representative and the scope of its work was enlarged after the death of Mr. Duffi Miller. The plans of the C.P.R. and G.T.R. in connection with the port of St. John; the provision of a large dry dock; the ore shipments of the Drummond Co. from Newcastle and the reported developments in the oil and lumber industries all combined to enable Mr. Grimmer to give detailed information which as he stated is likely to bear fruit next year. It was fortunate in view of a large amount of British capital being invested that Mr. Grimmer was able to give official confirmation to the remarkable growth of the territorial revenue during the last fiscal year.

Mr. Bowder, the resident London agent, on his return from Scotland, was able to announce that a number of the very best type of settlers will go to the province next year.

SEPARATE CHURCH FROM THE STATE

Lisbon, Dec. 5.—The Portuguese Government is preparing a decree for the separation of the church and the state, and this has resulted in collision between Republicans and clericals in various parts of the country. The clericals assert that it is the Government's purpose to destroy the religious customs of Portugal. The Minister of Justice denies this, saying that the new law is designed only to afford complete liberty of conscience in worship, and that it provides even for the removal of the inhibition against priests marrying if they so desire. The Dowager Queen Amelie has made a formal request for the restitution of an amount equivalent to her dower of $600,000, which is invested in land securities in Portugal.

TO RE-ENTER POLITICAL ARENA

Montreal, Dec. 5.—A special from St. Johns, Que., says that the report that Hon. Justice Dominique Monet will re-enter politics is the topic of the day. Mr. Monet, who is an ex-M.P for Napierville County, and afterwards a member of the Quebec Legislature and Minister of the Parent Cabinet, prothonotary of Montreal, and for the last three years a justice of the Superior Court here, has been asked to run as the Liberal candidate in the provincial bye-election, necessitated by the death of Gabriel Marchand. If he accepts, he will surely be chosen at the Liberal convention of St. John County, which will be held in a few days. Judge Monet was formerly a follower of Bourassa at Ottawa.

NOW IT IS AUTONOMISTS

Montreal, Dec. 5.—Over two thousand people gathered under Nationalist auspices Saturday at St. Johns, and cheered heartily when Mr. Blondin, M.P. for Champlain, with a dramatic wave of the hand, declared that the last shot in defence of British institutions in America would be fired by a French-Canadian. The Nationalists now call themselves "Autonomists," and the word has evidently been given to discard the soubriquet Nationalists completely. The speakers included Bruno Nantil, M.P. for Terrebone, and Hon. Jean Prevost. Mr. Blondin made a very energetic speech, to show that all the charges made against him were falsehoods, and that he had never been anything in his life but a Britisher, and that he expected to die one.

TWO ITALIAN AVIATORS KILLED

Rome, Dec. 5.—An aeroplane carrying an Italian officer and a private fell from a height of 80 feet at the military grounds at Centocello Saturday evening. Both men were killed instantly.

The aeroplane, which was a Farman machine, was in charge of Engineer Cammarota, and the accident appears to have been due to an attempt to make a short turn.

Cammarota is the third Italian officer to be killed in an aeroplane accident in the past four months.

Engineer Giovanni Palovani of Verona has invented an aeroplane that is built like an umbrella. It is capable of rising and descending vertically, and of floating in the air when the engine is stopped.

AID FOR BRITAIN

Commander Sims Declares America Would Help.

London, Dec. 5.—Sir Thomas Vesey Strong, the Lord Mayor, and corporation of the City of London on Saturday gave a luncheon at Guildhall to 750 American sailors from the visiting fleet at Gravesend and Weymouth.

The bluejackets arrived by train at Charing Cross, headed by Commander Sims of the Minnesota and the officers of his staff, and accompanied by the band of the Coldstream Guards, which the War Office had ordered out for the occasion, marched through the streets in the west end of the city to the ancient hall, where so many famous guests have been honored.

The dining was followed first by formal toasts to King George and President Taft. Sir Thomas then welcomed the sailors.

Replying, Commander Sims spoke with enthusiasm of the friendly manner in which the men of the fleet had been received in London. This, he said, could not happen in any other country, but was made possible by the strong ties of blood between the two countries. Speaking for himself, he believed that if the time ever came when the British Empire was menaced by an external enemy they might count upon every man, every drop of blood, every ship and every dollar of their kindred across the sea.

Chief Boatswain's Mate E. L. Benson of the battleship Minnesota replied on behalf of the men, expressing thanks for the entertainment in a neat speech, which was frequently interrupted by the guests with spontaneous cheers for the Lord Mayor and the City of London.

FLOODS IN FRANCE GROW SERIOUS

Hundreds of villages are surrounded by the waters. They are being provisioned by soldiers with boats. Immense damage has been caused in the valley of the Loire by the breaking of the dike near Nantes. The waters flooded farms and villages, lying below the level of the embankment, to a depth of six feet.

The floods also invaded the lower quarters of Nantes, rising to the tops of the lampposts on the streets.

Practically every stream in France was out of its banks yesterday. The Rhone is again rising at the rate of two inches an hour, overflowing its banks, and driving the people of the neighborhood to the hills. The railroad lines are cut at many places, and mails are being delivered in boats.

Caen, in the Department of Calvados, is flooded.

MILLION DOLLAR ELECTRIC RAILWAY

Welland, Dec. 5.—Final steps towards the construction of a million dollar electric railway between Niagara Falls, Welland and Dunnville, are now being taken.

The officers and directors of the road, the Niagara Falls, Dunnville and Welland Electric Railway, at a meeting in Welland decided to go ahead with the construction. A provincial charter has been secured, and franchises from towns and cities and townships through which the road will pass will now be asked for.

The head office of the company, its car barns and machine shop and a large station will be erected at Welland, at a cost of $12,000. A $20,000 station and restaurant will be erected at Niagara Falls. A station at Dunnville will be erected at a cost of $3,000.

It is proposed to extend the line to Port Dover later on.

New Members at Murray St.

A large number of new members were received at the Murray Street Baptist church yesterday morning.

There was a baptismal service before the sermon in the morning.

TREASUREY DEPLETED

Windsor, Dec. 5.—Veiled charges regarding the handling of funds by members of the North Essex Conservative Association were made at the annual meeting of the association in Windsor Saturday afternoon, and will be investigated by a special committee, which is to report to the executive of the organization.

"I believe I ought to have more money than I have," said John Fry, treasurer of the association, in reporting a balance of $34. "People tell me they have money belonging to the association, but I cannot pay the bills that come in as long as they hang on to it."

SHIPS FOR THE NAVY

Government Will Call For Tenders for Ten Vessels.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—The Government will, in a few days, call for tenders for four cruisers of the Bristol type, and six destroyers of the improved river class, in accordance with the naval construction program decided upon last session. Plans and specifications fo rthe new warships have been drafter in harmony with the suggestions of the Admiralty. The vessels will have all the latest improvement in armament, engine power, speed, and general equipment. Three years' time will be given for the delivery of the first ships. The first of the new cruisers and destroyers will, therefore, be commissioned for service in 1914.

It is expected that two Canadian companies, with a British connection, respectively, with the Vickers' Sons & Maxim, and the Harlond may also be tenders received from other British firms. The specifications require building in Canada, and this involves the establishment of the first of branch shipbuilding plants on the Atlantic coast. It is undersood that whichever firm gets the contract will be prepared to arrange for construction in Canada. No United States tender will be considered. The total cost of the ten vessels is estimated at between ten and twelve million, but, in view of the requirement regarding construction in Canada, it may be found that tenders will aggregate considerably in excess of this.

A definite announcement as to the steps that have been taken by the Government to carry out he naval construction program, determined on last session, will probably be made shortly in the Commons.

IS HE JACK THE RIPPER?

Los Angeles, Dec. 5.—Having admitted during lucid moments to the police that he fled from England fifteen years ago in fear of being arrested as "Jack the Ripper," who committed the notorious Whitechapel crimes of the later 80's, Jack Shaw is being detained in the insane ward of the county hospital. Shaw was arrested through the efforts of the legal aid society, the complaint being that he attempted to murder Edith Tyson, his wife's sister, last Wednesday. The man's mental condition was found to be such that he was locked up in the insane ward. His past life will be investigated and the local authorities will notify the London police of their suspicions. Shaw has not admitted that he is the notorious "Jack the Ripper," but his constant references to the subject indicate that it is deeply impressed upon his mind. He is fifty years old.

PROF. HARCOURT BEREAVED

Guelph, Dec. 5.—The wife of Prof. Harcourt, head of the chemistry department of the Ontario Agricultural College, met with a tragic death early yesterday, having taken oxalic acid in mistake for Epsom salt, both being kept in the kitchen. Mrs. Harcourt has been under the doctor's care for several weeks. When the mistake was discovered a physisian was sent for, and also Mrs. John Yule, her mother. Mrs. Harcourt, remarking that it would be awful if she should die before her mother arrived, but Mrs. Yule was just too late. Mrs. Harcourt leaves a two-months-old child.

Announcement of the death was made yesterday morning at Chalmers' Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Harcourt was an active member.

MORE HONORS FOR SIR HENRY

Toronto, Dec. 5.—Mr. Willoughby Bulloch, secretary of the Society of Knights Bachelor of England, announces that at the recent meeting of the council Sir Henry Pellatt was elected president of the society for the year 1911.

Sir Henry has had a cordial reception in Great Britain. He and his wife were given a large dinner at Lambeth Palace by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and they have also been the guests of Lord Aberdeen at the viceregal lodge, Dublin. They were also dined by the ladies and gentlemen of the Corinthian Club.

Boy Broker Fleeced Lauder.

Boston, Dec. 5.—Robert E. Davie, a boy stock broker with offices at 53 State street, is missing from the city. With his vanishing a month ago sums estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000 have disappeared.

Out Goes Inspector Dew.

London, Dec. 5.—Chief Inspector Dew, who had control of the Crippen case from the outset, left Scotland Yard Saturday. He is only 47 years old, but has served the time necessary to qualify for a pension. His resignation was undoubtedly compulsory on account of his having let Crippen escape from the country

FOUR UNIONIST GAINS NET RESULT OF SATURDAY'S VOTING IN ENGLAND

Standing of Parties After First Day of Polling is: Liberal 51, Labor 7, Nationalist 5, and Unionist 62—Both Sides Say They Are Pleased.

London, Dec. 5.—Although the pollings in the general election Saturday indicate that the next Parliament will be similar in complexion to that of the dissolved House, and both sides late last night professed to be pleased with the result of the first day's contests, a careful analysis of the figures in the political clubs appeared to give greatest satisfaction to the Liberals who declare themselves more than contented. They point out the fact that every Unionist majority in Birmingham was reduced, and that the Liberals improved their position in Wolverhampton and other Midland districts devoted to manufacturing interests, and under Chamberlain influence.

London again proved disappointing to the Unionists, and encouraging to the Liberals, who had not expected to regain Peckham. The London boroughs, like Birmingham, also show increased majorities for the Liberals, who believe their successors in Manchester and London will greatly influence the coming contests.

On the other hand, the Unionists are able to point to significant victories, while they improved their position in a larger number of constituencies than did the Liberals.

The struggle between the Redmond and the O'Brienites will be bitter. The Conservatives in Ireland will, wherever possible, concentrate their attack on the Redmondite candidates, by voting for the O'Brienites.

The return of H. St. Maur, the Liberal candidate in Exeter, over H. E. Duke, Unionist, which was announced late Saturday night, was an unexpected Liberal gain, Duke having captured the seat in the January elections by 26 votes. The polling Saturday gave St. Maur 4,876 and Duke 4,872.

Polling takes place to-day in 67 constituencies, returning 75 members These constituencies were represented in the old Parliament by 35 Unionists, 33 Liberals, 5 Laborites, and one Nationalist. Of these seventeen are London boroughs, and both sides are making a keen fight in St. Pancras, and the Islington division.

Including those unopposed, 125 members had been elected to the new Parliament at the close of Saturday's polling. The standing of the parties is as follows: Government coalition, Liberals 51, Labor 7, Irish Nationalists 5. Totol 63. Opposition, Unionists 62.

The Unionists gained seven seats, six from the Liberals — Salford (South), Ashton-under-Lyme, Warrington, Darlington, King's Lynn and Grimsby, and one from the Laborites, Wigan. Liberals won four seats from the Unionists—Manchester (South west), Rochester, the Peckham division of Camberwell, and Exeter. So the net gain of the Unionists is four seats.

The results are not quite up to the expectations of the Unionists, but, even at that, if the current continues to run in their favor as it has started, the Government will be placed in a very awkward position, and in all probability would resign. Neither party received the lead from London and Manchester that it desired, although on the whole the Government came off the better, as it succeeded in holding the northwest division of Manchester against A. Bonar Law, one of the chief exponents of tariff reform, who was greatly assisted in his campaign by Mr. Balfour's pledge to submit the question of protection to a referendum.

DEATH PENALTY

Thomas McNulty Must Pay It Says Court of Appeal---Gave Judgement To-day in Barrie Child Murder Case---May Appeal to Government

Special to the Review.

Toronto, Dec. 5.—The Court of Appeals to-day gave judgment declining to interfere in the case of Thomas McNulty, under sentence to be hanged at Barrie, Dec. 14th, for inciting Mary Dolan to murder their child, the girl to suffer the extreme penalty of the law at the same time, McNulty consequently will be hanged unless the Dominion Government steps in and commutes the sentence.

ATTRACTIONS WON'T COME AS HIGH NOW

In Canadian Cities—Popular Priced Theatre Corporation Formed—Capitalized at $125,000

Special to the Review.

New York, Dec. 5.—Plans have been fully consummated for the establishment of a circuit of popular price theatres covering the principal cities of the United States and Canada. A corporation called the Lawrence Weber Co-operative Booking Circuit, has been formed under the laws of the State of New York with a capital stock of $125,000. The incorporators are L. Lawrence Webber, J. Herbert Mack, Samuel A. Scriber, of New York, and Rudolph K. Hynicka, of Cincinnati.

HAS PLENTY OF MONEY NOW

New York, Dec. 5.—Three short weeks ago John M. McCluskey, a farm hand, was loading a wagon with turnips on a little farm as Busby, just back of Glasgow, Scotland, and, wondering how he would get through the week on two shillings and sixpence. Yesterday, McCluskey, accompanied by Andrew Wilson, a New York lawyer, was a passenger on the steamer Campania from England, and comes to take title to a fortune estimated at a million dollars, left him by his brother, a paper box manufacturer in this city. The brothers lost track of each other for eighteen years, and the lawyer had a hard time locating McCluskey to tell him of his fortune

WILL MAKE OUT IH UPPER BERTH

Montreal, Dec. 5.—It is announced in railway circles that there is every possibility of sleeping berth rates being reduced in Canada to the level just announced by the Pullman Co. in the United States. In future the minimum rates on the other side of the border will be $1.25 instead of $1.50 for upper berths and that in all instances other than this the upper berths will cost 80 per cent. of the lower. In the case of lower berths being $2, therefore, the charge for the upper berth will be about $1.60.

Uniform Divorce Law.

Pittsburg, Dec. 5.—A uniform divorce law that will be introduced in the Legislature of every state will be prepared by the National Reform Association at the opening of its convention in this city to-day.

BACK FROM THE DEAD

New York, Dec. 5.—Just as the undertaker put out his hands to lift the body of three-year-old Lillian Viand yesterday to prepare her for burial, the child sat bolt upright in her winding sheet, opened her eyes and cried: "Mama, I want my mama, I'm cold."

The undertaker fell back in a chair, nearly fainting, but regaining presence of mind, snatched up blankets, wrapped the child in them and rushed downstairs with her to the parents. A doctor was brought and said he believed the child's life had come back permanently.

The little girl had been ill five days with convulsions. Yesterday afternoon she stiffened, her eyes glazed and none of the familiar tests showed any signs of life.

MARY B. EDDY, GREAT CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST, PASSES PEACEFULLY AWAY

Founder of Wealthy Sect Died Late on Saturday, But News Was Kept Secret Until the Close of the Service in Mother Church in Boston.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 5.—Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, is dead. Announcement of the passing of the aged leader, which occurred late Saturday night at her home at Chestnut Hill, a suburb, was made at the morning service of the mother church in this city yesterday.

"Natural causes," explains the death, according to George L. West, a district medical examiner, who was summoned a few hours after Mrs. Eddy passed away. Later Dr. West added to his statement by saying that the more immediate cause was probably pneumonia.

The news of Mrs. Eddy's death was made known simultaneously by Judge Clifford P. Smith, first reader of the mother church, at the close of the morning service, and by Alfred Farlow of the Christian Science publication committee, in a statement to the press. According to Mr. Farlow, Mrs. Eddy passed away at a quarter before eleven o'clock Saturday night.

"She has been indisposed for about nine days," said Mr. Farlow's statement, "but had been up and dressed, and as late as Thursday transacted some business with one of the officials of the Christian Science Church. She took her daily afternoon drive until two days before her going. Saturday night she fell quietly asleep and those around her could at first hardly realize that she had gone. Her thought was clear until the last and she left no final messages.

"No physician was in attendance, but she had the assistance of the students who comprised her household. With her at the time of her departure were Calvin A. Frye, Mrs. L. E. Sargeant, Mrs. Ella S. Rathvon, Rev. Irving S. Tomlinson, her corresponding secretary; William R. Rathvon, and her secretary, Adam H. Dickey.

"No arrangements regarding the time or the place of her burial have yet been decided upon. It is well known to her household that she believed in simplicity on such occasions, and in compliance with this knowledge it is expected that the service will be private and of a simple nature, consisting probably of prayer and readings from the Bible, with some brief selections from the Christian Science text book. Only her relatives, her household and the officials of the church are expected to be in attendance.

MARY BAKER EDDY.
As She Looked in Her Prime.

"A telegram was sent to her son, George W. Glover of Lead, S.D., apprising him of his mother's demise and requesting information as to his attendance and that of his family.

"Mrs. Eddy was born in Bow, N.H., July 16, 1821, and was therefore in her 90th year."

There were few of the congregation at the morning service at the mother church yesterday who knew that the life of the leader and teacher had ended. The service was as usual, and the two readers, Judge Smith and Mrs. Leland T. Powers, presented the sermon of the day, "God, the only cause, and Creator," with voices that were without emotion and had no suggestion of sadness. At the close of the service Judge Smith rose, read a farewell address and annouoced the leader's death.

Then the greater part of the congregation left their seats in silence. There were no words of sorrow, although many a tear was shed. The great organ pealed its recessional as triumphantly as ever.

Miss Sibyl Wilbur, the latest of Mrs. Eddy's biographers, whose "Life" was approved by the leader herself and the church authorities, says that "no mystery to-day surrounds Mrs. Eddy's life story. Her birth, her ancestry for two hundred years, her education, her social development, her individual service to the world, have been scrutinised with the strong searchlight of both love and criticism."

Other less friendly commentators on Mrs. Eddy's works and life have criticized her with more or less severity, and some have denounced her as an imposter.

Her life was begun in New Hampshire. Her father, Mark Baker, was a respectable farmer of Bow.

Mary, the youngest daughter, was of delicate health from her birth. She is said to have perplexed her father with sage sayings and grave doings.

In the early 40's, George Washington Glover, formerly of Concord, became associated with Samuel Baker, the third son, and as a result Mary Baker and he were married at Christmas time in 1843 at Tilton, N.H. The next few months were passed by the Glovers in the south, where Mrs. Eddy saw slavery in its worst forms, and there the June after her marriage she was left a widow.

Mary Baker Glover spent the next few years with her sister Abigail, and other relatives in New Hampshire, and began literary work with several articles on her observations of slavery in the south. She also taught school.

After nine years of widowhood, Mrs. Eddy married Dr. Daniel Patterson, a New Hampshire dentist. The marriage was not a happy one.

A notable event of Mrs. Eddy's life was her meeting in 1862 with Phineas Quimby, a mesmeric healer, at a hotel in Portland, Me. Quimby was the son of a poor blacksmith.

Mrs. Eddy became imbued with metaphysical ideas and started on a career in that line which made her one of the most famous of the world's mental healers. Later she denounced Quimby's methods.

After spending two years in Portland, Mrs. Patterson rejoined her husband in Lynn, where she lived five years, continuing studies of metaphysics. It was in that city that she suffered an accident through a fall on the ice which the doctor said was severe, but from which she recovered, she said, in one night. It was this incident that led directly to the promulgation of her discovery of Christian Science.

In 1877, four years after her separation from Mr. Patterson, the founder of the new belief was married to Asa Gilbert Eddy.

Mrs. Eddy established the Massachusetts Metophysical College in Boston in 1881. Her teachings were taken up and accepted at first by a few followers and as years went on, but a larger and stronger number, until the denomination yesterday extends to many lands and numbers millions of adherents.

WENT OVER TO THE REBELS

Chihuahua, Dec. 3.—(Via El Paso, Texas, Dec. 5.)—Reports of the battle at Padernalles, Tuesday, were confirmed Friday.

Some of the Mexican regulars who were taken prisoners went over to the rebels. The Mexican soldiers in the fight were those who left the train at San Andreas on Nov. 22, when the train was wrecked. They had been living in the country, and hunger drove them to Padernalles, where the fight occurred. The revolutionists are not all peons, but many ranchers are in their number, and it is thought the revolutionary commandant at San Andreas is Francisco Vallez y Vasquez, an assayer of Chihuahua.

Gov. Jose Maria Sanchez expects further active fighting in Chihuahua State.

Cudahy Gave Away Entire Income.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Examination of the estate of the late Michael Cudahy disclosed yesterday that church and philanthropic enterprises have been receiving virtually all of his vast income for the last three years.

Chinese Raid.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—Two Chinese opium and gambling dens were raided by the police here yesterday and twenty-one Chinamen arrested. A considerable quantity of opium was seized.

BODY FOUND IN THE LAKE

Toronto, Dec. 5.—John W. Ramsey, 38 Bellwoods avenue, discovered the body of a man floating in the lake close to the shore, at Sunnyside, at 11.40 a.m. yesterday. The police found that it was the body of John J. Rowbottom, who had boarded at 322 Dufferin street for two days prior to Nov. 28, since when he had been missing. Only five cents was found in his pockets.

He had been employed by the Toronto Railway Co. as a "probationer" conductor. Prior to going to the Dufferin street address, he had roomed at 258 Bartlett street. He came from England last June, being brought out by the Salvation Army. He was 36 years of age and single.

Sending Warships to Macao.

Hong Kong, Dec. 5.—The authorities at Pekin Saturday ordered a Chinese flotilla to Macao, where there was a revolt recently in the Portuguese army and navy, forcing the governor to make certain [illegible], including the driving out of the religious orders.

The Italian cruiser Calabria has also gone thither to protect Italian interests.

Evangelization Of Quebec

Rev. J. R. Webb will give an address in the Orange Hall on Monday evening, at 8 o'clock on "The Evangelization of Quebec."

CABINET MINISTERS IN BRITAIN

London, Dec. 4.—It is natural that when members of the Dominion Cabinet are in Britain they should endeavor to confine both their statements in the press and in social and business circles to generalities regarding the resources of the Dominion as well as in connection with matters of policy on which they are questioned. Now, however, the business world as well as the prospective emigrant is so eager to hear about special areas that it is no wonder the Hon. W. C. Grimmer, Surveyor-General of New Brunswick, and the Hon. Price Ellison, Finance Minister of British Columbia, have had scarcely a spare moment since their arrival.

In the case of New Brunswick Mr. Grimmer's visit was particularly opportune; for no member of the Government has been in England for a long time and the province has come into more notice since the character of its representative and the scope of its work was enlarged after the death of Mr. Duff Miller. The plans of the C.P.R. and G.T.R. in connection with the port of St. John; the provision of a large dry dock; the ore shipments of the Drummond Co. from Newcastle and the reported developments in the oil and lumber industries all combined to enable Mr. Grimmer to give detailed information which as he stated is likely to bear fruit next year. It was fortunate in view of a large amount of British capital being invested that Mr. Grimmer was able to give official confirmation to the remarkable growth of the territorial revenue during the last fiscal year.

Mr. Bowder, the resident London agent, on his return from Scotland, was able to announce that a number of the very best type of settlers will go to the province next year.

SEPARATE CHURCH FROM THE STATE

Lisbon, Dec. 5.—The Portuguese Government is preparing a decree for the separation of the church and the state, and this has resulted in collision between Republicans and clericals in various parts of the country. The clericals assert that it is the Government's purpose to destroy the religious customs of Portugal. The Minister of Justice denies this, saying that the new law is designed only to afford complete liberty of conscience in worship, and that it provides even for the removal of the inhibition against priests marrying if they so desire. The Dowager Queen Amelie has made a formal request for the restitution of an amount equivalent to her dowef of $600,000, which is invested in land securities in Portugal.

TO RE-ENTER POLITICAL ARENA

Montreal, Dec. 5.—A special from St. Johns, Que., says that the report that Hon. Justice Dominique Monet will re-enter politics is the topic of the day. Mr. Monet, who is an ex-M.P for Napierville County, and afterwards a member of the Quebec Legislature and Minister of the Parent Cabinet, prothonotary of Montreal, and for the last three years a justice of the Superior Court here, has been asked to run as the Liberal candidate in the provincial bye-election, necessitated by the death of Gabriel Marchand. If he accepts, he will surely be chosen at the Liberal convention of St. John County, which will be held in a few days. Judge Monet was formerly a follower of Bourassa at Ottawa.

NOW IT IS AUTONOMISTS

Montreal, Dec. 5.—Over two thousand people gathered under Nationalist auspices Saturday at St. Johns, and cheered heartily when Mr. Blondin, M.P. for Champlain, with a dramatic wave of the hand, declared that the last shot in defence of British institutions in America would be fired by a French-Canadian. The Nationalists now call themselves "Autonomists," and the word has evidently been given to discard the soubriquet Nationalists completely. The speakers included Bruno Nantil, M.P. for Terrebone, and Hon. Jean Prevost. Mr. Blondin made a very energetic speech, to show that all the charges made against him were falsehoods, and that he had never been anything in his life but a Britisher, and that he expected to die one.

TWO ITALIAN AVIATORS KILLED

Rome, Dec. 5.—An aeroplane carrying an Italian officer and a private fell from a height of 80 feet at the military grounds at Centocello Saturday evening. Both men were killed instantly.

The aeroplane, which was a Farman machine, was in charge of Engineer Cammarota, and the accident appears to have been due to an attempt to make a short turn.

Cammarota is the third Italian officer to be killed in an aeroplane accident in the past four months.

Engineer Giovanni Palovani of Verona has invented an aeroplane that is built like an umbrella. It is capable of rising and descending vertically, and of floating in the air when the engine is stopped.

AID FOR BRITAIN

Commander Sims Declares America Would Help.

London, Dec. 5.—Sir Thomas Vesey Strong, the Lord Mayor, and corporation of the City of London on Saturday gave a luncheon at Guildhall to 750 American sailors from the visiting fleet at Gravesend and Weymouth.

The bluejackets arrived by train at Charing Cross, headed by Commander Sims of the Minnesota and the officers of his staff, and accompanied by the band of the Coldstream Guards, which the War Office had ordered out for the occasion, marched through the streets in the west end of the city to the ancient hall, where so many famous guests have been honored.

The dining was followed first by formal toasts to King George and President Taft. Sir Thomas then welcomed the sailors.

Replying, Commander Sims spoke with enthusiasm of the friendly manner in which the men of the fleet had been received in London. This, he said, could not happen in any other country, but was made possible by the strong ties of blood between the two countries. Speaking for himself, he believed that if the time ever came when the British Empire was menaced by an external enemy they might count upon every man, every drop of blood, every ship and every dollar of their kindred across the sea.

Chief Boatswain's Mate E. L. Benson of the battleship Minnesota replied on behalf of the men, expressing thanks for the entertainment in a neat speech, which was frequently interrupted by the guests with spontaneous cheers for the Lord Mayor and the City of London.

FLOODS IN FRANCE GROW SERIOUS

Hundreds of villages are surrounded by the waters. They are being provisioned by soldiers with boats. Immense damage has been caused in the valley of the Loire by the breaking of the dike near Nantes. The waters flooded farms and villages, lying below the level of the embankment, to a depth of six feet.

The floods also invaded the lower quarters of Nantes, rising to the tops of the lampposts on the streets.

Practically every stream in France was out of its banks yesterday. The Rhone is again rising at the rate of two inches an hour, overflowing its banks, and driving the people of the neighborhood to the hills. The railroad lines are cut at many places, and mails are being delivered in boats.

Caen, in the Department of Calvados, is flooded.

MILLION DOLLAR ELECTRIC RAILWAY

Welland, Dec. 5.—Final steps towards the construction of a million dollar electric railway between Niagara Falls, Welland and Dunnville, are now being taken.

The officers and directors of the road, the Niagara Falls, Dunnville and Welland Electric Railway, at a meeting in Welland decided to go ahead with the construction. A provincial charter has been secured, and franchises from towns and cities and townships through which the road will pass will now be asked for.

The head office of the company, its car barns and machine shop and a large station will be erected at Welland, at a cost of $12,000. A $20,000 station and restaurant will be erected at Niagara Falls. A station at Dunnville will be erected at a cost of $3,600.

It is proposed to extend the line to Port Dover later on.

New Members at Murray St.

A large number of new members were received at the Murray Street Baptist church yesterday morning. There was a baptismal service before the sermon in the morning.

TREASUREY DEPLETED

Windsor, Dec. 5.—Veiled charges regarding the handling of funds by members of the North Essex Conservative Association were made at the annual meeting of the association in Windsor Saturday afternoon, and will be investigated by a special committee, which is to report to the executive of the organization.

"I believe I ought to have more money than I have," said John Fry, treasurer of the association, in reporting a balance of $34. "People tell me they have money belonging to the association, but I cannot pay the bills that come in as long as they hang on to it."

The Daily Review

MONDAY, DEC. 5, 1910.

TARIFF REFORM

No alteration has taken place in the views of the Unionist party in regard to tariff reform, although the free traders would like to persuade themselves and others that there has been. They believe that a reform of the tariff is necessary in the interest of Great Britain and Ireland, and that it may be used to draw together in a still closer community of interests the different parts of the Empire. Mr. Balfour has declared, for instance, in favor of an impost on wheat going from foreign countries, while admitting the grain from the colonies free. This measure would not increase the price of food in England, and it would give a great impetus to the development of the wheat-growing colonies, and Canada would benefit greatly by it. While, in answer to challenges of his opponents, Mr. Balfour has expressed his willingness to submit the question to the electors by means of a referendum, he has not changed his own opinion as to the wisdom of and necessity for the measure. On this point he has said, "There is not the slightest intention of altering the position in which tariff reform stands. All we say is that while it is now what it has always been, a leading part of the constructive policy of the Unionist party, and while we mean to carry it out, we mean to get the formal and explicit consent of the people to what we believe to be for the people's interest." The opponents of tariff reform need not delude themselves into believing, or try to cause others to believe, that the policy has been withdrawn from being one of the leading questions that must be decided. It has grown in popular favor since it was launched by Mr. Chamberlain, and it has to be reckoned with.

WILD CAT MINES

Another step will be taken by the Whitney Government in opening the Ontario gold fields by the extension of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway into the Porcupine region. The policy of the Government has resulted in the people receiving very large direct benefits from the mines through the funds that have been received into the Provincial Treasury from them, and with the opening of the new fields it is announced that the Government intends taking vigorous steps to protect the unwary from "wild cat" speculation. Perhaps by no form of company promotion has more money been collected without any chance of a return being made than by the exploitation of mining companies. The announcement of a find of gold, and the fact that much money has been made through lucky discoveries, has aided in the sale of stocks based upon a hole in the ground or less evidence of mining enterprise. Wild cat speculation injures legitimate enterprises by taking money which should be used in developing actual mineral properties, as well as receiving money without making any return. The desire to receive very large returns—to get rich quickly—furnishes the ground upon which the exploiters work, and while many who are duped may not deserve sympathy, the innocent should so far as possible be protected and the industry be secured from the injury done it by wild schemes. At the last session of the Legislature legislation was enacted with this end in view, and while legislation may not be able to furnish complete protection it will be carried as far as it can to stifle wild cat schemes.

ORDERING OF THE CHIMES

By united action of the people of the city chimes are assured for the tower of St. John's church, as the order for the musical bells has been given. It is gratifying to know that they will be of a character of which the citizens will be proud. With perhaps one exception, they will be the heaviest installed in any church in Ontario. When the project was first taken up it was modest in its conception, compared with what it became. The result is most creditable to the people of Peterborough, for it shows that when the public spirit is appealed to, no seceration or petty jealousies will be permitted to stand in the way. All classes of citizens have united in the effort, and the contributions have been so general, whether in sums larger or smaller, that the citizens generally have a share in the chimes, and will enjoy the "chiming of the bells" all the more on that account. Rev. Canon Davidson took the matter up with his usual vigor and he is especially to be congratulated on the outcome of the effort.

CANADIAN EXPERIENCES

Mr. Asquith says that after a study of the working of the referendum in foreign countries he had arrived at the conclusion that it had proved a most unsatisfactory and disappointing method of ascertaining public opinion. Although the British Premier mentioned foreign countries, perhaps he has heard of our experience with plebiscites. The Liberals here resorted to a direct reference to the people more than once and on the same question. Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised to submit the question of prohibition to the people and to carry out their will as they expressed it. He kept part of the promise. The plebiscite was taken, but no more was heard of prohibition from Sir Wilfrid although there was a majority in favor of it. In Ontario the Liberals adopted a similar method of shelving the question when they found it embarrassing. The Liberal party, despite their professions of submission to the will of the people, are adepts at avoiding carrying it out after it is known and at making promises and not keeping them. Just now they are enamored of Parliamentary government, and can see no reason why the people should be consulted on momentous questions of policy, because they fear the result of an appeal to the people.

ILLUMINATED SIGNS

Ald. Duffus' suggestion re illuminated signs, as embodied in the report from the Property Committee, will come before the City Council to-night. The motion suggests an amendment of the signs by-law to make it legal for illuminated signs to extend six and a half feet over the pavement. At present four feet is the limit.

The allowing of the increased extension would be an excellent idea. There is nothing makes a town look brighter and wider awake than a well lighted main street, and the more illuminated signs the more light. Even the motion picture shows with their incandescent bulbs and arc lamps have given Peterborough's main street a metropolitan finish that it lacked before they commenced business.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DINING CARS

The volume of business which has offered on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway since their passenger service was put into effect last July, has necessitated the early increase of equipment, and the Canada Car Co. have turned out for the Grand Trunk Pacific three new dining cars, which are models of elegance and beauty.

The exterior length of the car is 82 feet, and the length of the dining room 32 feet 6 inches, the balance of the interior of the car being taken up by the modern kitchen, refrigerators and pantry. They are mounted on standard six wheel trucks. The platforms are of steel and the vestibule of the Pullman type. They are equipped with high speed quick action Westinghouse air brakes. The interior of the car is finished in plain and figured mahogany, with a harmony of colors that is pleasing to the eye. The cars are heated by steam, and lighted with electric light.

The dining room accommodates 30 people at one sitting. The floors are covered with handsome carpets of an exclusive design, and with a pattern conforming to the general color scheme of the interior. These cars are equipped with all the improvements and safety appliances that are known to modern skill and are the handsomest dining cars that have been turned out from Canadian shops.

They will leave for the west in a day or two, and will be objects of interest as well as supplying comfort to western travellers, and will be an addition to the already well known service that is being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific in Western Canada.

LINLEY SAMBOURNE.

The Cartoonist, Was Last Link With Victorian Punch.

"By death or retirement Punch has lost one by one the heroes of pen and pencil that made him a power in the land," writes The Daily News. "Three or four of the great Punch artists have left places never to be filled; and now Linley Sambourne, who sat with them so many years at the famous table, is gone. He was the last of his generation, and with the disappearance of his work the last link with Victorian Punch is broken. One takes down one of the thumbed volumes and turns the leaves. What a great thing it was! How rich! How supremely representative of the spirit of its time!"

Here is the story of how he came to join Punch, as told by Mr. B. Morris: "He was apprenticed to the firm of John Penn and Son, of Greenwich, the eminent marine engineers. One day, forgetting his work, he was engaged in drawing a caricature of Mr. Penn, who, to Mr. Sambourne's astonishment, happened to look in and saw what he was about. Instead of being angry and giving Mr. Sambourne "the sack," to use his own words, Mr. Penn said, 'Sambourne, you ought to be on Punch.' When Sambourne 'got his wind,' as he said, he replied, 'Yes, sir, but how am I to get there?' Mr. Penn said, 'I will give you a letter of introduction to my old friend Mark Lemon, the editor.'

"He did so, and with this letter, to settle the matter, he sent the caricature of himself. As all the world knows, Sambourne was engaged by Mark Lemon, and he had a hearty laugh over the idea of his caricaturing his master, and then bringing the sketch with a letter of introduction from the victim. Mr. Sambourne never forgot Mr. Penn's kindness and generosity."

Mr. Sambourne once said to The Westminster Gazette:—

"It does irritate me when people say 'I dare say you knock off your sketches very quickly.' I do nothing of the kind. Often I spend hours investigating a point before I begin to draw, in order that some incidental fact may be accurate."

For some time Mr. Sambourne went twice a week to the Zoo to make studies of the animals, and that is why his drawings of lions and elephants are the delight of students of animal life. He made a picture of a lion yawning once, and people said, "How very good! true to nature!" They were right—it had meant hours of close study, however, and waiting for the exact moment when the lion at the Zoo "obliged" by yawning.

"How very few artists," said Mr. Sambourne, on one occasion, "could draw at once, without seeing it, a policeman's helmet." "Impressionism is often the cover for idleness," he added, "and I find few young artists who will take trouble over details."

"Wherever he has to picture the handling of a gun, the hauling of a sail, the casting of a line, or any other of the thousand and one quick instinctive actions which mark the skill of the sportsman, Sambourne shows," says The Manchester Guardian, "not merely accuracy but that quintessence of accuracy which makes all the difference to our delight in the thing portrayed, and which indicated in his case that expert knowledge which can only be acquired at first hand."

Islamism In Africa.

Mahometanism appears to be spreading to a remarkable degree in Nyasaland. Sir Alfred Sharpe, the Governor of the protectorate, states that twenty years ago, when he first knew the country, Mahometanism was almost nonexistent except at one or two spots where it had been brought in by the Arabs. "Since then," he says, "it has spread greatly, particularly during the last eight or ten years. The Yaos are the tribe who have taken to Moslem teaching mostly, and in almost every Yao village are a mosque and a Moslem teacher. On the other hand, among the tribes to the west of Lake Nyasa, there is hardly any Mahometanism. Here the Scotch missionaries have a strong hold on the people, who have taken up Christianity with great enthusiasm."

Death In a London Hotel.

Sometimes it happens that some one staying in a fashionable London hotel dies. Now, in hotels the management is not fond of deaths, so it comes to pass that the room in which the dead thing lies is locked, and nobody in the hotel save the staff, who know everything, is aware that the sable wings of death, passing, have shed a plume. When relatives arrive they are hurried upstairs lest their red eyes trouble the living guests. Late, very late, at night, when the most belated guest slumbers peacefully, the corpse is taken secretly out of the hotel by stealthy-footed men who have crept up the stairs. In the morning the empty room, cleanly swept and garnished is, with luck, let to some one else.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Glimpse of Tennyson.

Apprehension of being mobbed by the "profane vulgar" amounted almost to monomania with the poet Tennyson. Many stories are told in illustration of this weakness of his. One of the best of them will bear repetition. Lord Tennyson was taking a country walk with a friend when a fellow-creature was espied in the distance. "We must turn back," said the poet. "That fellow means to waylay us." His companion persuaded him, however, to continue on their path. They caught up the enemy and passed him. He took no notice of them whatever. "What an extraordinary thing!" cried the irate poet. "The fellow seems to have no idea who I am!"

London's Big Bell.

"Big Ben," the bell in Westminster clock tower, London, is known the world over, but it is incorrectly named. Sir Benjamin Hall, the first commissioner of works, during whose tenure of office the clock was erected, had far less to do with it than Lord Grimthorpe, who designed it and was the moving spirit in its erection. In justice to him it should be known as "Old Grim."

The Riverman

By Stewart Edward White

Copyright, 1908, by the McClure Company. Copyright, 1907, 1908, by Stewart Edward White

Opposite Randall's hardware store her curiosity quite mastered her.

"Do stop!" she urged Carroll. "I want to run in and see what's the matter."

She was gone but a moment and returned, her eyes shining with excitement.

"Oh, Carroll," she cried, "there are three vessels gone ashore off the piers! Everybody's gone to see."

"Jump in," said Carroll. "We'll drive out. Perhaps they'll get out the life saving crew."

Carroll drove straight ahead until Prince stood at the top of the plank road that led down to the bathhouses. Here she pulled up.

Carroll saw the lake, slate blue and angry, with whitecapped billows to the limit of vision. Along the shore were rows and rows of breakers, leaping, breaking and gathering again. These did not look to be very large until she noticed the twin piers reaching out from the river's mouth. Each billow as it came in rose sullenly above them, broke tempestuously to overwhelm the entire structure of their ends and ripped inshore along their lengths, the crest submerging as it ran every foot of the massive structures.

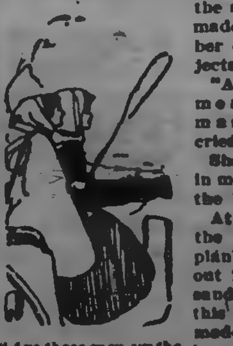
"Look there—out farther!" pointed Mina.

Three little toy ships—or so they seemed compared to the mountains of water—lay broadside to just inside the farthest line of breakers. Two were sailing schooners. These had been thrown on their beam ends, their masts pointing at an angle toward the beach. Each wave broke in a deluge of water that covered their hulls completely from sight. With a mighty suction the billow drained away, carrying with it wreckage. The third vessel was a steam barge. The shoreward side of her upper works had given away first, so now the interior of her staterooms and saloons was exposed to view as in the cross section of a model ship. Over her, too, the great waves buried themselves, each carrying away its spoil.

"Poor fellows!" cried Mina.

"What?" asked Carroll.

"Don't you see them?" queried the other.



"Are those men up the masts?"

Carroll looked, and in the rigging of the schooner she made out a number of black objects.

"Are those men up the masts?" she cried.

She set Prince in motion toward the beach.

At the foot of the bluff the plank road ran out into the deep sand. Through this the phaeton made its way heavily. Already the beach was strewn with pieces of wreckage. The crowd gathered at the pier comprised fully half the population of Monrovia. It centered about the life saving crew, whose mortar was being loaded. A stove-in lifeboat mutely attested the failure of other efforts. When the preparations were finished their chief aimed the mortar and pulled the string. The dart with its trailer of line rose on a long, graceful curve. The reel sang. But the resistance of the wind and the line early made itself felt. Slower and slower hummed the reel. By a good 300 yards the shot failed to carry over the vessels.

"There's Mr. Bradford," said Carroll, waving her hand. "Couldn't they get the lifeboats out to them?" she asked as he approached.

"No."

"But surely they will never get a line over with the mortar!" said Carroll. "That last shot fell so far short!"

"They know it. They've shot a dozen times."

At this moment from the river a trail of black smoke became visible over the point of sand hill that ran down to the pier. A smokestack darted into view, slowed down and came to rest well inside the river channel. There it rose and fell on the swell. The crowd uttered a cheer.

"Come and see what's up," suggested Bradford.

He hitched Prince to a log and led the way to the pier.

"I wouldn't go out there for a million dollars!" cried a man excitedly. "Nothing on earth could live in that sea!"

"What are they going to do?" asked Carroll.

"Haven't you heard?" cried the other. "This is one of Orde's tugs, and she's going to try to get a line to them vessels."

Bradford turned abruptly and brushed toward the tug, followed by Carroll and Mina. At the edge of the pier was the tug's captain, Marsh, listening to earnest expostulation by a half dozen of the leading men of the town, among whom were both Newmark and Orde.

"Gentlemen," said he crisply, "I'm entirely willing to take all personal risks. The thing is hazardous, and it's Mr. Orde's tug. It's for him to say whether he wants to risk her."

"Good Lord, man, what's the tug in a case like this?" cried Orde.

"I thought so," replied Captain Marsh. "I'll take her out if I can get a crew. Harvey, step up here."

The engineer hoisted his long figure through the doorway.

"Harvey," said Captain Marsh briskly, "we're going to try to get a line aboard those vessels. It's dangerous. Will you go?"

"You all goin', suh?" he asked.

"Of course."

"I reckon I'll done half to go, too," said Harvey simply. He swung lightly back to the uneasy craft below him.

"I want a man with me at the wheel, two to handle the lines and one to fire for Harvey," said Captain Marsh.

"That's our job," announced the life saving captain.

"Well, come on, then."

Captain Marsh shook the hand which Orde, stooping, offered him.

"I'll try to bring her back all right, sir," said he.

"To h— with the tug!" cried Orde. "Bring yourself back!"

Marsh entered the pilothouse.

"Cast off!" he cried. The "jangler" called for full speed ahead.

"Brave chaps! Brave chaps!" said Dr. McMullen to Carroll. "But, do you know, to my mind, the bravest of them all are that nigger and his fireman nailed down in the hold where they can't see nor know what's going on."

The tug had rounded the end of the pier. The first of her thousand enemies, sweeping in from the open, had struck her fair.

"She can stand that, all right," said one of the life saving crew. "But wait till she drops down to the vessels."

The Sprite was now so distant that the loom of the great seas swallowed her from view save when she rose on the crest of some mighty billow.

"There, she's turned now!" cried some one.

Beneath the trail of black smoke she had shifted direction. With startling swiftness the Sprite darted out of the horizon into full view. For the first time the spectators realized the size and weight of the seas. One moment the whole of her deck was visible, the next her bow alone showed high as the back suction caught her and dragged her into the hollow. A sea rose behind. Nothing of the tug was to be seen. It seemed that no power could prevent her being overwhelmed. Yet somehow always she staggered out of the gulf until she was again cast forward like a chip.

The Sprite rushed at the outer line of breakers. The combers crested and fell with a roar, just as in milder weather the surf breaks on the beach. A woman in the crowd screamed. But at the edge of destruction the Sprite came to a shuddering stop. Her powerful propellers had been set to the reverse. Thus she hovered on the edge of the breakers, awaiting her chance. If one of the waves should happen to crest and break, the water, catching the tug on her flat stern deck, would indubitably bury her. The situation was awful in its extreme simplicity. Would Captain Marsh see his opportunity before the law of chances would bring along the wave that would overwhelm him?

Two or three of the townsmen walked up and down. One woman prayed aloud in short hysterical sentences.

"O God, save them! O Lord, O Lord!"

Orde stood on top of a half buried log, his entire being concentrated on the maneuver being executed. Only Newmark apparently remained as calm as ever.

Suddenly, without warning, occurred one of those inexplicable lulls that interpose often amid the wildest uproars. Between two waves the Sprite darted forward directly for the nearest of the wrecks.

Points For Mothers

Marcel Braunschwig, who has written on "Art and the Child," makes a special plea for the artistic decoration of the nursery. He wages war against ugly toys, such as the pollywog, the jack-in-the-box and other grotesque playthings. He wants everything with which the child plays to be highly beautiful and artistic. He wants the illustrations on the nursery walls for that reason to be artistic. He points out that the child's mind is impressionable and that everything which it sees, touches or comes into contact with leaves its impress. Such decorations, he points out, are necessary in teaching the child cleanliness and morality. He says: "The objects in a home have, besides their market value, a more secret and quite as important value—they are discreet witnesses of our existence, intimate confidants of our thoughts. They gradually assume an expressive value because of the recollections and associations connected with them. Our hands by touching them leave on them a little of our physical being, and our eyes, so often resting on them, transfer to them some of our inner being. Again, those objects pass through various periods. They have their youth and old age and thus acquire an element of poesy. It is our duty to extract that poetic charm from the objects among which we live and to make our children appreciate that charm. Since it is chiefly for the sake of the aesthetic education of children that we advise parents to enhance their home, it is evident that they must take a peculiar care in adorning the nursery."

A Sensible Mother.

In these delightful days of free afternoon lecture courses, demonstrations, household economics exhibits and song recitals it comes hard for an up to date and much interested woman to stay at home because she has one or more little ones and no maid. If, however, she follows the example of a certain enterprising young housemother she may very comfortably take in many a treat of this sort. The mother in question takes her set of happy, healthy and very active little twins with her—not only to concert and lecture, but every second or third Sunday to church as well—without any trouble to herself or any annoyance to the rest of the audience or congregation, because she also always carries with her a large stiff covered copybook and two well sharpened pencils. She always sits between the two little ones, and just as soon as they become restless she spreads the book out upon her lap, hands each child a pencil and then is able to give her attention to what is going on on the platform or in the pulpit, while the small boy and little lassie are busy printing out nursery rhymes and drawing pictures.

Training the Nervous Child.

This bit of good advice on taking care of nervous children is found in the last number of the Healthy Home: Inflexible regulations are essential in the training of the nervous child, because it is only by them that a habit can be gradually formed which shall serve as a barrier to shelter the child from its inheritance. Iron rules should prevail as to regularity of meals and bedtime. Displays of temper or of oversensitiveness or of morbid emotionality should be met with firmness in the one case and kindly indifference in the other. They do not call for nagging or admiration or panic on the part of the elders.

There may be a good deal of common sense in the idea that strict rules are kinder than lax ones when nervous, high strung children are to be dealt with. When once the fact is learned that a regulation must be adhered to a child accepts it as a matter of course, and innumerable little struggles, as wearying to the child as to the parent, are avoided.

Schoolbooks a Heavy Load.

"Don't let the children carry heavy books to and from school," is the advice of a physician who has had much experience in children's hospitals. A mother testifies that she believes the heavy bag of books which her daughter carried to school every day had much to do with her nervous breakdown, says the Chicago News. The habit tends to make one shoulder higher than the other, to lengthen the arm or enlarge the hand disproportionately. When "home work" cannot be avoided let the child have one book at school and another copy at home. It will pay. Or, if that is not possible, at least do not let him carry his books always on the same arm or slung over the same shoulder.

A Sand Pile.

A sand pile is a good thing for the active child. A dollar's worth of building sand placed in a corner of the yard and confined by a few boards will keep the children from digging up the flower beds. That they must dig is a fact demonstrated by more ages of human life than any of us can look back over. This sand pile in some back yards can be protected from the sun and rain by a square of canvas stretched over it in the shape of a tent, or the pile can be put on the shady side of the house.

Barbarous Butchery of Our Seals.

A more revolting story has never been recorded than the savage plunder of our magnificent Pribilof islands fur seal herd by pelagic sealers, Japanese mostly, Canadians and avaricious seal hunters, who kill the mother seals while they are in the water seeking food for newborn cubs. An idea that a crisis has been reached in unscrupulous seal killing may be had from the fact that there were about 4,000,000 seals in the Pribilof herd when the United States government purchased Alaska from Russia in 1867. Twelve years ago there were 375,000. Today the herd presents the pitiable spectacle of less than 140,000. There are now fewer than 50,000 female breeding seals.—Leslie's.

Conserve Your Muskrats.

Since the ladies of the land have so generally decreed that furs must be worn in the winter season even the despised muskrat is being watched and studied and marshlands are being cultivated for his sustenance and home building. Muskrat trapping has for some years past been a profitable occupation among owners of such lands in various parts of the country, and the skins sold to furriers and dyers are splendidly dyed, dressed and made up to imitate costly furs. The government experts are now studying a scientific way of saving the muskrat. Verily, "things do change," as Parson Piffs would say.—National Magazine.

New Mode of Identification.

Dr. Camassia, an Italian, suggests a new method of identification. After long study he has come to the conclusion that the back of the hand possesses advantages over the fingers. He says the veins on the back of the hand are never the same on each hand, and the hands of two persons possess such distinct markings that they can never be taken one for the other. The differences become most apparent when the hand is clinched. The hand easily allows itself to be photographed and offers a much better scope for observation than the thumb print impression of M. Bertillon.—London Globe.

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

READY FOR MOTHER.

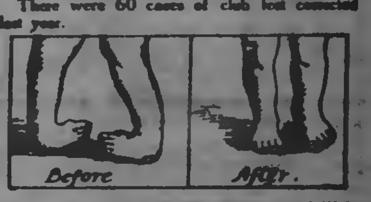
This institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,837 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay and were treated free.

There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

SENTENCE OF DEATH GIVEN JAS. GORHAM

But Chancellor Boyd Held Out Hope That Executive Clemency Would Be Granted to Condemned Youth

"That you be hanged by the neck on the 31st of January, 1911. I have no idea that the sentence of the court will be carried out, but I am obliged to pronounce it as the law requires."

This was the statement combining both the elements of finality and hope that Chancellor Sir John Boyd passed this morning upon James Gorham, the youth found guilty of matricide in a recent trial, the features of which are common knowledge to the people of Peterborough

Chancellor Boyd pronounced the above sentence on Gorham about ten minutes to twelve, in the county court house. The case was not held in camera, but there were only his Lordship, counsel, the court officers, and the press present at the proceedings. The prisoner, of course, was in the dock.

When Gorham was escorted to the prisoner's box he entered with the same easy bearing that was remarked at his trial, and smilingly conversed with Mr. G. N. Gordon, the junior counsel for his defence.

The court stated that the recommendation for mercy, which was brought in with the jury's verdict of "guilty of murder," had been forwarded to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa. The Department, however, had declined to interfere until the sentence had been imposed in accordance with the process of law. But at the same time his Lordship intimated very directly that he did not think the sentence would be carried into effect, and from his attitude it seemed evident that he was of the opinion that the executive would act favorably upon the recommendation for clemency. The formality of giving sentence could not be dispensed with, however, but under the circumstances his Lordship was sorry to have to pronounce it.

The sheriff received word that the chancellor would arrive here this morning on the 11.16 C.P.R. train from Toronto, to sentence Gorham. He was driven to the court house and informally conducted the proceedings. He didn't use the black cap, in fact he didn't remove his overcoat.

On account of the short notice given, and owing to the fact that the officials said nothing concerning the Chancellor's arrival, the public were not appraised, and hence the absence of spectators.

A REASON FOR THE TWO PRICES OF MILK

Some milk vendors in the city are asking seven cents per quart, and others only six cents.

The increase was made only recently. When asked for the reason of the two prices, a prominent vendor, and one who did not raise his price, informed the Review that his experiences with this kind of move, on other occasions, had been that after the increased price went into effect there were cases that came to his knowledge through his own customers, that dealers sold under the price agreed upon.

"I don't believe in these kind of business methods," said the Review's informant, "and yet, I am of the opinion that six cents is not enough, taking present conditions into consideration."

DANGER IN THE COMING CHRISTMAS SEASON

At the evening service at St. John's church yesterday Rev. Canon Davidson preached on "Divine and Human Giving," and incidentally spoke on the danger of the approaching Christmas season being made one of exhaustion and worry through an unwarranted multiplicity of Christmas gifts.

These gifts, he said, should not be given of necessity or merely for conventional or social reasons. As a distinctly religious festival the appropriate gifts of Christmas were those to the children and to the poor in memory of the Christ Child.

QUESTIONABLE LIBERTIES ARE ALLOWED CHILDREN

Yesterday at St. Peter's Cathedral Rev. Father McColl gave parents some sound advice as to their regulating the conduct of their children. He condemned the misdirected leniency showed by parents in allowing their children to go to late dances and events of this character and mentioned a recent dance at which children of tender years were guests when they should have been at home.

He pointed out that allowing the children such pernicious freedom was not in their best interests from a moral and religious standpoint, and remarked on the evils that frequently resulted.

LECTURED ON FIRST AID

Dr. W. S. Mepherson delivered a most instructive address to the Boy Scouts on Saturday evening on the "First Aid to the Wounded."

The lecture was imparted in a conversational way and was in the shape of questions and answers on what aids to apply in case of accidents.

In the case of poisons the boys suggested a number of emetics which met with the endorsement of the doctor, and in all, their answers displayed sound common sense and careful thought.

The lecture was well attended and another will be given at the Armouries next Saturday evening.

Mrs. H. O. Fiske will receive Tuesday of this week and not again until the third and fourth Friday of January.

Dr. and Mrs. Neal have returned from Saranac Lake, N. Y., and are now occupying their former residence, 314 Rubidge Street.

Should Stop the Practice

The Review is informed that a certain young man from the country takes great delight in coming to the city Sunday evenings, with his horse and cutter, and accosting young ladies with the invitation to "come for a drive."

On their refusal he uses ungentlemanly expressions and is known to have made insulting remarks.

It would be much better for this smart young aleck to remain at home and attend to the cattle, a position he is much more qualified to fill.

MEETINGS WILL BE CONTINUED

At Mark Street Methodist Church—Splendid Results by Evangelist Whiteside

Evangelist Whiteside gave his farewell address last evening at the Mark Street Church, closing a very successful evangelistic campaign of four weeks duration in the city, the first two weeks having been spent at the St. James' Methodist Church.

At both of these churches, the special work done has resulted in an exceedingly gratifying harvest of souls.

Yesterday was a day to be remembered long at Mark Street as one of spiritual uplift and blessing to the people, and when, last evening, nearly a score of adult people pledged themselves to live a Christian life, in addition to the large number already enlisted during the services, the pastor by the concurrence of the congregation decided to continue the meetings at least until Wednesday night.

There will be special singing each night: and it is hoped there will be a well sustained interest to the end.

St. John's Brotherhood

On Friday evening last the weekly meeting of the Junior Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of St. John's church was held. At the conclusion of the regular business reports for the past year were received, and officers for the ensuing year elected as follows:—

Hon. Director—Mr. J. Bell.
Director—F. Pidgeon.
Vice Director—A. Horsefield.
Secretary-Treasurer—K. Brown.

After the election a lunch was partaken of. Prospects are bright for the coming year.

POLICE COURT

The lord of a local home, charged with assaulting his wife, was given a chance to give a better account of himself in the future by the Magistrate this morning.

Just after he took his seat in the prisoner's box, he was handed a white paper by Inspector Stewart.

He was on the blacklist. Incidently it might be mentioned that a hotel proprietor was present to have a good look at the new member.

A young fellow, not out of his teens, presented himself at court at the request of the chief, and he pleaded guilty to breaking into the premises of Alex. Elliott and stealing one half dozen bottles of gin. He was remanded till Friday, the day on which Alfred Meakins gets a hearing on the same charge.

A Great Railway System

Hardly a town, village or city in Ontario that does not receive daily benefit from the operation of the Grand Trunk Railway System, and considering the net work of branch line connections, it is wonderful with what regularity trains are run. Not only is a good service provided between points in Ontario but this line also reaches nearly all the important cities of Michigan, viz., Flint, Saginaw, Bay City, Lansing, Battle Creek, Jackson, Grand Rapids and Muskegon, South Bend, Ind., and the second city in America, viz., Chicago, Ill., the gateway to the North-west, West and South, bringing Ontario in close connection. On the east the Grand Trunk connects Ontario with Montreal, Quebec, the Maritime Provinces and Boston, Mass.

With a double-track line all the way from Chicago to Montreal, and also to Niagara Falls, connecting with Lehigh Valley for New York, the Grand Trunk reaches out in all directions for your patronage, and well deserves it, for its vestibule coaches, parlor and dining cars and modern Pullmans give the service desired.

Consult your nearest Grand Trunk agent for information regarding your next trip. dl

Some papers were found in his pockets which showed that he had apparently some friends in the Old Land, but none in this country, so far as is known.

Heart failure was the immediate cause of death.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30, from Comstock's undertaking parlors to Little Lake cemetery.

WANT LINDSAY FRANCHISE

Electric Power Company Will Ask Council To-night—A Synicate With Large Interests—The Lindsay List Discusses Proposition

As will be noticed by an article in another column the Electric Power Company, Limited, intend asking for a franchise from the town council of Lindsay on Monday night for light and power in Lindsay, and also the installation of a gas plant.

This is one of the most important propositions ever placed before the town and on Monday evening Mr. R. J. McLaughlin, K. C., and Mr. Kerry the President of the Company, will be present at the Council meeting to discuss the question of the franchise with the Council.

The Electric Power Company Ltd. was incorporated some months ago to acquire the light and power plants in the Trent District. It was backed by Montreal Capital. It was considered in the interests of the district that abundance of power on the best terms could be supplied by a large company only so the capital would not be wasted by the duplication of transmission line and power system. This company now controls the Seymour Electric Company Limited of Campbellford, The Peterborough Light and Power Company, Ltd., The Peterborough Radial Railway Company, The Auburn Power Company, of Peterborough, Ltd., The Trenton Electric and Water Company, Ltd., The Nipissing Power Company, The Oshawa Electric Company, Limited, The City Gas Company of Oshawa, Limited, The Cobourg Utilities Corporation, and has also acquired power properties of the Northumberland-Durham Power Company, Healey Falls. The Northumberland-Durham Paper Co., of Campbellford, The Trenton Power Company, Trenton. It is now distributing light and power in Peterborough, Campbellford, Deloro, Madoc, Trenton, and Point Ann, where it supplies power to the big cement mills. It is operating the plant still by steam at Oshawa and Cobourg, but the power lines will be there by next spring. The power lines have just recently been completed to Marmora and Tweed and power lines are under construction to Deseronto, Brighton, Colborne, Cobourg and Oshawa, and they expect also that the power lines will be completed by the first of July next to Bowmanville, Port Hope, Consecon, Wellington, Bloomfield, Picton Napanee and Kingston, and also a line to Lindsay which will likely subsequently be extended further west.

The company will very shortly have about 50,000 h.p., at their disposal, and they have power rights which ultimately means as soon as the market can be worked up to take it nearly 100,000 h.p.

The Company's future will depend to a large extent upon working up industries and inducing industries to locate in the Trent River district, and it is the Company's intention to have a Department provided for the purpose and to work in harmony the Board of Trades and Municipal Council's with the ultimate object of making the whole Trent River District a cluster of manufacturing cities and towns, thus making a market for the Company's power.

The Electric Power Company, Limited, are asking for a franchise for light and power in the town of Lindsay. This company now controls the main powers on the Trent river, having acquired control of the Light, Heat & Power Co., at Peterborough; the Auburn Power Company, of Peterborough; the Peterborough Street Railway; the Seymour Power Company, of Campbellford; the Trent Power Company, Limited, and Trenton Electric and Water Company; also Healey's Falls, with about 15,000 h.p., near Campbellford; the Cobourg Utilities Corporation, Oshawa Gas and Electric Light and several other companies. It has also acquired the riparian rights practically to nearly all the powers on the Trent river, from Peterborough to Trenton.

The amount of power that the company will eventually have available will be well up to 100,000 h.p. The company is now supplying light and power at Peterborough, Campbellford, Deloro, Madoc, Sulphide, Stirling, Belleville, Trenton and Point Ann, where it is supplying power to the big cement mills and will have power very shortly into Deseronto, Cobourg, Brighton, Colborne, Oshawa, Port Hope and Bowmanville.

By the town of Lindsay getting connections with the lines of this company it will be in a competitive position with the other cities and towns in the Trenton district, to get industries, and the company having so many different powers, it will not be depending at all upon one source. The company also offers to put in a gas plant, which will be a great convenience in the town of Lindsay for cooking, and add very materially to the desirability of the town of Lindsay as a residential point.

It is of utmost importance to have this connection made, and at an early a date as possible.

The local company has its power practically all marketed, and if the town is to get new industries we want to have additional power available.

The Electric Power Company are not asking for any exclusive franchise to tie the town's hands in any way, and to grant them the franchise it will not prevent the town acquiring power itself hereafter or getting power from other quarters at any time. We have everything to gain by granting the franchise and nothing to lose, and we hope that an arrangement will be made that the lines of this company will be in the town at the earliest possible.

AN ELOQUENT DISCOURSE AT MURRAY STREET CHURCH

Rev. George Webb, of Philadelphia, and a brother of Rev. J. R. Webb, occupied the pulpit of Murray street Baptist church last night. He is an excellent preacher and a clear expounder of the Gospel, and his discourse last evening was one of the best that has been delivered in the city for some time.

The three words, "Thy Kingdom Come" served for his text. He explained the character and coming of the Kingdom in a manner simple and easily understood. In the first place it was what the Master prayed for, and it was what He wanted, and down through the centuries that have passed the same prayer has been lisped by thousands of infant lips. It has rolled from untutored tongues and been repeated by scholarly men. It has been the prayer of twenty centuries, and the wonderful thing about it is that the Kingdom has not come. Sometimes we wonder why our prayers are not answered and imagine we have prayed amiss, but He who knew the Father's will knows when our prayers are heard.

On the other hand has the Kingdom come? Look at the throngs of people at church to-night, in this church and other churches of the city and provinces all over the world, who bow down before the Lord. Then let us ask, has the Kingdom come? There are millions of devoted hearts as true as any that ever beat in the hearts of the martyrs who are bowed in prayer. Christ's idea of going to church, however, did not mean a few stylish and vain people going to an elaborately furnished edifice listening to grand music and afterwards forgetting all about it. That is not the Kingdom. There are more worshippers at the feet of Christ now than there have been since Jesus hung upon the Cross, but still the Kingdom has not come.

Oh, no, go outside the walls of the church and listen to the cry of the children, the wails of the poverty stricken, and then ask if the Kingdom has come.

If there is any place that these children should not be it is in the streets.

Looking at the character of the twentieth century we say there never was a better outlook for the coming of Christ. But in Philadelphia go into forty or fifty churches and you will find about fifty to one hundred people present. Why is it? Is there a reason why these people do not attend the place of worship? There was a time when people did go to church more than they do now, when they thought that the church could utter the mystic word and the gates of heaven would swing open, when the church meant the smile of Heaven. But people do not believe that any longer. People know there is a way to reach God outside of the church's wall. In the recent evangelistic services in the States the percentage of men coming to Christ was far more numerous than the women. We are learning through the Gospel, a Gospel that has no superior. The Word of God in the earlier times was covered with a form of ceremony which God never intended. Men are now listening and the Kingdom is captured. The liberty loving people of the twentieth century will not stand for despotism in religion. The character of the Kingdom now is humility. "Get the true idea of the Kingdom, live the Kingdom and then only will it come." Why hasn't it come? Because we haven't been living it. We are content to sit in our pews, listen to the service while thousands outside are in darkness and need.

The speaker then feelingly emphasized the mighty wielding influence of love, and compared the mother love as an example very inadequate to exemplify the overwhelming love of God for us.

Then it is for us to catch the spirit of the Kingdom, to hear the appeal of poverty, the wail of the weak and let the strong serve the weak.

Rev. Mr. Webb is a ready speaker and his words flow easily and forcibly. His sermon last evening was indeed a splendid interpretation of the meaning of the prayer of God.

After the service Miss Clara Kidd gave a solo with touching effect in a voice of great feeling and purity.

DIED OF HEART FAILURE WHILE AT BREAKFAST TABLE

With shocking suddenness death came to Miss Emma Fisherty, of Brantford who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. W. J. Andrews, 671 George street, for the past four months. She was sitting at the breakfast table on Sunday morning about 10.30, when, without a moment's warning, she fell foward and expired. Death was due to heart failure.

The deceased had been in the best of health for some time, but still her tragic end was entirely unexpected. There are left to mourn her loss her mother, residing in Brantford and three sisters and four brothers. Another brother passed away only six weeks ago.

The remains will be shipped to Brantford on the 5.20 G.T.R. this evening for interment.

Buttermilk Defies Old Age

The investigation of Elie Metchnikoff of the Pasteur Institute, Paris, leading to the prevention of the condition which leads to old age, has attracted widespread attention. Men of affairs as well as medical men, are deeply interested in the treatment, which is simple, but efficient in result. Plainly speaking it is the neutralization of substances in the body which become corrupt and are reabsorbed into the circulation, poisoning the blood, and producing the condition that leads to hardening of arteries and tissues. This neutralization of the noxious substances is to an extent brought about by the drinking of buttermilk, or, artificially soured milk, and this idea has a basis of common sense which lifts it from the limitations of a fad to that of a sound, practical, beneficent treatment.—London Globe.

WERE YOU EVER A SPARE?

An Incident of the Gridiron

(Toronto Saturday Night.)

It is said that a schoolmaster is never a hero to his pupils, but at least one striking exception to the rule can be found in Ontario. No man in the city of Hamilton possesses wider popularity than old Ben Simpson, whose name will live in the athletic history in this country, as one of the greatest half-backs that Canadian Rugby has ever produced. After a brilliant career on the gridiron, he made what was probably his final appearance in the game against Varsity, for the Dominion championship, and although on the losing side he was the most conspicuous figure on the field. The "village schoolmaster" may be getting old and may think that it is time for him to retire, but when he appears on the field, he still shows himself to be the "daddy of them all."

After hearing that Simpson has been the hero of dozens of great struggles one gets rather a surprise when he appears on the field. His spare build, his thin legs and his long lean body do not suggest a giant strength, but he can go through a hard game as well as the youngest of them. His great booting with his mighty left foot is too famous to require comment, but when running and taking a tackle he shows that he has been trained to think. Simpson has probably stayed in rugby all these years because he understands the science of saving himself, using such excellent judgment that he does not waste an ounce of strength or energy during a game. There is a certain quiet dignity about the schoolmaster and standing on the field he looks severe, in fact almost prim. Taken altogether it does not seem at all surprising that the Hamiltonians make an idol of him, and if he has really retired it will be some time before they see his like again.

An incident occured during the great game at Hamilton which indicated that the schoolmaster has a following among the youth of his city, who will stand steadfastly by their hero. The Varsity spare men were sitting on blankets near the touch-line, and when the students had obtained a good lead they were enjoying a gloat. Davy Tope, the Tiger manager stood nearby, and during a wait while an injured man was being fixed up, Simpson came over to speak to him. The men in uniform who were watching from the side-lines took the chance in "rub it in." They suggested to the two old stars that they were both "has beens" and made other remarks about the glories which were no more. These comments on their vanished prowess did not worry the players as much as it did the onlookers, and one youth wearing a yellow ribbon felt called upon to interfere in their behalf.

"Say, Mr. Simpson, were you ever a spare man?" called out the lad with a fine irony which put an effective damper on the collegians.

SPORTING COMMENT

Toronto Star.—A Toronto professional hockeyist was approached the other day by the representative of the Trenton professional hockey team, of Buck Irving's new league. The visitor explained that the salary limit was $16 per week in this organisation, but that he could arrange to give the Toronto player $2 per week extra on the side. It was said that board was cheap in Trenton, as compared with Toronto, and the temptation for a young man to spend money not nearly so great, therefore he should be able to save something out of his $18 salary. The Toronto man hinted that he thought it was worth the difference in money to be idle in Toronto and receive nothing than to accept such a princely sum and be forced to live in Trenton for the winter months.

The Trenton man then offered the Toronto player $25 per week, but that did not prove sufficient to get his signature to a contract.

Says the Belleville Ontario—The Ontario has advocated open professionalism in hockey in preference to bogus amateurism, and will watch with interest the outcome of the Eastern Ontario Professional Hockey League.

Moylen McDonald, formerly of this city, according to the Belleville papers, has signed with Belleville to play in the new professional league this year. McDonald has gone to New York to play with New York in the American Hockey League, consequently Belleville will be minus one of their expected players.—Kingston Standard.

Cobourg has a Gun Club, the secretary of which is Ernest Throop.

Ted Marriott has a sheet of ice on the Mutual street rink, Toronto, and practices have commenced.

Hamilton Alerts won the championship of the Junior O.R.F.U. by defeating Petrolea on Saturday. The score was 29—2.

The ladies have decided to organize a curling club, and the meeting is called for the Y.M.C.A. Wednesday afternoon. The Peterborough Curling Club have set aside certain hours at the rink for the ladies, who will no doubt give a good account of themselves during the season.

This is the last call to clubs wishing to enter the City Hockey League. The postponed meeting will be held to-night at the Oriental parlors at eight o'clock.

LEMBERG WON $110,000

New York, Dec. 3.—Lemberg, the colt which won this year's English derby, heads the list of winning horses for the English racing season which closed last week.

Lemberg carried off $110,000—a rather poor showing when compared with the record sum made by Bayardo when he cleared $167,000 as a 3-year-old. Second place on the list for the present season goes to Winkipop, with only $57,000.

The largest winner among the owners is Lemberg's owner, Mr. Fairie, whose winnings for the season total nearly $177,000. Lord Derby is second, with $115,000, and Harry Payne Whitney, the American, third, with $70,000.

IT COSTS MORE TO DEVELOP BEAUTY THAN BRAINS

IN Other Words, the Education of the Modern Young Woman Is Much More Expensive Than That of Her Genius Brother

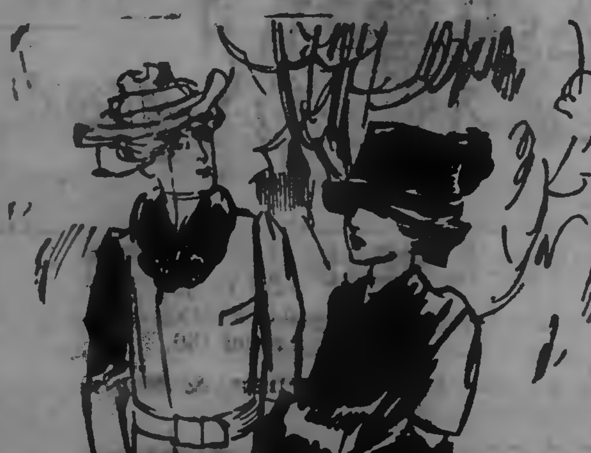
IT costs more to finish a fashionable girl's education nowadays than has been expended upon the entire university course and professional training of many a youth of talents or even of genius.

Of course, education may "take" more readily with a genius than with the carefully nurtured "bud," but, apart from that, it does cost enormously to give the last touches to the approved instruction of that charming young person, the daughter of wealthy and lavish parents.

Why does it cost so much more to "finish" the education of Miss Fortunatus than that of her brother? Hardly a father who foots the bills knows why. Even the mother whose joyful privilege it is to contract for them and assure herself that they are not overtopped by the bills of any one in her set can go no further in explanation than a shrugged "Oh, everything for girls is so tremendously expensive!"

Perhaps lurking in the background of the maternal mind is the thought that her precious daughter may be called upon to wear a coronet, and that every grace and accomplishment should be hers to bear herself fitly in such circumstances, should fate, duly assisted, place her there. Even to be the wife of a desirably rich and socially prominent citizen of the republic it is necessary that a girl should have had the best equipment that can be bought.

Where there is no such definite scheming the indulgent parents still have the true American longing to give their darlings the best of everything. Isn't the American girl a princess in her own right? Isn't she "just as good" as any one on earth? Therefore, let money be unstinted for the adornment of her mind as well as of her person.



An English Governess Is Indispensable for the Accent.

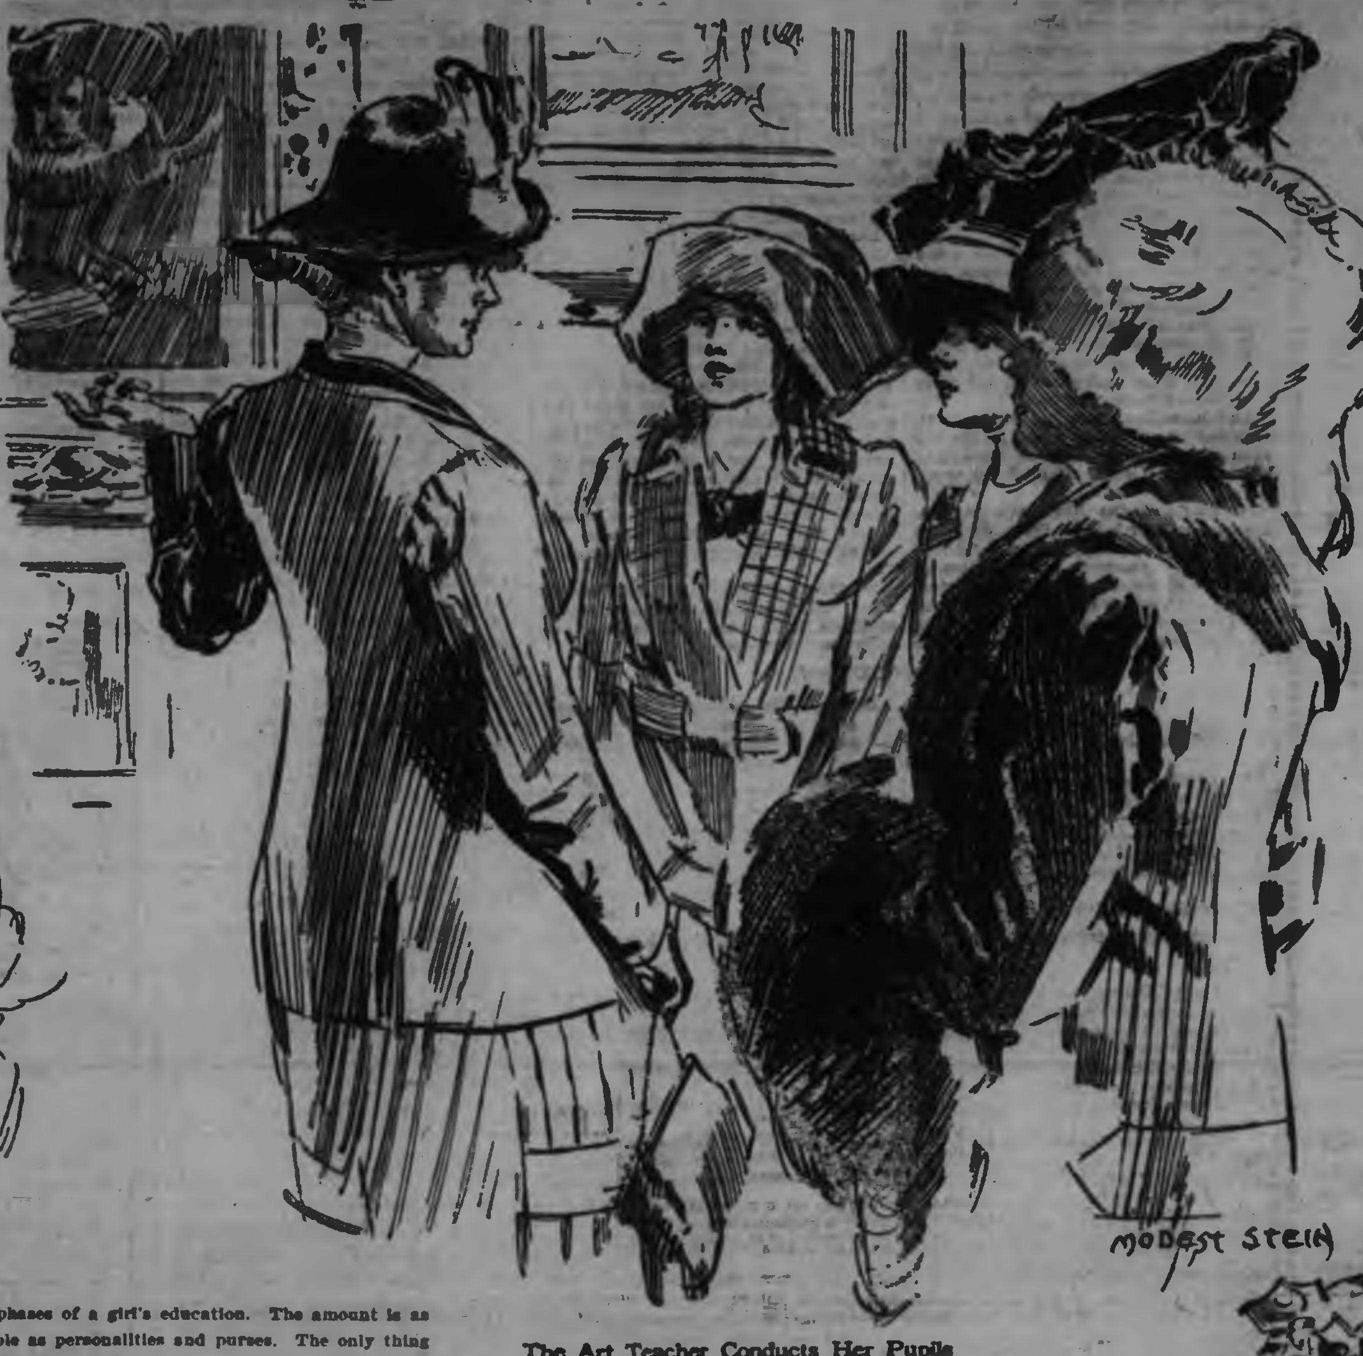
No one can compute the exact sum required for the final phases of a girl's education. The amount is as variable as personalities and purses. The only thing which may be reckoned upon with certainty is that the cost of a fashionable education, like most other things, is being graded, always up, never down. The rich and compliant father may count himself in luck if he gets off with $5,000 a year.

Making Their Manners.

Education suggests school, but the last word on the cultivation of the young girl's mind and manners is that schools, even the most exclusive, are just a little outside the pale prescribed for ultra fashionable and wealthy families. Private tuition, very much specialized, is arranged for by mothers who follow where the enviable social leader leads.

There are insidious dangers in connection with even the most convention hedged school the danger that some one may presume upon acquaintance formed in the course of common pursuits, the peril of impairing the quality of the vowels, or perhaps that a daughter who is carefully trained for social distinction may acquire popular or even socialistic notions. It has been known to happen in the best referenced schools.

A bit of socialism is not to be discouraged. It is not only a safety valve, but, properly handled, it is rather smart; but it has to be dexterously handled, so that the young mind may never get over the border into the crass, crude conditions that are so offensive to well bred, well circumstanced persons.



The Art Teacher Conducts Her Pupils to Special Exhibitions.

Philanthropy, too, must be considered as an elegant attribute of the wealthy, and girls who are to have a surplus of money must be instructed in graceful and gracious ways of dispensing it without disturbing the equilibrium of polite society.

Girls are often asked to give money to a hospital in the neighborhood in which the school is located, or, rather the opportunity is given them to contribute. This they do without knowing anything about conditions or needs. Every school girl is sensitive about appearing mean in regard to money matters. If Dorothy and Janet give Muriel may not withhold her dole even if her father may not be so rich as theirs. A hospital and other means of directly giving alms are both safe and popular philanthropic appeals to make to the school girl of this class, and they are likely to be approved of in her home.

Another kind of giving is the bestowal of tributes upon teachers. There is an etiquette about this in many schools. For instance, in one school it is considered quite proper to give flowers, but seldom anything else. A teacher who was trying to send a brother through college and take care of an invalid father wept as soon as the girl had gone away who had given her a dozen roses. Lovely, they surely were, but they had cost at least $25, and how far $25 would have gone in solving her difficult problem.

An English governess is indispensable for the accent. Although one should have all the learning of all the ages and could not pronounce the word "very" in the English manner, she would not be accepted as an instructor in the homes of families of first rank in the social register.

The blunder should not be made of inferring that no attention is paid to the subject matter of the fashionable girl's education. Ordinarily she is not bothered overmuch with such branches as higher mathematics, but excellent specialists, often college professors and tutors, are engaged to give instruction in literature, history and art. Modern languages are insisted upon, especially French, for which there is invariably a native teacher.

Nature Study Popular.

Pure science occupies little space in the curriculum, but nature study is popular and is undertaken with a special teacher, who accompanies her pupils to the Natural History Museum and takes them into the country for first hand knowledge of birds, flowers, trees, stones and running brooks.

The art teacher in like manner conducts her pupil to special exhibitions and on tours of the art museums, giving such information as will be of the greatest use in enabling her to [illegible] in general conversation.

The old time music lessons, all given in the same way to all pupils, have given place in large degree to instruction in the knowledge of music. A girl may play the piano if she has talent or sing if Heaven has given her a voice, but lacking those qualities she does not spend useless and painful hours in practising. She learns, however, if she has an ear that will bear cultivation, the story and motifs of the great operas and of other musical compositions, and her music teacher takes her to concerts and opera, where she may put to a practical test the knowledge that she has acquired. In some houses there is a large self-playing instrument on which the music may be reproduced until a girl is thoroughly familiar with it.

The head governess receives a good salary and the special [illegible] of instructors are all well paid, so that the total salary list runs into the thousands.

"But rich girls do go to school." Of course they do. How else could the handsome educational establishments in and about New York be supported and their owners and principals maintain unmistakable signs of prosperity?

If a daughter of a Croesus elects, or her parents permit her, to patronize a school there are institutions where one can spend quite as much money as by hiring a corps of private instructors. It does not seem so on the face of the plan, for in general the charge for board and tuition is only about $1,000 or $1,200 a year. In this case, however, it is not the first step that costs, but those that come after. It is only the meagre commonplaces of learning and the poorest room in the building that are included in that allotment. One of the newest schools provides a suite of private sitting room, bedroom and bath for each pupil, and the charges are advanced proportionately. Also there is maid service to be paid for as an extra.

Girls who live at home have their private automobiles to take them to and from the school and are, of course, always attended.

In All Its Phases.

Instruction in what corresponds to an elegant education to the "three R's" is covered by the first charges. After that everything is an extra—languages, music, art, physical culture and special lectures that vary from year to year. Some of these are given in the school, others outside, and to them the girls must be carefully chaperoned, as they are to the concerts and other entertainments which it is a part of their education to attend and at which the most expensive seats are especially reserved for them.

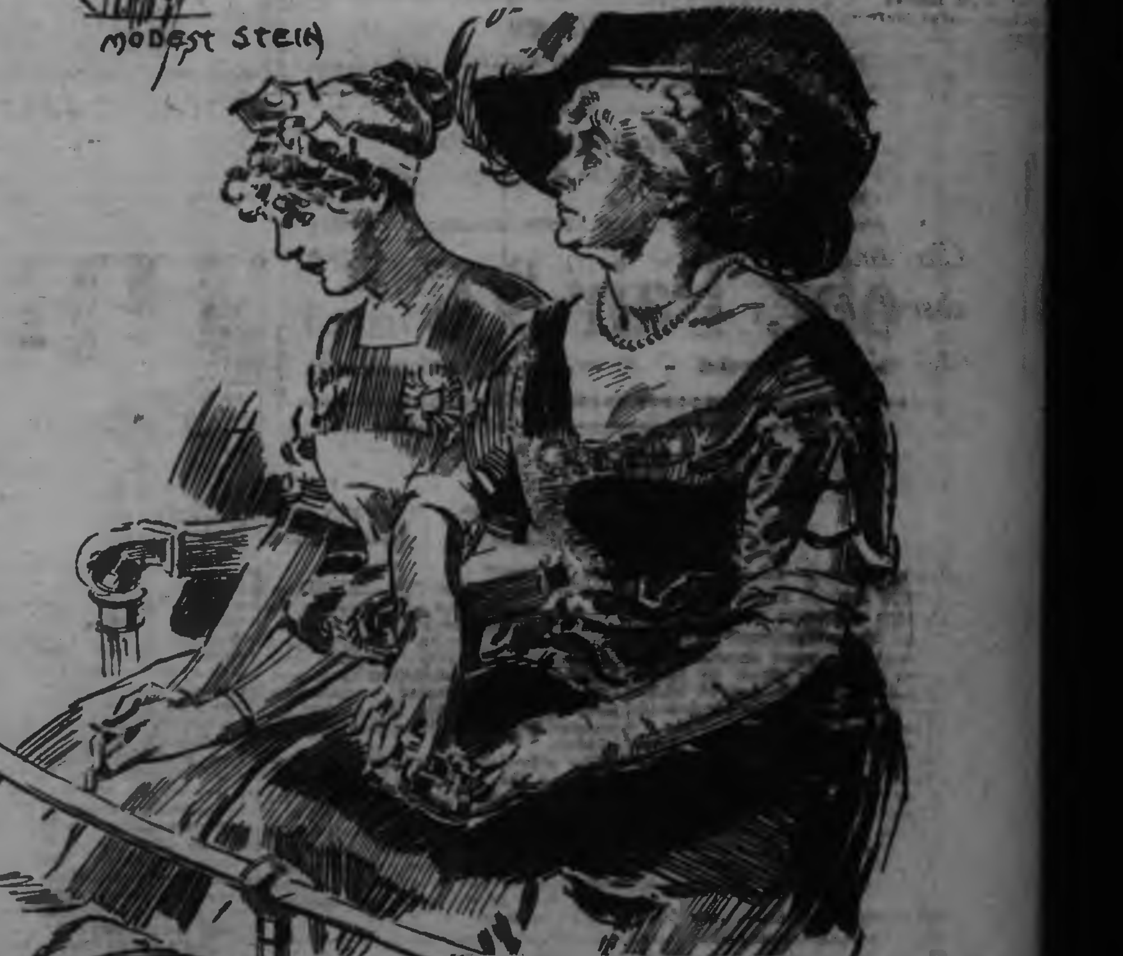
Every year there is something new, from cookery to psychic phenomena, to engage the attention of fashionable school girls and to excuse extra charges for lectures. The fads are carefully chosen by the astute school principals, but fads there must be. The fashionable girl demands them as avidly as her less guarded sisters.

Dancing is a highly important part of the school girl's education and is as expensive as anything in the curriculum. Lessons begin at about the kindergarten age and continue from year to year. Not only are these lessons depended upon to confer grace of movement and poise, but there are always new fancy dances to learn, which are prized as one of the most valuable accomplishments that a girl can possess.

Physical culture is another essential, especial attention being paid to individual cases in order to produce symmetrical development, grace of manner and proper carriage and gait.

Time, money and attention are given without stint to the training and care of the body. No blemish that skill or care can remove is permitted to appear. The hair is regularly and painstakingly washed and treated. The finger nails are systematically and carefully shaped.

Proper corseting is considered as important an exercise in insuring a good figure. The girls are carefully fitted by a corset maker of experience and reputation, and $35 for a pair of corsets is a moderate charge. By the use of finer materials they may be made to cost considerably more.



To Theatre or Any Other Place of Amusement the Chaperon Must Always Go.

Shoes made to order to fit individual feet so that shapeliness may be emphasized without injury are of the first importance to the school girl, and their cost is disregarded.

It is not only outward appearances that are assiduously watched over, but the physical health of the school girl is jealously guarded. She is not permitted to eat nearly so many sweets or indigestible foods as the daughter of parents whose indulgence tends rather toward letting the daughter have her own way than toward the one purpose of fitting her to shine in the highest social circles.

Adenoids are watched for constantly and if detected a specialist and a nurse take charge of the school girl and a bill of $150 or $200 is sent to father, along with the others from the school.

The boarding school girl has to be treated by the most expensive dentist within reach and must pay for an attendant to go with her to his office, as well as to every other place she is called upon to visit. Even if she calls upon friends she must be taken to the door of their house and called for.

To the matinee, or any other place of amusement or instruction the chaperon must always go. Carriages, luncheon, whatever of expense there is incident to any sort of errand is doubled.

Thus it happens that if father should happen to be a member of the Congress of the United States his salary would just about pay for his daughter's year at a fashionable school.

Disturbing Nations with a Baseball.

"YOU'D hardly think, to look at me, that I might fall under suspicion as a wild eyed plotter of portentous plots and a shag haired deviser of devious devices against the peace of governments, would you?" inquired a smiling young man of athletic build who was being welcomed after an extended trip abroad.

"Behold in me, however, the despair of star chambers and the bugbear of the secret service. Now that I am well off European soil foreign potentates sleep more soundly o' nights and remark a distinct relief as they sit upon their tottering thrones. You will find my name and description, together with a minute report of my comings and goings, in the portfolios of special agents, and I have no doubt that I have caused many a sleepless night for worthy police authorities in various parts of the Old World.

"Nihilist? Revolutionist? Nothing of the kind. The whole matter is neither more nor less than a question of baseball.

"You see, being away in the summer season I missed all the games, and when I fell in with another young chap from New York who had a baseball packed in his grip I let out a whoop and hugged him like a long lost brother. My hands fairly itched to feel the horsehide once more, and we agreed to finish our tour together so that we might enliven the way with a little practice.

"We turned out first at Florence. In the early morning we wandered out of the city through a suburb and found a meadow with a level strip of green. It was only pitch and catch, for we had no bat, but it was certainly good, sending the ball back and forth for imaginary strikes. We observed that the natives gave us a wide berth, watching us curiously from a distance or slinking by with fearful and furtive glances. But we had no idea how mysterious and sinister our employment seemed to persons who cannot conceive of physical exercise for its own sake.

"Next day we were out again, and this time there were several sleek, discreet, keen eyed persons on the job who observed us narrowly and followed us to the hotel. It was not long before we were aware of a systematic espionage. As we jogged on into the northern provinces they kept on our trail and we were always sure of a good attendance of note taking, camera snapping detectives during morning practice. We didn't mind; we rather enjoyed it.

"At last we put up for an extended stay at a little hotel in Pegli, just outside Genoa. Soon after our arrival there came to the hotel a man who talked English perfectly, seemed a good fellow in every way and struck up quite an intimacy with us. We had told him about all there was to tell of ourselves before we felt wise that this was another member of the secret police put upon our track. Finally we taxed him with it and he admitted the fact.

"'But what's the trouble?' I asked him. 'Can't two Americans toss a ball without having the sleuth hounds of the country set upon them?'

"'You don't understand,' he said. 'We watch every one, particularly strangers, and most of all strangers who do anything out of the way. You'd probably never guess what some of the other agents reported about you.'

"'What?'

"'They said that you were undoubtedly dangerous characters who were gaining proficiency in hurling a small sphere with a view to the accurate manipulation of bombs.'"

MISSION CONCLUDED AT ST. LUKE'S CHURCH

Yesterday a very successful mission, held by Rev. J. Bennett Anderson, diocesan missioner, was brought to a close. The attendance throughout the week was most encouraging and much help was given to those who attended. Every day at 12.30 o'clock a prayer was said on behalf of the work and the parish.

Large congregations attended both services yesterday. In the afternoon a children's service was held and addressed by Rev. Mr. Anderson, at which many parents and adults were present. At the morning service Mr. Anderson preached on the 51st Psalm, bringing out lessons in particular from the 12th verse, as the basis of success.

In the evening the subject was "Human Destiny."

During the mission Rev. Mr. Anderson has proven himself a man of great spiritual power, possessed of a great eagerness and longing for the saving of souls. His very presence has proven to be a benediction to many.

Letters and personal testimonials have been given to the rector by persons who have benefited by the mission.

The attendance increased day by day, and the heartiness of the services, combined with its deep spiritual tone, added to the solemnity of the great work of deepening the spiritual life of the saving of souls.

Mr. Anderson leaves to-night, accompanied by Dr. Langfeldt, for Omemee, where he will enter upon a fortnight's mission.

BRANDON HAD A D. B. THOMAS, SANTA CLAUS

Said He Was Son-in-law of Sir Frederick Borden—He Had Lots of Cheques.

Brandon Daily Sun.

One of the greatest fakes ever worked here, where many schemes have gone well, was operated here during the last few days.

A Frenchman, giving the name of J. U. Riopel, arrived here and said he was going to superintend the building of the new Brandon Asylum. He ordered a million feet of lumber from one man, hired fifty steam engines from another, bought a fine residence from a prominent real estate man, bought a horse and rig and a fine outfit of furs, and in each case gave a cheque in payment.

In purchasing the residence he gave a cheque for five thousand dollars. All the cheques were marked on the Bank of Hochelaga, and dated Montreal.

Riopel was wined and dined by a dozen prominent citizens and business men, Grits and Tories; while he was making his extravagant purchases, and he was regarded as a rare find, and closely guarded by those who were doing the selling.

His story was that the Dominion Government guaranteed the bonds for the building of the asylum, and that he was the engineer in charge. He carried a card upon which was "J. U. Riopel, C.E., Inland Revenue, Department of Mines," and got everything he asked for everywhere.

Someone interested wired Montreal asking for information regarding Riopel, and the reply came back: "Cheques no good, beware of this man."

Riopel said he was a son-in-law of Sir Frederick Borden.

To-day he cannot be found, and is supposed to have vamoosed after great entertainment at local clubs and elsewhere and borrowing a small amount of money.

It was reported this morning that Riopel was at Kemnay buying a farm, and that the farmer had telephoned in to enquire if the Frenchman's cheque for $8,000 was good.

BETTER SANITARY CONDITIONS

Must Be Established in the Interests of Human Life—Dr. Knight, of Queen's, Gives Excellent Address on Subject of Vital Importance

The full text of the valuable address given at the Queen's Alumni dinner at the National on Friday, is as follows:

As a graduate in Arts of Queen's and a graduate in Medicine of Toronto University through Victoria, Dr. Knight thought he might very appropriately suggest that another subject be added to the arts course in all our Ontario universities, namely, personal and public health. The importance of this subject could scarcely be overestimated. Only by means of a thorough and systematic educational campaign could we hope to increase the average length of human life and decrease the annual death rate. That human life could be lengthened was evident, not only from the statistics of life insurance companies but also from some recent statistics that had been collected in Geneva. According to these, the duration of human life had increased as follows;

In the 16th century it was 21.2 years.
In the 17th century it was 25.7 years
In the 18th century it was 33.6 years
In 1801—1883 it was 39.7.

And he called upon his audience to consider what this increase in the life span meant in the way of increasing the industrial production of the country.

In England the life span had increased amongst men from 40 years to 44 years, between the years of 1838 to 1900, and amongst women from 42 years to 48 years in the same period.

He then asked his audience to look at the problem from another point of view, namely, that of the decrease in the annual death rate per thousand. In London the death rate fell from 50 per thousand in 1660 to 25 in 1905, while in Vienna it had fallen from 60 per thousand to 23 in the last hundred years.

Attention was then called to our death-rate in Ontario. For the year 1907 it was not quite 16 per thousand for the whole population. If, however, we looked at the death rate among infants it was appalling. To the shame of every parent in the province it was something like 150 per thousand, or between 8 and 9 times the average. Here are the figures for the several cities and they are convincing proof of the ignorance, stupidity and incompetence of the mothers in this country;

Belleville babies 171.
Toronto babies 155.
Hamilton babies 151.
Kingston babies 144.
Peterborough babies 134.
St. Catharines babies 117.

Can this death rate be reduced? Yes, if the undergraduates and graduates in arts in this province are given the necessary instructions in our universities. Any school child of 12 or 14 years of age could be made understand the laws of health, and if a beginning were made in teaching hygien in our universities, it would only be a short time until improvement in health would be apparent all along the line.

He then called attention to some recent investigations amongst school children in Glasgow and quoted the following statistics;

STATISTICS OF GLASGOW.

Size of House	Number of people living in these houses	Deaths per year	Percentage of population	Percentage of population
One room	134,728	3,636	24.7	27.0
Two rooms	243,691	6,325	41.7	27.0

Group A comprised 26 schools with 26,061 children and were located in the poorer districts of the city.

Group B comprised 27 schools with 25,348 children and were located in poor districts.

The size of the children increased from A. to D. For example, it was found that girls in one-roomed houses were 14 lbs lighter and 5.3 inches shorter than girls of the same age who were living in four-roomed houses.

Also that boys in two-roomed houses were 11.7 lbs. lighter and 4.7 inches shorter than boys of the same age in four-roomed houses.

A STARTLING STATEMENT MADE

It has been said by those who have investigated the matter carefully that, although at the age of 45 fully 80 per cent of men are established in whatever pursuit they follow, and are in receipt of incomes in excess of their expenditure, at the age of 60 it has been found that 95 per cent. are dependent upon their daily earnings, or upon their children for support. Many, no doubt, read the despatch from Detroit which recently appeared in the Canadian papers, and which described the condition of a man who but a little more than forty years ago was a "financial power" in that city, who had a "palatial home" on one of the most fashionable thoroughfares, entertained lavishly, and to whom every person, high and low, was prepared to pay homage. But the fates were against him. He suffered serious financial losses, and when he began to go down hill he found it was properly greased for the occasion. His friends deserted him like rats from a sinking ship and now at 80 years of age, after his day's labor, he wends his way to the city with the bent, broken-down men who have influence enough to have their names on the city's pay roll.

The moral is that out of your abundance something should be laid aside for declining years, and invested where thieves cannot reach it, and where one cannot be deprived of it in any possible way. This means is afforded you under the Canadian Government Annuities Act, which the Parliament of Canada passed in the session 1908, and which received the unanimous support of both sides of the House.

You may get all information by applying at the post office, or by addressing the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa.

Nice Words for Grand Trunk Pacific

A member of a party who journeyed into the Peace River District last July and August, and travelled over the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway between Winnipeg and Edmonton writes to the company as follows: "I desire to congratulate the Grand Trunk Pacific on its excellent service, and I want to go on record as saying that no matter which way one views it, your line has certainly delivered the goods. Our party thought it nothing short of marvelous that in two years' time a railroad should be running as only the G.T.P. runs. The cuisine was as enjoyable as was the smooth-running road-bed.

SHELLS FOR RACING CLUBS

Messrs. Sims, the boatbuilders at Putney, have just built racing eights for St. Catharine's ("Cats") and Peterhouse ("Pothouse"), and Sydney Colleges, at Cambridge; fours for Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Stockton-on-Tees; an in-rigged four and racing pair for South America, and sculling boats for Louis Scholes, Toronto, who won the Diamonds five years ago; and J. Cosgrave, Toronto. It will show how much English-built boats are appreciated and in demand all over the world, for Harvard have just cabled for another racing eight, and the Ottawa R.C. are having a similar craft built for them while Sims' have also nearly completed a racing pair for Riga, Russia, and a four for Vienna. The Thames' R.C. had a new four for the Stewards' at Henley.—People's, (London, Eng.)

THEY CAN'T USE WOLGAST'S FACE

Cadillac, Mich., Dec. 5 — Ad. Wolgast has refused an offer of $150 from a Chicago Brewing Company for the use of his photograph which would have appeared—had he consented—in label form pasted upon every bottle of beer placed upon the market by the company for the next six months to come. The stipulation to his offer was that Wolgast should be photographed with two others sitting at a table sipping the beverage. The company also offered him $100 for his picture alone to be labeled upon every bottle. Wolgast refuses both offers.

ENTERTAINING IN JAPAN.

How One Household Helps Out the Other.

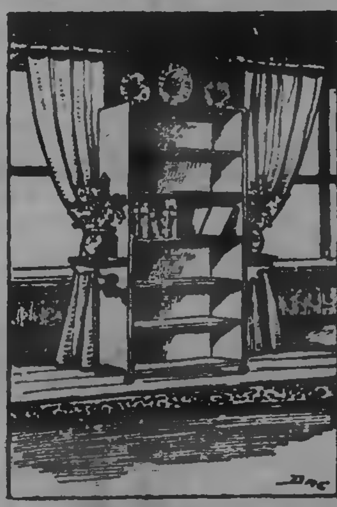
"Entertaining in Japan is a fine art, but it has phases that occidental hostesses would not care to imitate," says a traveler lately returned from the Flowery Kingdom. "The resources of the Japanese menage appear to be unlimited, and the butler manages everything. The hostess never has to plan beyond selecting the color of the flowers that are to be used in the decoration. The host may bring home twenty unexpected guests, and with scarcely any delay the meal is served as perfectly as if the staff had been notified. This abundance at short notice does not mean that supplies are laid in by the cargo. It reveals instead a wonderful system of borrowing, which, while it may be convenient at times, has unpleasant possibilities. One story is told of a man who, having sent to Australia for some mutton, arranged a dinner in its honor. At the appointed time a delicious dinner appeared, but no mutton. Investigation brought to light the fact that it had been 'loaned' the previous night to the cook of the deadliest foe of the host for a dinner at which he was entertaining the very man with whom the actual owner of the mutton had hoped by its aid to make a business deal. There was consolation, however, in the fact, which came out at the same time, that a wonderful dinner given by the mutton man a week before had been entirely borrowed from the foe."

Beautifying the Home.

In many rooms there is a space between the windows which is always difficult to usefully and effectually fill. In the cut is shown one way in which this space may be inexpensively utilized in the shape of a handy bookcase made to fit and arranged with small shelf side brackets.

The bookcase in the illustration is shown in a very plain state, but this is done in order to illustrate more clearly the way in which it can be made.

Two shallow packing cases about ten inches in depth and of a width to fit between the two windows should be obtained, and this should prove no difficult matter, as cases of every conceivable size and shape may be procured at most shops for very little. These two cases should be placed one upon the top of the other in the manner indicated in the small sketch in the left hand top corner and fastened together with screws. Under the lower box at each corner casters should be screwed on. The two sides of the boxes that rest on each other in the center will form one strong shelf, and the other shelves may be easily made by cutting wood to fit across the boxes and fastening square pieces of wood beveled at the edges with triangular supports underneath them.



NOVEL WINDOW TREATMENT.

This is the state of the bookcase as illustrated. The decoration is a matter of personal preference. It may be painted or stained, or if fitted into an informal apartment the wood may be covered with cretonne to match the hangings of the room.

Fashionable Birdcages.

There is a change of fashion in birdcages from time to time in common with everything else, and if the Boston bull in a household has his smart blanket or his silver collar the canary or bullfinch in the same home is probably no longer confined to the familiar cage of gilded wire.

For if so he is not a fashionable bird.

Curious little cages of enameled or oxidized metal, resembling a Japanese lantern (the kind seen in oriental pictures) in shape and rather heavy and formidable looking for so airy a guest, are among the latest styles in bird houses. They are called pagoda cages.

Others are of wood elaborately carved in a style which suggests the Swiss chalets as represented by the Swiss woodcarvers and seen on hillslopes in the land of William Tell. These, according to knowing bird lovers, have many little sliding improvements which make for cleanliness and desirability. Another splendidly airy and attractive model is built along colonial lines.

Whatever the style of the cage affected by your bird, let him out of it at least once a day. Close the windows and doors and let the little fellow romp around the room for an hour. Most caged pets are given no exercise, and they require it constantly to aid digestion as well as to prevent atrophy of the muscles.

When it becomes necessary to return the bird to his wee house, put something he is especially fond of just back of the little open gate and he will pop back again.

TWO UNIONIST GAINS IN YESTERDAY'S POLLING

Total Net Increase Thus Far Is Five Members.

Unionist Increase Is Eleven and Liberal Six Seats In British Elections But Liberals Are Expected to Do Better This Time In the Country Ridings — Joseph Martin Is Re-elected by a Reduced Majority.

London, Dec. 6.—The results of yesterday's elections merely confirm the opinion formed from the results of Saturday's contests that the Unionists now have no possible hope of replacing the Liberal Government in power. The only question now is, whether the Liberals will return with a larger or smaller majority.

To gain a bare majority in the new Parliament, the Unionists must make a net gain of 63 seats. Thus far, with 120 pollings, they have gained eleven, and the Liberals six seats, a net gain of but five. The gain for the Unionists on Saturday was seven, while the Liberals gained four. Yesterday the Liberals gained four and the Liberals two seats. A continuation at this rate of progress would fill the Unionist prediction that the Asquith Cabinet would come back with a greatly weakened majority, and would be more than ever dependent upon their Irish and Labor allies.

It must be remembered, however, that the Liberals lost at the January elections a large number of seats through three-coronered contests. Such contests are largely eliminated in the present elections, and this may give the Liberals sufficient gains to balance those of the Unionists. On the whole it seems likely that the new House of Commons will meet with the position of the parties practically unchanged. The question will then arise whether the King will feel justified in giving guarantees for the creation of Liberal peers to force the veto bill through the House of Lords.

The Unionists rally in Lancashire has been maintained, and the Liberal hope of winning two seats at Preston has been disappointed, but what the Liberals lost in Lancashire as compensated for by their better showing in Yorkshire.

In Liverpool the strong campaign by the Unionist orator, F. E. Smith, greatly improved the Unionist position. The Unionists gained the seat for the Exchange division of Liverpool, as well as that for Birkenhead. In the latter case the Liberal defeat was attributed to the recent absence of H. Vivian on a free trade mission in Canada.

The two seats the Liberals lost in London yesterday, Islington (North) and St. Pancras (West), were held by very small majorities in the previous Parliament.

Some of the Liberal gains, such as Wakefield, a cathedral city, which has been represented by a Unionist for eight years, and Cheltenham, another Tory stronghold and residential city, largely composed of retired officers, are noteworthy, as is the fact that in the royal borough of Windsor, the Liberals succeeded in reducing the Unionist majority.

These signs of the conversion of the traditionally Conservative middle classes may be an indication of a similar change in the country agricultural districts, which went almost entirely Unionist in January.

Among the members returned unopposed is Ald. Daniel Boyle, for North Mayo. Doyle won this seat last January by only 40 votes, and his unoppposed return is now attributed to appreciation of his services in accompanying John E. Redmond on his recent mission to America.

Mr. Redmond last night issued a public denial of the allegation made by a Conservative candidate that he (Redmond), in a public speech, repudiated allegiance to the King.

GUELPH IS INVADED BY A HOST OF AGRICULTURALISTS

Crowds Are In City to Attend What Promises to Be the Biggest Winter Show In the Twenty-Seven Years of Its History — Standing Field Competition Is Proving an Attractive Feature.

Guelph, Dec. 6.—The Royal City is en fete, the occasion being the opening of the 27th annual Provincial Winter Fair, in point of attendance a record breaker, and in the quality of exhibits the greatest the Dominion has vere seen.

Every department is crowded to excess, and the management, after making what was considered ample provision, are even now casting about for means to relieve the situation. Practically the exhibits are all here, and afford a magnificent display.

The city is rapidly filling up and yesterday afternoon at the exhibit and judging of horses in the arena, the balconies were comfortably filled. What it will be when the several institutes get fairly under way, the officials are already beginning to wonder.

A feature which attracts already great interest, is the exhibit given under the Standing Field Competition of the Agricultural Societies Branch, with J. Lockie Wilson in charge. Four years ago, when Mr. Wilson took charge of this department, ten societies were represented with 300 farmers and about 1,000 acres were under inspection. Yesterday 110 societies, 1,660 farmers and 20,000 acres are interested, a wonderful expansion. There are 62 expert judges who go out through the country, and the incentive is marvelous. At the fair here, 100 bushels of the very choicest prize-winning grain will be retained by the Department of Agriculture, sent out again to certain districts and the product again returned to the department. In this way the good work goes on.

Hon. James Duff, Minister of Agriculture, will preside as chairman at a number of the meetings, and to-day, in addition to the judging of horses, cattle and sheep, there will be addresses by Prof. Raynor of Ottawa, Prof. Zavitz of Guelph, on "Alfalfa," and George H. Clarke of Ottawa.

In poultry, the show is the finest ever exhibited in Canada, approximately 5,000 entries, and they are all choice birds, though citizens living down around the fair buildings aver that the authorities have turned night into day. But it is a wonderful demonstration and gives one a faint idea of the enormous possibilities in revenue to the Canadian farmers. From as far away as Manitoba they have contributed to swell the poultry show.

WERE REFUSED EXEMPTION

Request of St. Peter's T.A.S. Not Acceded to by City Council--Vote Was 6 to 5--Messrs. J. H. Burnham and D. O'Connell Addressed Council on Subject.

The last meeting this year of the City Council was held last night, when a full board was in attendance with the exception of Ald. Turner, who is away in Western Canada on leave of absence. The council had a busy session, the biggest and most delicate matter of the evening being the question of granting exemption to the St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society.

The council was addressed by Mr. J. H. Burnham, who, on behalf of the Knights of Pythias, Sons of England, Oddfellows and Orangemen, opposed the granting of the exemption unless the societies he represented were favored in a like manner. He didn't approve of the exemption policy at all, however.

Mr. D. O'Connell spoke on behalf of the T.A.S. The society was doing an admirable work, and, he said, deserved the same material encouragement which had been extended the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., two associations which were also doing a highly creditable work in the community.

Some of the aldermen aired their views on the subject, and when the vote was taken the request for exemption was found to have been given the minority support and therefore could not be granted.

The aldermen voted on the matter as follows:—

Against granting assessment—Duncan, Morgan, Bradburn, Metheral, Batten, Graham.

For granting exemption—Duffus, Buller, Gillespie, Phelan, Hicks.

There was one of the largest audiences of spectators that ever attended meeting of the City Council present to hear the discussion.

Mr. Burnham was the first to address the council. He had been retained by several well known societies he said, which had certain questions which agitated them. They wanted to be fair minded in the matter, and did not wish anything that was not absolutely fair. He condemned the city's misdirected granting of exemption in the past, and thought it was a thing that should be voted upon by those most affected—the ratepayers.

The T.A.S. had asked that they be exempted, probably on the ground that the YWCA and YMCA had been granted exemption.

Mr. Burnham said that the general feeling of the ratepayers as far as he could find out, was that exemption should be done away with. It was objected to on principle. But if it was thought that exemption was desirable for any societies in the city the societies he represented should be included in the list.

Mr. D. O'Connell, representing St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society, spoke on behalf of that body, and asked that exemption be granted. For ten years this indulgence has been given. Never before had it been protested. They were now asking that their fine new quarters be exempted in accordance with the privilege of the past.

He thought when he came here there would be no exception taken to a reasonable request. It had been the constant practice to grant exemption for all large industrial concerns. The principle of exemption had been spoken against by the previous speaker, but he upheld it, giving reasons of local application for maintaining this view.

Mr. O'Connell thought the protestation of principle was too transparent a cloak for the agitators against the T.A.S. exemption request. He suggested that there were other and unworthy motives. There wasn't a body in the city to-day that was doing a greater work in the interests of high citizenship than St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society. The C. M. B. A., Knights of Columbus and other Catholic societies, had no claim on the city, nor did they ask it. They were purely fraternal societies.

Ald. Hicks believed the T.A.S. was doing a good work. He thought that in all fairness that if the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. were exempted the T.A.S. should be exempted also.

Ald. Phelan supported the exemption.

Ald. Metheral said he was opposed to exemption on general grounds. If exemptions were granted the burden fell on the poor man and the tax rate was too high as it was. He would tax the YWCA and the YMCA also. Ald. Metheral spoke at some length and aroused considerable applause.

Ald. Batten supported Ald. Metheral's views, and said he had always opposed exemption.

The vote was then asked for by the mayor.

NEW YORK UNGRATEFUL

New York, Dec. 5.—Oscar Hammerstein, the opera impressario, is going to quite the country for good, and will leave in January for England, where he expects to open his opera house. Mr. Hammerstein said:

"My business is opera. I can do nothing else. I must produce opera. Since New York does not want me, as the men who could have made it possible for me to remain showed in the past few years, I will go to London, where I believe I can do well.

"After forty years in New York I am going. After realizing my ambition and giving opera here as it was never given before and then being forced to give up my work, I shall go. Yes, I will sell my theatres if the offers I receive are sufficiently large. And I shall live in London. That is all."

Gorham Sentenced to Die.

Peterboro, Dec. 6.—Chancelor Sir John Boyd, who at the recent Assizes tried James Gorham, who was found guilty of the murder of his mother, arrived in the city at noon yesterday to pass the sentence deferred at the time of the trial. The formal sentence of death was pronounced, to be executed January 31.

The condemned man took the sentence unconcerned and smiling. In pronouncing sentence Sir John said he had hoped that the Department of Justice would have interfered in mitigation of the punishment the verdict called for, but it was not the policy of the Government to take any action preceding formal pronunciation of sentence.

WHO KNOCKED CANADA AND STAMPEDED INCOMING CAPITAL?

Member for Jacques Cartier Says Signs Point to Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick as Man Who Advised Company That Land Values In West Are Insecure—Sir Wilfrid and Fitzpatrick Deny It.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Two incidents of outstanding interest occurred in the House of Commons yesterday. The first was the Government's answer to questions propounded by Dr. Sproule and Col. Sam Hughes, the former on the "homages" proferred by Mr. Justice Girouard, as administrator of Canada, to Cardinal Vannutelli, and the latter on the appearance of a guard of honor of His Majesty's troops, subsequently the parade of the 65th Regiment of Montreal, and the presence of Speaker Marcil during the recent Eucharistic Congress. While the answers of the Government were categorical, it is stated that the matter is not to be allowed to rest, and further action is to be determined upon.

With regard to the word "homages," Sir Wilfri dexplained that this, in the plural, was translated "respects" in English.

The second incident occurred when F. D. Monk moved for copies of certain correspondence relating to the Netherlands Land Co., which proposed to do business in western Canada, and later withdrew. W. T. R. Preston, trade commissioner, gave as the reason that certain adverse comment was made regarding land values, which stifled the project, and the person implicated in giving the derogatory information, he declared, seemed to be Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick.

Mr. Monk will examine the correspondence before pressing for a committee of enquiry; meanwhile Mr. Preston will likely be called upon to explain.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that, but for a certain thing that recently had transpired, he would have felt diffident about complying with Mr. Monk's request. Enquiry had already been made of Mr. Preston with the idea that it might be shown that some one connected with the Government was concerned. In the reply received it was shown that a private citizen had caused the trouble.

Sir Wilfrid then read a letter recently received from Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, stating that he had both informed that he had been mentioned by Mr. Preston as the person who had given the adverse advice. He declared this to be absolutely without foundation in fact, and asked Sir Wilfrid to facilitate a full enquiry.

Mr. Monk would doubtless agree that the denial ought to be accepted, said Sir Wilfrid, and Mr. Monk remarked that he had no idea that Sir Charles Fitzpatrick's name had been so mentioned. He thought it was doubly important to have the committee proceed in order to exonerate the Chief Justice, and, if Mr. Preston's statement was not well founded, to bring that fact out.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier reiterated that the denial should be accepted, and that it would be inadviasble to investigate the possible action of some private citizen. For that reason he would ask Mr. Monk to allow his motion calling for a committee to drop.

After some discusison, during the course of which R. L. Borden said that the statement of the Chief Justice should be accepted, Mr. Monk agreed to the Premier's request, stipulating, however, that it could be renewed if he so desired.

In the House yesterday, answering W. D. Staples (Manitoba) Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that he had given utterance to the following, or similar words at Winnipeg, on July 19 last. "You have been told that I was an enemy of Manitoba. You have been told that I don't want to give justice to you. I have written to Mr. Roblin, and I repeat here, let him come to Ottawa, where he can discuss with me what is fair and just, and see if we can agree upon what is proper, either in land or in money for the increased territory of Manitoba. What more can we do? If the Province of Manitoba continues to be on the map, a postage stamp, the fault will not be mine, the fault will be his."

The Premier read correspondence which had passed between himself and the Premier of Manitoba regarding the question of the extension of the boundaries of that province.

"There was," said Sir Wilfrid, "an interview between the Premier of Manitoba and myself on Nov. 25. At that interview I suggested to the Premier of Manitoba, that, as the question to be settled, according to the resolution of July 13, 1908, was the financial terms to be granted to the province, it would not be advisable to discuss the same then and there on account of the absence of the Minister of Finance, but that negotiations would be resumed after the latter's return to Ottawa."

Further questions were asked by Mr. Staples as to who was to blame for the present condition of affairs. Sir Wilfrid replied: "If the Province of Manitoba still continues to be a postage stamp on the map, the blame is not with the present Federal Government. The Prime Minister is prepared to discuss with the Government of Manitoba the terms of the boundary extension upon the lines adopted by this House on July 13, 1908."

In the afternoon A. B. Warburton (P.E.I.), in moving for an order of the House for copies of all correspondence, reports, surveys, etc., relating to the oyster industry of Canada and barren bottoms suitable for oyster culture, took some time to point out to the House that a gradual depletion of this industry was taking place in Eastern Canada, largely due to neglect. He suggested that the Government make an arrangement with the Maritime Provinces to acquire the land, as it already owned the water, where the oyster beds were to be found and grant a title, conditional upon the beds being properly worked. He proposed to make the provinces interested parties, by granting compensation by way of a royalty.

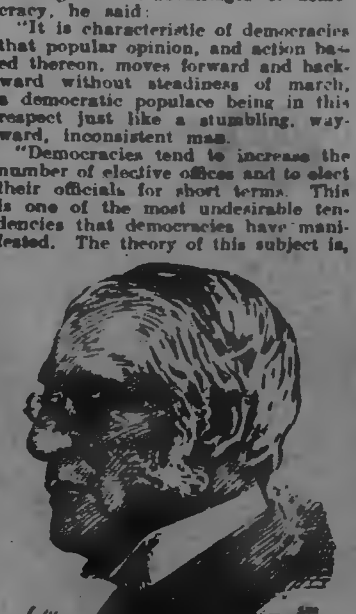
ELIOT ON DEMOCRACY

He Says It Will Be the Death Blow of Wars.

Toronto, Dec. 6.—Dr. C. W. Eliot, until recently president of Harvard University, made a profound impression on the Canadian Club yesterday, when one of the largest attendances was registered. He spoke on "Democratic Tendencies—Safe and Unsafe," and afterwards, in reply to questions, enlarged on the advantages of civic government by commission. Discussing the disadvantages of democracy, he said:

"It is characteristic of democracies that popular opinion, and action based thereon, moves forward and backward without steadiness of march, a democratic populace being in this respect just like a stumbling, wayward, inconsistent man.

"Democracies tend to increase the number of elective offices and to elect their officials for short terms. This is one of the most undesirable tendencies that democracies have manifested. The theory of this subject is, that the people really part with their power to a few professional political managers, of whom the most intelligent are themselves office-holders."



PRESIDENT ELIOT.

The hopeful and wholesome tendencies of democracy were next dwelt upon. Democracy recognizes no fixed permanent code. No single authority out of the past prevents progress in a Christian state as the fixed and unalterable authority of the Koran, obstructed progress in Islam.

Democracies spent more money on education of all kinds, elementary and advanced, cultured and utilitarian, liberal and technical, linguistic, historical and scientific.

"The progress of democracy has already made dynastic war impossible, and bids fair soon to prevent wars between Christian nations for the conquest of territory.

"In the future the well-grounded conviction that in their blood and their labor the masses pay the terrible cost of war is likely to exercise a calming influence in times of popular excitement. It is only the burden of past wars and of preparations for new ones which to-day prevents the liberal expenditure of public money for the direct promotion of human welfare on a great scale," he concluded.

OLD COUNTRY SHIPMENTS ARE LIGHT THIS YEAR

For the information of any who intend sending letters or parcels by mail to the Old Country, The Review was informed to-day that all such must be in the local office not later than December 12th, in order to catch the last steamer leaving St. Johns

All parcels going by express should be in the local express offices not later than to-morrow morning. The number of shipments for the old land this year is not nearly so large this year as in past years.

CRIPPLED BY RHEUMATISM

Gentleman in Vancouver Owes His Recovery

TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 1st, 1910.

I am well acquainted with a man, known to thousands in Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster, who for nearly a year was practically a cripple from rheumatism. He was so troubled with the disease that he found it difficult to even turn over in bed. His heart appeared so weak that he could hardly get upstairs. Last June, he received a sample of "Fruit-a-tives." He used them and dates his recovery from that time. To-day there is no other man in Vancouver enjoying better health. He was building a house this fall and shingled a good part of the roof in a driving rain storm without suffering any bad effects.

LATE

Salutary rules sometimes cause unintentional suffering.

A little girl ran along a street, carrying a bundle in his arms. She was tired—almost exhausted. Her small and wearied limbs were not able to carry her swiftly, but forced by fear, she was making a valiant effort to hurry. Her face showed distress, and tears coursed down her cheeks. She drew the cold air into her lungs in gasps and expelled it with sobs. The throbbing of her little heart could almost be heard.

She was not pursued. She was going to school and it was one minute after nine.

DISCREDITABLE TACTICS

It is charged that Mr. Borden approved of the Nationalist campaign in Drummond and Arthabaska by silence. Mr. Borden is not given to withholding his views on the questions of the day, and has made clear his opinion that there should not be a series of dissociated navies within the Empire, but that all should be, when the necessity arose, subject to one central control so that they might be most effectively used for the benefit of all.

Who, however, are responsible for the worst forms of the appeals to the electorate made by the Nationalists? One of the pictures which they used and which the Minister of Marine said was criminal and shameful, represented a French-Canadian holding up the British flag with both hands while John Bull, who had undertaken to hold his coat, was rifling his pockets. Can it be said that this cartoon was not shameful and criminal? The verdict the Minister now pronounces upon it is the correct one. But this same cartoon was first published in a Liberal organ, and the "shameful and criminal" appeal was made by Liberals to injure the Conservatives. The setting of the people of one part of Canada against another, the arousing of race jealousies and passions, the fomenting of discord, was done by the Liberals, and the Nationalists, in adopting the tactics which the Liberals pursued, made use of the same weapons, even to the very pictures which the Liberals had scattered through the Province before. Mr. Brodeur mainly attempted to connect the Conservatives with this cartoon by saying that it had been used by "the Nationalists or Conservatives," and his attempt was all the worse because it was his own party that was entirely responsible for its production.

And this was not the only trick that has been tried by the same Minister. He urged Mr. Blondin—and the charge has been repeated in Liberal papers throughout the country—with having expressed disloyal sentiments, and quoted words which he said were reported in Le Devoir as having been used by Mr. Blondin. At once Mr. Blondin denied having used the language attributed to him, and when the matter was looked into it was found that he had not been so reported in the paper from which Mr. Brodeur had professed to quote, but that the words were from a report in a Liberal paper, and which had apparently been prepared for the purpose of misrepresenting Mr. Blondin in the other Provinces.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier likes to pose at times as a unifier of Canada, but he had no words of rebuke for his active supporters who attacked Sir Charles Tupper for being too much attached to Britain and who published the shameful picture which has since been used by the Nationalists and made other similar appeals. Not only did he not rebuke them, although these discreditable tactics were adopted by members of his party for his political benefit, but he reaped and enjoys the benefits of their inflammatory appeals.

A GREAT ACHIEVEMENT

After endless nagging at the Ontario Government in connection with its power policy, the Liberals are forced by events to acknowledge that it is a success and that it has been pushed to a successful issue speedily. The Globe says:

"Hon. Adam Beck announces that before the end of this month the entire 290 miles of Hydro-electric pole line carrying Niagara energy at a voltage of 110,000 volts to all the chief centres of Ontario west of and including Toronto, will be completed and in operation. The installation is one of the greatest in the world—probably the greatest. Apart entirely from politics, Mr. Beck deserves the thanks of the people of Ontario for plugging away at the great task with which his name will always be associated. There have been features of the working out of the project with which the Globe has not been able to agree, but the end itself is one that no person having the best interests of the people of this Province at heart could fail to support. For all time the work of turning factory wheels and lighting cities and towns and operating street and suburban car services, formerly performed by power produced from imported coal, will be done by Ontario's own inexhaustible white coal. To compass that end in a few years is a great achievement."

It will be recalled that when the Conservatives were in opposition the people were asked to believe that there were no men on that side of the House who could fill the positions of Ministers, but since these men have been given the opportunity they have shown a capacity for careful administration and constructive legislation that has delighted the country and has called out acknowledgements even from those who had tried to belittle them.

KEENE NEWS

Special to The Review.

Keene, Dec. 5.—It is the intention of Mr. and Mrs. John McFarline to spend Christmas at the home of Mr John Boyle, of Lanark.

Miss Mabel McCann, who is graduating for a nurse in Toronto, is home for a visit, looking hale and hearty.

Rev W. D. Harrison of Warkworth, is to occupy the pulpit of the Keene Methodist church next Sunday.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. Thomas Taylor had the misfortune to break his leg while engaged in dehorning cattle with a neighbor.

Miss Gill was in Peterborough Saturday on business.

Mr. Andrew Rennie was in the city on Saturday visiting a friend.

Mr. John Hore, who has been in the west for the summer, returned home on Saturday last. He reports crops not so good as a year ago.

It is with feelings of regret that we chronicle the demise of Mary Short, daughter of the late Richard Short, who expired on Thursday at Lang, at the age of 71 years and 10 months. The remains of the deceased were followed to the Pine Grove cemetery on Saturday afternoon by a large concourse of neighbors and sorrowing relatives. One brother and two sisters survive her, Richard, in Keene, and Maggie and Bella of Lang. We sympathize with the bereaved family and trust that their loss is her gain.

Our enterprising merchant, Mr. Robert Campbell, shipped a carload of fowl on Wednesday last. Mr. Campbell is a hustler and is worthy of the patronage of the public, as he always pays the highest price for everything which he buys.

Mr. Wm. Danton is carrying a broad smile at present. It's a boy.

Mr. Ralph Godfrey is also smiling over the honor of being a papa. It's a boy also.

The meeting of Argyle L.O.L. No 494, announced in last week's issue to be held on Wednesday, the 14th, has been postponed until Thursday evening, the 15th, in favor of the Farmers' Institute meeting, which is to be held on the 14th. The members are requested to take note of the change.

We have splendid sleighing here at present, but very cold weather. Some reported on Monday morning that the mercury went as low as twelve below zero. Perhaps they exaggerated it a little, but it certainly was very cold.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DINING CARS

The volume of business which has offered on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway since their passenger service was put into effect last July, has necessitated the early increase of equipment, and the Canada Car Co. have turned out for the Grand Trunk Pacific three new dining cars, which are models of elegance and beauty.

The exterior length of the car is 82 feet, and the length of the dining room 32 feet 6 inches, the balance of the interior of the car being taken up by the modern kitchen, refrigerators and pantry. They are mounted on standard six wheel trucks. The platforms are of steel and the vestibule of the Pullman type. They are equipped with high speed quick action Westinghouse air brakes. The interior of the car is finished in plain and figured mahogany, with a harmony of colors that is pleasing to the eye. The cars are heated by steam, and lighted with electric light.

The dining room accommodates 30 people at one sitting. The floors are covered with handsome carpets of an exclusive design, and with a pattern conforming to the general color scheme of the interior. These cars are equipped with all the improvements and safety appliances that are known to modern skill and are the handsomest dining cars that have been turned out from Canadian shops.

They will leave for the west in a day or two, and will be objects of interest as well as supplying comfort to western travellers, and will be an addition to the already well known service that is being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific in Western Canada.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Dec. 5.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 147 carloads, consisting of 2549 cattle, 234 hogs, 2263 sheep and lambs and 23 calves.

Exporters.

Maybee & Wilson bought 101 export cattle on order, 1250 to 1300 lbs. each, at $5.80 to $6.10. This firm will be buyers of export cattle next week.

Butchers.

The best butchers' cattle were firm to 10c higher than last week, that is a few picked lots, good enough for the Xmas trade, which sold up to $6 per cwt., which was higher than the bulk of the export cattle sold at. Prime picked lots of butchers sold at $5.75 to $6 but we only heard of 8 cattle that brought $6 for butcher purposes, and they were bought by Alexander Levack; loads of good, $5.40 to $5.70; medium, $5.10 to $5.30; common, $4 to $5, and two or three lots sold under $4; cows, $4 to $4.75; canners, $1.75 to $2.50.

Stockers and Feeders.

Coughlin & Co. sold one load of short-keep feeders, 1030 lbs. each, at $5.45. Good straight feeders sold from $4.75 to $5.25; stockers, $4 to $4.60.

Milkers and Springers.

The highest price paid to-day was $75, which was for a cow that would have brought $85 not long ago, which shows that the keen edge is somewhat off, on the milker and springer market to-day. Fred Rowntree bought all on sale at $50 to $75, and only two brought the latter price.

Veal Calves.

Deliveries were light, only 25, and these sold at firm prices, from $3.50 to $[illegible], and two or three extra quality sold at $8.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

There was a serious break on the sheep and lamb market to-day, as will be seen by the quotations given and the various sales made by the commission salesmen. Wesley Dunn quoted sheep, ewes, at $4 to $4.40; rams, $3 to $3.25; lambs, $5.25 to $5.40.

Hogs.

W. J. Johnston, buyer for Gunns, quoted hogs, 25c per cwt. lower, as follows: Selects, fed and watered, at the market, $6.75 and $6.40 to drovers for hogs, f.o.b., cars at country points.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 5.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market receipts last week were 2200 cattle, 1250 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 300 calves. Supplies this morning were 1400 cattle, 900 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 200 calves. Cattle prices show an advance of 10c per cwt., somewhat a surprise to the trade, as offerings were even larger than last week, notwithstanding fewer receipts of northwest ranchers. There was a good demand from local buyers on account of favorable weather. A few picked steers sold as high as $5.90, but the bulk in choice stock was done at $5.65 to $5.75, good at $5.25 to $5.50, fairly good at $4.75 to $5; fair at $4.25 to $4.50, and common at $3.50 to $4. Supplies were fair, with good demand from packers and the ruling price for selected lots was $7.15 per cwt., weighed off cars. There is still a feeling that prices will come lower, owing to recent weakness in foreign markets for bacon and supplies in the country are large. The tone of the market for sheep and lambs was stronger and prices for the former show an advance of 25c and the latter 10c to 25c per cwt., as compared with a week ago. The demand was good, with sales of sheep at $4.25 to $4.50 and lambs at $6.25 to $6.35. Demand for calves was good and offerings small. Prices were strong at 5½c to 7c for choice stock and at 3½c to 5c per lb. for good live weight.

New York Live Stock.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—Beeves—Receipts, 3885; steers steady to 10c higher; bulls and cows steady; steers, $5 to $6.90; bulls, $3.50 to $5.65; cows, $2.25 to $4.60; tail-ends, $2.

Calves—Receipts, 1580; veals steady to 25c higher; western steady; veals, $7 to $11; culls, $4.50 to $6.50; western, $4.50 to $7; barnyard and fed calves, $4 to $5.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 12,739; sheep steady, at $2.50 to $4.00; culls, $2 to $2.25; lambs 10c to 25c lower, at $5.25 to $6.80; culls, $4.25 to $5; yearlings, $4.50 to $5.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Cattle—Receipts, 32,000; market slow and weak; beeves, $4.40 to $7.40; Texas steers, $4.25 to $5.40; western steers, $4.30 to $6.25; stockers and feeders, $3.25 to $5.75; cows and heifers, $2.10 to $6.15; calves, $7 to $9.

"She'll collide!" some one shrieked.

But the tug swerved and turned on a long diagonal across the end of the bar.

Marsh had chosen his moment with exactitude. He had taken advantage of the brief lull of jumbled seas after the "three largest waves" had swept by. Yet in shallow water and with the strong inshore set, even that lull was all too short. The Sprite was staggered by the breakers; her speed was checked; her stern was dragged around. She tore herself from the grasp of the current. Enveloped in a blinding hail of spray, she struggled desperately to extricate herself before the resumption of the larger seas should roll her over to destruction. Already these larger seas were racing in from the open.

Far out in the lake against the tumbling horizon Carroll saw heave up for a second the shoulder of a mighty wave. And instinctively she perceived this wave as a deadly enemy of the little tug and saw it bending all its great energies to hurrying in on time to catch the victim before it could escape. Her whole being was concentrated in a continually shifting calculation of the respective distances between the tug and the piers, the tug and the relentlessly advancing wave.

"Oh, go!" she exhorted the Sprite under her breath.

Huge and towering, the wave came on now calmly and deliberately. The Sprite was off the end of the pier when the wave lifted her, just in the position her enemy would have selected to crush her life out against the cribs. Slowly the tug rose against its shoulder, was lifted onward, poised, and then with a swift forward thrust the wave broke, smothering the pier and lighthouse beneath tons of water.

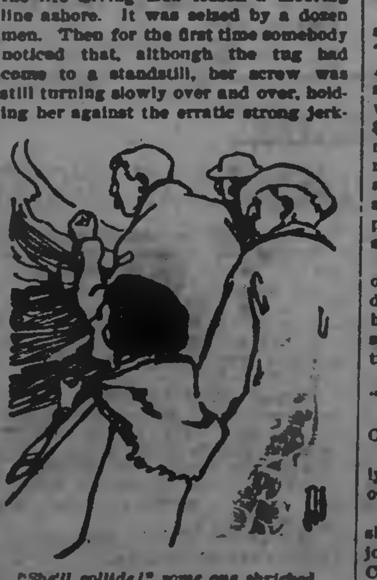
A low, agonized wail broke from the crowd. And then—and then—over beyond the pier they saw gliding a battered black stack from which still poured defiantly clouds of gray smoke.

The Sprite was safe.

"I wonder if she got the line aboard," speculated the tugboat captain at last.

The crowd surged over to the piers again. Below them rose and fell the Sprite. All the fancy scrollwork of her upper works, the cornice of her deck house, the light rigging of her cabin, had disappeared. The tall smokestack was bent awry.

At sight of Marsh the crowd set up a yell. He paid no attention. One of the life saving men tossed a mooring line ashore. It was seized by a dozen men. Then for the first time somebody noticed that, although the tug had come to a standstill, her screw was still turning slowly over and over, holding her against the erratic strong jerking of a slender rope that ran through her stern chocks and into the water.



"She'll collide!" some one shrieked.

"He got it aboard!" yelled the man, pointing.

Another cheer broke out.

The life saving crew took charge. It was necessary to pass the line around the end of the pier and back to the beach. This was a dangerous job and one requiring considerable power and ingenuity, for the strain on the line imposed by the waters was terrific, and the breaking seas rendered work on the piers extremely hazardous.

A number of the curious lingered about the Sprite. Marsh and Orde were in consultation over the smashed stern. Harvey leaned out his little square door.

"No," he answered a query. "I wasn't what you all would call scairt—that is, not really scairt—jess a little ne'vous. All I had to do was to feed her slabs and listen foh my bell. You see, cap'n Ma'sh he was in charge."

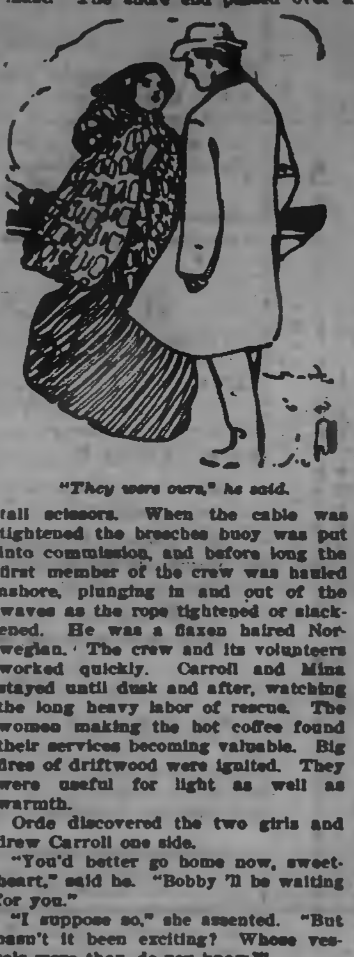
"No, sir," Captain Marsh was saying emphatically to his employer. "I can't figure it out except on one thing. You see, it's stove from underneath. A sea would have smashed it from above. That last sea must 've lifted us bodily right over the corner of the pier."

"Well, maybe," assented Orde doubtfully.

"Sure thing," repeated Marsh, with conviction.

"Well, you'd better not tell 'em so unless you want to rank in with old man Ananias," ended Orde.

The wild and picturesque work of rescue was under way. The line had been successfully brought to the left of the lighthouse. To it had been attached the rope and to that the heavy cable. These the crew of the schooner had dragged out and made fast to a mast. The shore end passed over a tall scissors. When the cable was tightened the breeches buoy was put into commission, and before long the first member of the crew was hauled ashore, plunging in and out of the waves as the rope tightened or slackened. He was a flaxen haired Norwegian. The crew and its volunteers worked quickly. Carroll and Mina stayed until dusk and after, watching the long heavy labor of rescue. The women making the hot coffee found their services becoming valuable. Big fires of driftwood were ignited. They were useful for light as well as warmth.



"They were ours," he said.

Orde discovered the two girls and drew Carroll one side.

"You'd better go home now, sweetheart," said he. "Bobby 'll be waiting for you."

"I suppose so," she assented. "But hasn't it been exciting? Whose vessels were they, do you know?"

Orde glanced at her strangely.

"They were ours," said he.

Chapter 31

ORDE mounted the office stairs next day with a very heavy step. The loss of the North Star and of the two schooners meant a great deal to him at that time.

"I can't understand why Floyd started," said Orde. "He ought to know better than to face sure prospects of a fall blow. I'll tan his soul for that, all right."

"I'm partly responsible," said Newmark.

"You!" cried Orde.

"Yes. You see that Smith & Mabley shipment was important enough to strain a point for—and it's only twenty-four hours or so—and it certainly didn't look as if it were going to blow. Poor Floyd feels bad enough."

Orde began to appreciate his circumstances. The loss on the cargo of "uppers" represented $20,000 in money. As for the North Star and her consorts, save for the insurance, they were simply eliminated. The loss of $60,000 or so on them, however, did not mean a diminution of the company's present cash resources to that amount and so did not immediately affect Orde's calculations as to the payment of the notes which were now soon to come due.

Orde disappeared for a week, his organizing abilities claimed for the distribution of the road crews. When he returned to the office Newmark showed him contracts for the construction of three new vessels.

"I get them for $55,000," said he, "with $30,000 of it on long time."

"Without consulting me!" cried Orde.

Newmark explained that he had really been taking advantage of a lucky opportunity.

"Otherwise," he finished, "we shouldn't have been able to get the job done for another year. If that big Cronin contract goes through—well, you know what that would mean in the shipyards—nobody would get even a look in. And McLeod is willing to give us a price to keep his men busy. So, you see, I had to close at once."

"It's a good chance, all right," admitted Orde, "but it never occurred to me we'd build any more vessels until we'd recovered a little."

"Recovered," Newmark repeated coldly. "I don't see what 'recovered' has to do with it. If the mill burned down we'd rebuild, wouldn't we? And as we're making $15,000 a year out of our freighting it seems to me too good a business to let slip into other hands."

"I suppose so," agreed Orde.

"Therefore I had to act without you," Newmark finished.

"Of course," agreed Orde drearily.

"Joe," replied Orde, "I—I don't think I'll stay downtown this morning. I"—

Newmark glanced up keenly.

"You don't look well," said he; "kind of pale around the gills; bilious."

Orde closed his desk and went out.

Newmark turned back to his papers. From an inner pocket he produced a cigar. The corners of his mouth slowly curved in a grim smile.

Orde immediately set into motion the machinery of banking to borrow on the California timber. Taylor took charge of this, as the only man in Monrovia who had Orde's confidence. At the end of a necessary delay Orde received notice that the west had been heard from. He stepped across the hall to the lawyer's office.

"Well, Frank," said he, "glad we managed to push it through with so little trouble."

Taylor arose, shut carefully the door into his outer office, walked to the window, looked contemplatively out upon the hotel back yard and returned to his desk.

"But there is trouble," said he curtly.

"What's the matter?" asked Orde.

"The banks refuse the loan."

Orde stared at him in blank astonishment.

"What grounds can they possibly have for that?"

"It's about the title."

"But I thought you went over the title."

"I did," stated Taylor emphatically, "and I'll stake my reputation as a lawyer that everything is straight and clear from the land office itself. I've wired for an explanation, and we ought surely to know something definite by tomorrow."

For the first time in his business career a real anxiety gnawed Orde's vitals. He had been in many tight places, but somehow heretofore success or failure had seemed to him about immaterial, like points gained or conceded in the game. Now the game itself was at issue. Property, reputation and the family's future were at stake. Therefore he awaited further news with the greatest impatience.

The message came the following day.

"Land office under investigation." Orde read. "Fraudulent entries suspected."

Taylor glanced up at Orde with commiseration.

"They simply won't lend money on an uncertainty," said he.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleriver, Que.—"Without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I would not be alive. For five months I had painful and irregular periods and inflammation of the uterus. I suffered like a martyr and thought often of death. I consulted two doctors who could do nothing for me. I went to a hospital, and the best doctors said I must submit to an operation, because I had a tumor. I went back home much discouraged. One of my cousins advised me to take your Compound, as it had cured her. I did so and soon commenced to feel better, and my appetite came back with the first bottle. Now I feel no pain and am cured. Your remedy is deserving of praise."—Mrs. EMMA CHATEL, Valleyfield, Belleriver, Quebec.

Another Operation Avoided.

Adrian, Ga.—"I suffered untold misery from female troubles, and my doctor said an operation was my only chance, and I dreaded it almost as much as death. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me without an operation."—LENA V. HENRY, R.F.D. 3.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases.

THE POSTMASTER JOINS THE ARMY

Who Are Shouting the Praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills in the West.

A Neighbor Advised Him to Take them for His Rheumatism and Gravel. They Cured Him

West Gravelbourg, Sask., Dec. 5.—(Special)—Alexander McCarter, the postmaster here, has joined the great western army that has for its watchword, "When ailing, use Dodd's Kidney Pills." And, like others, he has good and sufficient reasons.

"I was laid up with Rheumatism and Gravel," Mr. McCarter states, "and was also troubled with my bladder. I was so bad I could not do much work. A neighbor came along who had been troubled the same way, and advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I did it. I bought two boxes, and, using them according to directions, was soon able to go to work."

Notice one thing; It was a neighbor who had been troubled the same way who advised the postmaster to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. He also had been cured by them. That's why he recommended them.

If you're troubled with Kidney Disease in any form—Backache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Gravel, Dropsy, Diabetes, or Bright's Disease—ask your neighbors. You'll soon find one who has been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

A golf and country club will be formed at Guelph.

Schools for Baroda.

A small, dark man, accompanied by two beautiful women in eastern dress and with a train of olive-skinned dependents, landed in England the other day. No one who saw him land or who watched his pleasant, modest demeanor on board during the voyage from America would have guessed that he was the ruler over 2,000,000 people, the richest, one of the most enlightened, and one of the most powerful of the princes of the native states of India. The Gaekwar of Baroda is a great admirer of English institutions. He has been especially struck with the quiet, friendly charm of its country life. "One object of my journey," he said, "is to add to my knowledge of educational methods and ideals. Baroda is the only state in India where schools are free and compulsory. I established them because I am sure that it is useless to expect any real progress among the Indian people until they are less ignorant."

A Singular Request.

A peculiar fate is said to overhang the family of the late Sir Julian Goldsmid. An ancestor of his, so says the legend, once gave shelter to a rabbi, who at his death left to him a bequest of a mysterious box which was on no account to be opened until after the customary seven days of mourning. If opened before that time a curse would fall upon the family. Curiosity got the better of superstition, and the box was opened before the seven days were up. In it was found a document which said that as the injunction of the rabbi had not been heeded no future owner of the estate would be succeeded by a son. And such, strangely enough, has been the case ever since.

Cheetahs Train For the Hunt.

Trained cheetahs are used in Persia and India in much the same manner that hounds are used in European and North American countries. The game they are used to hunt is principally deer and antelope. The cheetah is an animal with black and brown spots resembling a leopard, but longer in body and limb. The Indian princes keep packs of them for the hunt. The heads of the hunting cheetahs are usually covered with a hood until within 200 yards of the game. The hoods are then removed, and the animals creep stealthily toward the herd and, having approached as near as possible, pounce upon their prey, killing with one blow of the paw.

Proof that the sugar trust is keeping prices down because of fear of the German refineries was placed in the hands of the federal prosecutor.

GIRL ASSAULTED BY DRUNKEN MAN

Struck Her in the Face and Tore Her Clothes—Ruffian is Known and Police Court Case May Follow.

A young girl residing in the west part of the city, was the victim of an assault last night between eight and nine o'clock, on Stewart street north, and the drunken ruffian, who illused the girl, will be extremely fortunate if he is not called to appear in the police court to answer for his cowardly actions.

It appears the girl in question with a companion, were accosted on Edinburgh street by two men, one of whom swore at her and knocked off her hat, also tearing her coat.

She ran down Aylmer street, with the man pursuing. After being caught both returned up the hill, and finally arrived on Bethune street, the man using force.

Here the girl became greatly alarmed, and her cries of help and murder brought a young man from his home, and he demanded that the man release the girl. He refused at first, but later she was taken into a nearby house, and a cab telephoned for. For about an hour the man remained outside the house, walking up and down the sidewalk. When a cab from Gibbs' livery, and driven by Mr. Ernie Lawrence arrived, and left again with the girl, her assaulter followed for some distance and then gave up the chase.

An eye witness of the affair states that the fellow struck the girl on the face, and that her coat and hat were damaged. He is known and action may be taken against him.

FARMERS OBJECT TO SEWAGE POLLUTION OF OTONABEE

A deputation headed by the Reeve of South Monaghan formed a joint committee representing South Monaghan, North Monaghan, and Otonabee in regard to the sewage pollution of the Otonabee River by city sewage.

The Reeve spoke first and urged that the city take action to have the trouble remedied as it was a serious nuisance to the farmers affected.

He realized that the disposal of the sewage in the manner employed was made legal by a court decision in 1895, but Peterborough had grown greatly since then.

Mr. Deyell of South Monaghan said he had last four head of horses as a result of the grass being contaminated with a poison, so the veterinary surgeon told him. He thought that the sewage in the river was responsible for this poisoning of the grass where it had been flooded in the spring.

He would like to see the Council hand in an early report, as the Councils of the Townships effected had to report to the Provincial Board of Health on the matter.

The mayor assured the deputation that the problem would receive prompt and full consideration.

It was suggested by the deputation that the sewage be treated by septic tank or some other means, before it was disposed of in the river.

THE WOLF

In "THE WOLF," the New York Lyric Theatre success, which will be presented by the Paul Gilmore Co., at the Grand, matinee and night, Dec. 10, we are taken to the Canadian northwest. An American engineer has designs on the daughter of an old Scotch settler. The latter, McTavish by name, hates his daughter, Hilda, because he believes her mother was untrue to him. He welcomes the suggestion that MacDonald, the engineer, take the girl away to New York, where she will be cared for by McDonald's mother. But in the way of the scheme is Jules Beaubien. Years before the play begins, Beaubien's half-sister, Annette, was betrayed by a man. By a chain of circumstances, Beaubien discovers that MacDonald is the man who did the wrong. Beaubien is in love with Hilda, who returns his love. She violently refuses to go with MacDonald despite her father's commands. Beaubien denounces MacDonald as the betrayer of his sister. Beaubien elopes with the girl but is overtaken by MacDonald in a gloomy but picturesque glen—MacDonald creeping from the narrow path, fires on his adversary, who falls and pretends to have been killed. Then follows one of the most realistic duels ever seen on the stage. Edward Sloman, cast for the handsome half-breed, Jules, and is said to play the role, which demands an exhibition of honest manliness, to perfection.

CHARGE OF SELLING LIQUOR TO A MINOR

To Magistrate Dumble, this morning, a local bartender pleaded not guilty to a charge of selling liquor to a minor.

A witness subpoenaed by the chief was not present, and after the youth, to whom the liquor was served, gave evidence, the case was enlarged till to-morrow morning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defendant.

The youth stated in the witness box that he and a companion were supplied with eight or nine glasses of lager by the defendant.

He himself was seventeen years of age last February, and his companion younger.

"Did he ask you your age," asked the chief.

"Never heard him," replied witness.

"Did you tell him," the magistrate asked. No.

"Did the bartender ask the age of your companion—Yes.

"What did he answer," I didn't hear.

Witness said he had not been in the habit of getting liquor out of the hotel.

To Mr. Gordon, witness replied that he had been taken by persons to be twentyone or over, and added that they were fooling.

Counsel asked that witness be allowed to put on his hat in the box, to show that he looked older than his age.

He was standing on a cuspidor at the time put in the defendants

LUXURY LOVING ROME DESCRIBED LAST NIGHT

In the T. A. S. St. Alphonsus Lyceum last evening, a most instructive and entertaining lecture was delivered by Rev. Dr. O'Brien, rector of the Church of Sacred Heart on "Pagan and Christian Monuments in Rome."

The lecture was profusely illustrated and made more real by stereoptican slides, operated by Mr. H. O. Fiske.

The historic places of ancient Rome, the beautiful architecture of the famous structures which are now crumbling to ruins, were all shown and described.

Such spots as the famous Forum, the Appian Way, the Arcade the palaces of the Emperors, the famous Amphiteatre and the Catacombs, made notable by their past historical connections, were thrown on the canvas and explained in a lucid manner. "Rome" said the lecturer, was unhabited by a luxury loving people, who finally degenerated into an iniquitous and sensual minded race, eventually leading to its downfall.

Several musical numbers were also contributed. Miss Gertrude Clancy and Miss Verna Devlin each gave a vocal solo in good voice. Both these young ladies have excellent voices, which displayed training and control, and their numbers were much enjoyed.

Mr. Joseph Marcel also sang in a very pleasing manner.

The lecture closed shortly after ten o'clock.

Popular Concert, Conservatory of Music Hall, auspices Knights of Pythias, Friday December 9th. SEWER FOREMAN WILL GET $64

More Talk on Sign Bylaw $300 Withheld From Library Contractors

A clause in the Board of Works report read that Mr. Bartlett, C.E., be paid $64 for his work in connection with the south end sewage system. Ald. Phelan took exception to paying him more than $3 a day, the regular salary for a sewer foreman.

The point that Mr. Bartlett made for manholes was of cement and a saving over brick. Ald. Hicks thought he should be remunerated for this. Ald. Phelan's motion found no seconder.

Ald. Buller thought the merchants should not be made pay a license for illuminated signs. The signs' license is $2 and this assures inspection annually Ald. Hicks thought.

Ald. Bradburn thought an agreement from the merchants that they would be responsible for any damages from signs falling would be sufficient.

Ald. Morgan thought the extension of signs should remain within the four foot limit.

The clause was adopted without amendment.

Rutherford Bros. will be paid the balance due them on the Public Library, except $300, to safeguard against the pillars in front, which are not satisfactory.

Seeing that H. Edwards having agreed to accept $28, and Miss Phelan $75 in damages to the house on Edinburgh street, occupied by the latter as the result of damage from sewer, it was agreed to settle with him for that figure.

LEFT IT FOR NEW COUNCIL

There are no flies on Ald. Duffus, and he doesn't want any. In fact he is in deadly opposition to big bluebottle and the more delicate housefly with the irritating tenor. In practical proof of his attitude he wants to pass a garbage by-law.

At the council meeting last night he suggested that the city solicitor be instructed to draft a by-law for garbage disposal in the central part of the city. The rest of the council thought it a little too late for this, and preferred to leave it for the incoming council.

Exchanged Few Words

"Now that there is no gallery I would like to ask Alderman Mecheral if he would be in favor of putting back the taxes on the Y M C A and Y W C A," said Ald. Duffus, when the small hand pointed pas. the eleven mark.

Ald. Mecheral said if the matter came up again he would vote against granting them exemption.

Ald. Duffus wanted to know Ald. Batten's views on the matter of no. allowing the societies exemption.

Ald. Batten stated he always opposed exemption. He then said he had favored the T.A.S. exemption.

Under further questioning by Ald. Duffus he said he didn't think he was in the council when exemption in connection with that society was under discussion.

"Weren't you on the council in 1904?" asked Ald. Duffus.

"I don't think so."

"Look at the picture of the council of that year that hangs behind where you sit. Isn't your picture there?"

And lo, it was.

HOCKEY SITUATION WITH OTTAWA CLUB

Ottawa Citizen.

There is as yet no sign of a break in the deadlock which exists between the Ottawa Hockey Club and those who composed the [illegible] team last year. The executive [illegible] insists that it will pay the men within the salary limit, while the puck[illegible] that they have absolutely no intention of surrendering and accepting the reduced stipend. Chairman Dave Mulligan of the Ottawa team committee has been called out of town on business and there will, as the result, be nothing doing until Monday or Tuesday at the earliest. The club is confident that the players will eventually wave the white flag of truce and accept the salaries offered them, while the puckchasers are waiting for a signal of distress from the team committee. Both factions are determined, each believing, apparently, that they have the public behind them.

SENTIMENT IS DIVIDED.

As a matter of fact the public's sympathies seem to be pretty equally divided. Talk to one man on the street and he will tell you that the players have, in the past, been given altogether too much money for their services. The next hockey enthusiast will emphasize his feelings in favor of the stickhandlers and convince you that he would much rather see his money go into the pockets of the players than into the hands of the promoters.

The only men whom Mr. Mulligan has approached to date are Marty Walsh, Albert Kerr and Fred Lake. Others have seen Bruce Stuart and Hamby Shore. Mr. Mulligan has not yet made any offer to Horace Gaul or "Skene" Ronan, but evidently intends to do so later in the campaign. Both sides are standing pat.

TIME FOR REFLECTION.

"No, we have made no more new offers to anyone," said Mr. Mulligan yesterday, in speaking to a Citizen reporter. "We are giving the boys time to think it over, and we feel certain that they will accept. Walsh, Kerr and Lake have been interviewed and the others will be seen as soon as possible. If these men refuse to consider our terms we will, of course, do the next best thing and get others to fill their places. Their stand in the matter has made it all the more imperative that we should enforce the salary limit rule."

WHY THE REDUCTION?

On the other hand the players are equally determined that they will not give in. They recognise that to succumb at this stage means lower and lower salaries for future seasons and will fight it out to the last ditch.

"Not one man of last year's team will sign under the $5,000 limit rule," said a member of the Ottawa septet last evening. "Unless we get as much money as was given us in 1909-10, Ottawa, you can bank, will have an entirely new team, even to a goalkeeper."

In reply to Mr. Mulligan's remarks quoted in these columns yesterday, the hockey players declared that if the club had made $800 on the season as explained, and had refunded $2,000 for the extra season ticket which was not used, they could surely afford to pay equal salaries this winter.

"None of the Ottawa salaries were unreasonable last year," he asserted. "And as we are all ready to sign again for the same amount the club has no kick to make."

DEPEND ON HOCKEY MONEY.

Several of the players, it was explained, really depend on hockey money for their livelihood. They have fair positions, but received most of their revenue last winter from the hockey club. Bruce Stuart of course, is an exception, he being in business for himself. Kerr and Walsh declare that they would never have given up their positions at Brockville and Kingston respectively had they known that there would have been such a cut in the salaries. The players say that Mr. L. N. Bate was responsible for bringing them here and seem to think that he should assist in looking after their interests in this crisis.

MUST HAVE A WINNER.

Meanwhile the Ottawa season tickets are being printed and will be placed on sale in a few days. Manager Dey and a large staff of employees are rushing work at the Arena, which will likely throw open its doors for the season about the latter part of next week. Every hockey fan in town is anxiously discussing the gulf between the magnates and players, and while the "holdouts" are providing good reading in the "off" season, the majority are praying for a peaceful settlement one way or the other. As one enthusiast put it yesterday, "It matters little where they get the team, who they put on the team or how much they pay them, so long as the Ottawa team is a winner." That in a nutshell sizes up the situation for a winning team in Ottawa will draw well enough to pay the highest salaries in the land, whereas a loser wouldn't attract enough money to defray traveling expenses. This is another fact which the club must weigh with due consideration.

An old Gatling gun, the property of the State of Illinois, was ordered to be sold at Springfield, and was bid in for $32. Its original price was $1,000.

SPORTING COMMENT

The Toronto Telegram hands the following to Ben Simpson—

On Saturday week at Hamilton there was one man in the last great football contest of the year who was playing in his last game, and a great game he played. That player, old Ben Simpson, of Hamilton Tigers, has done more for football in the Ambitious City and in this country than probably any other gridiron artist.

Ben has been and is, judging from his performance last week, one of the greatest players the game has produced. He has been a true lover of the sport and has given his best to it. He has been a credit to the gridiron, his play has been clean and his influence for the highest sporting ideals. These principles and ideals he has radiated so that Hamilton has become a true amateur sporting centre and has never been mixed in questionable transactions.

There is no doubt about the good work Mr. Simpson has done for the sport. Isn't it about up to those connected with the game on his retirement to do him honor in some way, and show him that his work has been appreciated. It has been suggested that Toronto might show her appreciation of the great work done by him by giving him a great banquet. At least he should be given a place of high honor in the reception tendered the Varsity men and some tangible token of the high esteem which his good works have earned for him in this amateur sporting centre.

Hamilton has been the great producers of Rugby players mainly because Ben Simpson mixed Rugby with mathematics. He has roused the love of the game and taught the best sporting principle by his own good example.

Canada is in need of more just such men as Simpson. In order to impress these ideals on the youth of the land, recognition must be given to the men who have exemplified them. Ben Simpson has certainly done this, in the highest degree.

There are three BILLY BURKES known to the world of amusement. One is feminine. There are two males. One is an actress, one a horse, and one a prize-fighter. The actress and the horse are successes, the pugilist a failure.

Everyone knows that Billy Burke the actress, is about the sweetest girl on the stage. Every horseman knows that Billy Burke the horse, is just about the classiest 2.07 trotter in the game.

Nobody cares for Billy Burke the pug. He came out of the west to win a name, was mauled by great and small in and around Philadelphia, and has now gone back to the west. He has given up the ring.

2 IN 1 FAMILY

Here is one of the many cases in which several members of one family have benefited from the household box of Zam-Buk. Col.-Sgt. Louis Elliott, 3rd Co., 46th Battalion, Peterboro, Ont., says: "The lower part of my face, cheek and chin broke out in small red pimples, which later festered and broke, forming nasty sores and dry scabs. The itching set up by these eruptions and sores was terrible, and seemed far worse during the night. All kinds of soaps, washes and ointments were tried in the vain attempt to get relief, even to bathing with carbolic acid and water. Finally I thought of Zam-Buk and straightway procured a box at the drug store. One night's application brought great relief from the intense itching, and as I kept on applying this balm daily, the inflammation was soon drawn out, and in less than a week's time the sores were thoroughly healed and every scab banished."

Mrs. Elliott, 130 Sherbrooke St., Peterboro, telling of Zam-Buk's effect on her younger son Walter, says: "He slipped and caused a wound on his right hip, which developed into a running sore. From this smaller sores spread until his lower limbs were covered with ulcers. These proved very alarming and I feared blood-poisoning! I began the Zam-Buk treatment, and it really seemed to aid like magic! In a remarkably short space of time the raw running sores were all healed. I am very grateful indeed for his cure, and I strongly recommend all mothers to keep Zam-Buk always handy."

WHAT ZAM-BUK WILL CURE.

Zam-Buk will be found a cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises, and skin injuries generally. BEATING NATURE in the COPPER RIVER VALLEY

A STORY of Adventure in Alaska Which Proves That Indomitable Men Can Overcome Difficulties That Seem at Times To Be Too Vast for Comprehension

Miles Canyon Bridge Across the Copper River, Miles Glacier in the Background.

THE author of this article is known even among progressive, daring, dauntless American railroad men as an "advanced railroader." Before he took the presidency of the Copper River and Northwestern Railroad he won his spurs with the Burlington, after a record with other roads in lesser offices, as a driving, pushing, indomitable man.

Physically he is a giant, and, quite like many other such men who really do things, he has an abounding good nature and a sense of humor that nothing can cloud.

Many of the tales in this series are particularly the adventures of the narrator, and perhaps one or two immediate associates. In this one are told the things that have befallen five thousand Americans, of whom the teller of the tale, though the leader, was only one, who took his share of the labor and danger as any good general in a great campaign should do.

BY S. W. ECCLES.

TO the average man in the United States Alaska is merely a near-polar region of ice and snow, where there is plenty of gold to be found if the hunter can keep from freezing to death. The truth is that it is largely a fair and wonderful land, in parts of which nature has locked up treasures of untold value and set the mightiest of mountains, the most powerful of streams, the cruellest of winds and the most crafty, stubborn and treacherous of all her aids as guards, whose vigilance is eternal.

They comprise an appalling defensive and at times aggressive force, and, quite as much as Napoleon's troops who marched on Moscow, Edward III.'s outnumbered knights and bowmen who triumphed at Crecy and the marvellous Foreign Legion which Africa engulfs in part each year, our men on the Copper River constitute an army, and the building of the Copper River Railroad is one of the fiercest and most spectacular battles ever fought. The enemy is Nature—Nature who when conquered, as she will be, will prove a good friend and ally.

It is only building two hundred miles of railroad. It is only the fulfilling of a contract. There will be no heroes, medals, processions, pensions and thrilling pages in history. The men who, from the chief to the lowest camp helper, imperil their lives every day are working merely for pay, but I can't help feeling that, though the great mass of people never will hear of it and only a few will realize, it is something more than commonplace, it constitutes one of the truly glorious things in the history of the American people.

Picture of the Scene.

Before passing to the narrative of the crisis of this battle of the Copper River in the North, permit me to detail some of the smaller heroisms of the long campaign, for surely the man who under fire digs a rifle pit with his bayonet or bears a wounded comrade through a leaden hail is no greater hero than the man who swings a pick where the next instant he may be swept to death in a rush of ice and earth and water or in the bitter, bitter cold strives to thrust forward a mattress of brush for a footing where one misstep means that he will be whirled away in an icy torrent at the speed of an express train beyond all possible hope of rescue.

Northward from the port of Cordova, on the centre of the southeastern coast, at a distance such as a good automobile can cover in a tamed Eastern State between breakfast and dinner, lies the Kotsina-Chitina copper district, one of the world's richest, if not the richest of all, deposits. Just beyond is the region of gold, and part of the way from the coast are fields of coal the wealth of which even at the lowest estimate makes a mind strain for comprehension. The American spirit would not permit that this wealth should remain undeveloped for lack of transportation, and when the government evaded the task of preparing to get it out a private corporation set out to build a railroad that would haul that wealth to tide water. The men who are building it are the adventurers of this narrative.

Showing Heavy Rock Work in Allen Canyon, Copper River.

Alaska's Present Winter Transportation—Dog Team Leaving Valdez.

Beginning with the first few miles after the road sweeps from Cordova around Lake Eyak the first three hundred and fifty men who invaded the region encountered the first fight. M. J. Heney, dubbed the "Prince of Alaska," a brother of Francis J. Heney, the noted prosecutor of San Francisco, led the movement as the contractor, seconded by E. C. Hawkins as chief engineer.

The Copper River is spread into a delta covered with silt as is the delta of the Mississippi. This it was necessary to cross in the hard season before the summer floods should turn it into a shallow lake with a muddy bottom of great depth.

It was on November 15, 1907, that the heroes of my story began and already the terrible winter was on. The snow was eight feet deep and there were only six hours of daylight. The flats were twenty miles wide and bare to the blast, with many glacial and tidal streams, in addition to the three mighty channels of the Copper River itself. They set to work in storms in which the wind, blowing from sixty to ninety miles an hour, hurled the particles of fine ice and snow through the air like fine shot. Utilizing the winter hardened stretches, they must construct before the softening spring came a highway over not only them but the reaches of loose ice, churning slush and speeding water, so that the heavy material for construction inland could be transported thither.

Using brush and poles packed into a mattress, placed by men and horses where many times if they missed footing all went floundering down into varying depths of loose ice, snow and water that froze like armor on them when they were dragged out, if they were so fortunate as to be dragged out—that was the way they built that track. All winter they worked preparing the way and getting men, equipment, tools, donkey engines, materials and food supplies across.

The spring brought added terrors in the way of labor under difficulties and sufferings that increased. Each thaw meant the sinking of a portion of the work or the undermining or sweeping away of another, and as the weather grew warmer the turning of the whole into a mush from six to twenty feet deep, over which men must work in snowshoes.

How doggedly they had striven can be imagined when it is said that one month after reinforcements had landed in April track had been laid across the first section of those terrible flats reaching to Alaganik, crossing a distance of twenty-two and one-half miles.

Now, just beyond are two channels of the river itself, averaging eighteen feet in depth; torrents of icy water filled with floes crashing and grinding [illegible] to the sea. One channel [illegible] wide, the other 1,100 feet. Imagine handling [illegible] and timbers under such conditions, with men in boats held by long ropes and men standing on the structural work, never taking their eyes from the workmen, ready to pick up or throw a line to any man who succumbed to the labor and exposure or lost his foothold! Nevertheless, the twenty-first of June found track laid across both channels and on to the twenty-ninth mile.

These labors, these dangers were the everyday things. More dramatic were some of the exceptional. Not heeding the signs of a storm a man had started to "mush on," he and one dog drawing the sled, taking fresh provisions from one camp to another late in the day, and as the storm descended and the dark came down he lost his way. At last he found himself on water side ice, and before he could retreat the section supporting him gave way and he went whirling down stream. Soon he saw a gleaming light ahead somewhat to the right. He yelled and the malamoot barked. Just as he was swept against the timbers in the dark and the floe crashed beneath him to let him through to death, a giant Wisconsin Swede rushed out, clung with one hand as he swung down and heaving mightily lifted man, then dog and at last the loaded sled to safety.

Bravery of One Man.

Another time when a gang was advancing horses in individual barges, as was often done, an odd thing happened. The barges were craft that would hold one horse only. The animal would be forced into it, made fast, and then the gang would take hold, sometimes to the number of thirty on a hauser, and haul the beast not only against ten mile currents, but through shallows choked with ice and slush, through dense mud and over stretches of sand with very little water over it.

Two big brothers from Seattle, longshoremen they had been, were in this gang, and when the horse they were hauling partly broke loose the elder of the two made his way out to the barge to readjust the fastenings as it touched on the tip of a sandy spot. The horse in his struggles dealt the man a kick with his fore leg that stretched him unconscious in a precariously balanced position across the bow of the barge.

Now the barge swung out where at any moment the horse might dislodge the man and drop him to his death. Shouting to the other men to haul for all they were worth the younger brother plunged in, clinging to the line, with its coating of flesh cutting ice, and made his way, at times up to his neck in water or up to his hips in quicksand, to the barge. It was a superhuman muscular effort, but when he reached the barge he still had strength enough to deal the horse a blow that took all the fight and struggle out of it, and then raising his brother to safety he stuck to the barge until it was drawn through to safety.

There was a very great deal of this work to do in making connections between the various islands up the delta, and frequently the current was such that it required fifteen men to haul up a boat carrying a few hundred pounds of freight, and at times they were breast high in the raging icy flood, slipping into quicksands or falling over logs along the bank.

Nowhere in the world has anything ever been heard of like the construction of the section of line across the front of Childs Glacier. The bridge thrown across the river here, called the Miles Canyon Bridge, is what is called "glacierproof," and there is no such another one in the world, so far as that is concerned.

Like an Avalanche.

As the great ever moving river of solid ice, three miles wide and towering three hundred feet sheer from the water, flows slowly down great bergs of ice burst from [illegible] day in and day out and fall into the river with an alarming noise and a great upheaval of water. The "ripple" a berg will raise ranges from a wave ten feet high to a wall of water twenty feet high.

One can never tell when these things are coming, and when one of those walls of water hurls itself across the twelve hundred foot channel, bearing hundreds of thousands of tons of ice on its front, the shock is something terrible. The industrial soldiers of the Copper River Valley had to get boats through with material, build sufficiently strong piers in this icy water and do all their work between the onslaughts of these waves. At the first cry of the watchers, who would go almost blind from scanning the glistening, changeable ice face, the men would drop their work and run for their lives. As the wave subsided they would return to their work if it had not been swept away. The water is so cold that it would freeze if it were not for the fifteen mile current. Construction to the camp opposite the glacier was not extremely difficult. Just above, on the same bank, however, was the great Miles glacier, and this made it necessary to cross to the other shore between the two glaciers. It was quite the usual thing for boats to arrive with but one-third of the cargo with which they started. The men were saving the lives of one another all the time. When a man fell into the river the deadly chill of it seemed to make him almost powerless and quick action was necessary unless he was an able swimmer.

For a time after the upper camp was established it was impossible to get building material to the men there, as all of the available force was required to get through enough food to keep the men in the camp alive.

The most incredible set of rescues occurred one day when a boat with seventeen men was making a brave effort to land a cargo of supplies that were imperatively needed. They were caught by one of these gigantic ice-made waves, the boat crushed to bits and all the supplies lost, yet it was contrived to get every man out, and none of them had more serious injuries than broken legs and arms.

Just as an illustration of the force of attack this bridge must stand all the time every day in the open season of the year, this is one thing that happened to us. At last a very determined and ingenious foreman had contrived to get nine huge piles chained deeply into the bed of the river and felt that he had made a substantial beginning in that spot. The next wave hurled the ice against those nine huge sticks of wood bound together as one and broke them off like pipe stems. Barges towed by launches, a double cable worked by donkey engines, both failed as a means of getting material across that river, till at last an overhead cable was rigged and every pound of the heavy material, including engines, cars and rails, was got across by October 30.

In conclusion there should be cited that part of the battle which M. J. Heney led in person in the Allen Canyon. The contract required completion to Mile 34 by October 30, 1908. The stream down this canyon is really liquid ice moving at a rate of twenty miles an hour. Up this must go the material and supplies.

Does man need to have the struggle described to picture it? In September there were twenty-four days of storms and blizzards, one destroying the construction camp at Mile 52. Some men did desert, but Heney leaped into the work himself and out of pure grit and loyalty the men stayed with him, working in that awful weather from fourteen to sixteen hours a day, staggering to their bunks for a few hours' sleep and back again, half the time in the dark, driving those last five miles on to completion, and they did it.

No army in the field, not even Washington's band at Valley Forge, ever was called upon for greater fortitude or courage.

JACKSON PARK SKATING RINK MAY BE OPENED IN A WEEK

The very cold weather is attended with numerous inquiries regarding when the skating season will commence. The Peterborough Radial Railway will have their rink in operation just as soon as the ice appears firm enough. They have had men at work there for the past three weeks and the rink was flooded again last night.

Mr. J. H. Munro in conversation with the Review to-day said that if the weather remained as it has been lately there would be skating within a week. The toboggan slide is also being made ready and it will be longer this season than last. Considerable improvements have also been made to the buildings at the rink, which will make them more comfortable for both the patrons and the band.

NEW INDUSTRY WANTS TO LOCATE IN PETERBOROUGH

Bonner Worth Company for Manufacture of Worsted Yarn Would Like to Establish Plant Here — Conditions of Agreement — By-law Will be Submitted.

A new industry, the Bonner, Worth Company, is desirous of locating in Peterborough, and an agreement mutually satisfactory to the company and the city has been arrived at. A by-law will now be submitted to the ratepayers to know their pleasure in connection with the proposed location of the firm here. The industry will be for the manufacture of worsted yard.

The conditions of the agreement which the ratepayers will be asked to sanction are briefly summarized as follows:—

The company is to purchase land for a site and erect a building on it. One year after the erection of the factory the company must have employed 30 hands.

The city agrees to assist the company by way of a loan by advancing them, without interest, the cost of the land and plant, the amount not to exceed $12,000. The company must install machinery worth $18,000. When the building is erected the city is to advance the company one-half of the cost of the land and building—this is as per conditions mentioned in the above paragraph, not to exceed $6,000. When the building has been in operation for a year and the company is employing 30 hands, the city is to advance the other half.

The money for the loan is to be raised by debentures, and in security for the loan the company is to give a mortgage on their plant payable at $1,000 a year until the debt is paid off—or sooner in case of violation of any of the conditions.

Conservatory Madrigal Club

The weekly rehearsal of the Madrigal Club will be held to-night at the Conservatory. Every member is requested to be on hand at 8 o'clock sharp.

The new concrete dam built by the Dominion Government at Redstone Lake is completed.

WEST END MANAGER TO CLAIM THE CUP

It looks like a bunch of flowers and a monument for the City Hockey League.

There was nothing doing at the meeting, generously advertised in the evening papers to take place at the Oriental, last night.

The T. A. S. Club, as on the first occasion was not represented, and to all appearances, a seven from Simcoe street is a dead issue.

Jack Oldham was on hand with the statement that the West Ends would take the City League Cup by default, and he paid the entrance fee of $2.00 to secretary Craig.

Mr. Jack Grady and another representative from the Sacred Heart Church gave notice that they could put a team in a Junior Series, or possibly a Senior Series of Intermediate players, were declared eligible.

The West End manager fell in with the idea of closing down on the first team men. It was pointed out by the president and secretary, that trouble had arisen in former years over this proposition, and that it was not practicable.

Another meeting will not be called unless the three other teams send in their entry to the secretary. The officers have been initiated into the game of solitaire and are tired of the pastime. The future is in the hands of the clubs.

Prospects are not so doubtful for a junior league, but as in the case of the senior organization, clubs will have to show that they mean business.

The hockey enthusiasts at Sacred Heart church are considering a proposition of making a rink in the south end of the city.

The possibility of a series of games with the West Ends for the championship and mug might bring the T. A.S. to life, but unless the Abstainers hand in their entry fee on or before the 15th, the honors will go to the yellow and black aggregation.

A meeting of skips for selection of rinks for the season will be held in curling rink on Thursday evening, December 8th, at eight o'clock. A full attendance is requested.

CHAMPION GOTCH TO BE IN CHICAGO TO-DAY

Chicago, December 5. — It appears that Frank Gotch, wrestling champion of the world, is quite undecided what to do about re-entering the ring. He was advised of the tremendous offers from all over the country for another match between him and Hackenschmidt, and while he definitely announced his retirement a few weeks ago and stated only recently that he wouldn't change his mind, he is willing to listen to reason at this time.

It is known that the champion is to be married in a short time, and for that reason, he may have made some promises which may be the reason that he does not care to discuss any future matches just now. When the happy event will come off nobody seems to know, but Gotch will be in Chicago Tuesday, being brought down here, it is stated, by the presence in the city of George Hackenschmidt, his most bitter rival, who meets Jess Westergard in a finish match at the Coliseum, Wednesday night.

Gotch says he has other business in Chicago, but it is known that curiosity to see "Hack" is really the incentive of his trip from his Iowa farm.

The coming of George Kennedy, of Montreal, with a tremendous offer for another Gotch-Hackenschmidt match, has caused everybody here, and there is likely to be some lively times when the clans meet.

Emil Klank, Gotch's former manager and confidential man, has received an offer of a flat sum of $25,000 from H. S. Vandusen, of this city for a tour of the country. Gotch to be the star of an athletic combination modelled on the lines of the Jeffries show last winter. Vandusen wants to run the show for twelve weeks and would not include in it any big matches, like these with Hackenschmidt, Zbysco, and Mahmout, the strangers contending for Gotch's title. Klank will see Gotch inside of the next three days and lay the proposition before him.

The New Industry

As will be seen by a news item in the Review to-day, the Bonner Worth Company wants to establish a factory here.

The ratepayers would be well advised it would seem in voting for the by-law to approve of the firm coming here.

Both Mr. Bonner and Mr. Worth are in the employ of the Penman Company, at Paris, Ont., and are practical and progressive young business men. They will have a large money interest in the new firm.

FIRST OUTDOOR SKATING PARTY

Probably the first skating party of the season was enjoyed last night by a party of about thirty young people on the canal. A most enjoyable time was spent and the ice was in perfect shape. Afterwards refreshments were served at a nearby residence before returning home.

A slight accident occurred to one of the ladies, who had the misfortune to fall and sustain a bad shaking up. She had to be conveyed home, but is none the worse for the mishap to-day.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The continuing demand for exemptions has of course at last produced a crisis. But no one pretends that one institution can be refused exemption while others of the same class receive it. The responsibility is upon the new council of seeing that the whole question is gone into properly with a view of straightening past mistakes out instead of making more. That the T.A.S. and others have just as good a right as the Y.M. C.A. is freely admitted, but "neither has a right to exemption," is the slogan of the poor taxpayer, whom nobody seems to think worth a moment's notice. Well! When he learns that 25 per cent of the property in this town is returned on the roll as exempt he'll wake up and don't you forget it.

LIBERALS NOW LEAD BY ONE

Hamar Greenwood and Laborite Win Notable Victory in Sunderland by Displacing Unionists—John Burns is Back With an Increased Majority.

London, Dec. 7.—A situation has been developed almost phenomenal in the closeness of the race between the Government coalition parties and the Unionists. The pendulum swung slightly toward the Government yesterday, and the result of three days' voting, in which 299 seats have been filled, gives the coalition one more member than they had in the last Parliament from the same constituencies. Up to Monday night the Unionists had a clear gain of five.

The returns last night showed that the Unionists had regained St. Helens from the Laborites. This borough, with the exception of last election, had been Unionist since 1906. The Liberals gained Southwark (West), Burnley and Coventry, and the Laborites gained Woolwich and Whitehaven, all from the Unionists, while yesterday morning's returns from Sunderland showed that the Liberal candidate, Greenwood, and the Laborite, Goldstone, had replaced the two Unionists there.

The Unionists concentrated their heavy fire on Battersea, but John Burns, President of the Local Government Board, again surprised them, bringing up his majority from 555 in the last election, to 1,292. The Socialist, Shaw, whom Mr. Burns' enemies among the workmen put up, in the expectation that he would divide the votes, polled a mere handful. John Burns dashed around the constituency all day in an automobile, Sir John Harrington, the Unionist candidate, and his wife, followed suit in another. Mr. Burns appealed to his friends: "Don't be taken in by the blandishments of fine ladies, who visit the mean streets only when they want something."

HAMAR GREENWOOD.

Almost everywhere fewer ballots were cast than in last election. More Liberals than Unionists stayed away from the polls. Excluding the districts which changed their complexion, the Unionists made relative gains in eighteen, the Liberals in twelve. The Socialist candidates in London did poorly, none commanding 500 votes.

The turning of the tide toward Liberalism is a surprise for the Unionists, who counted upon capturing half a dozen seats from the enemy. The greatest surprise was in Coventry, because that is the seat of motor manufacturing, and the protectionists had put great stress on their plea that tariff reform would prevent the growing competition from American machines.

The Liberals hardly expected to win Burnley, because the Socialist Hyndman was in the field and hoped to take part of the Labor vote. The Southwark contest was one of the most interesting, E. A. Strauss, Liberal, winning by only 12 votes. In Woolwich, Will Crooks, who was turned out in the last election, recaptured his old seat by a majority of 236.

The prominent fact in yesterday's early returns in the Parliamentary elections was the capture of Sunderland by the coalition parties. T. Hamar Greenwood, the Canadian Liberal, who returns to the House of Commons after an absence of less than a year, and Frank Goldstone, the Laborite, turned out the two Unionist members, Storey, Independent Tariff Reformer, and J. Knott, who were elected last January by majorities of 741 and 1,212, respectively. The polling took place in Sunderland on Monday, but the results were not announced until yesterday. Greenwood received a majority of 1,097, and Goldstone had a margin of 901 votes. The turnover is attributed in part at least to the bitterness of the boilermakers in the Sunderland district who were locked out some months back. The results in Newcastle-on-Tyne were also made known for the first time yesterday. They show no change, the Liberal and Laborite candidates being returned by slightly reduced majorities. Unopposed returns, however, placed the Unionists again in the front yesterday with a total of 129 seats against 125 secured by the coalition. Taking a line from Mr. Balfour's speech at Sheffield Monday night, most of the Unionist morning papers yesterday blamed Premier Asquith for "rushing" the elections on the old register, and, as a further excuse for the failure of the Unionists to make a better showing at the polls, complain that they did not have sufficient time to perfect their electoral organizations. The Daily Telegraph says: "If it had not been for the deplorable inferiority of the Unionist organization, both in London and Manchester, the work of stamping out the dollar domination would be still further advanced."

TAFT WANTS TO SEE TARIFF AGREEMENT WITH CANADA

In His Presidential Message the President of the U.S. Reports That all Discrimination Against the Country Has Been Explained Away.

Washington, Dec. 7.—President Taft delivered his annual address to both Houses yesterday afternoon, it being the sixty-third session of the sixty-fifth Congress. The address was a lengthy one, comprising about 30,000 words, and many matters of importance were touched upon. The one of most interest to Canadians was on the tariff negotiations and the reciprocal relations between the United States and Canada.

Along this line the President said: The new tariff law, in section 2, respecting the maximum and minimum tariffs of the United States, which provisions came into effect on April 1, 1910, imposed upon the President the responsibility of determining prior to that date whether or not an undue discrimination existed against the United States and its products in any country of the world with which we sustained commercial relations.

In the case of several countries instances of apparent undue discrimination against American commerce were found to exist. These discriminations were removed by negotiation. Prior to April 1, 1910, when the maximum tariff was to come into operation with respect to importations from all those countries in whose favor no proclamation applying the minimum tariff should be issued by the President, one hundred and thirty-four such proclamations were issued. This series of proclamations embraced the entire commercial world, and hence the minimum tariff of the United States has been given universal application, thus testifying to the satisfactory character of our trade relations with foreign countries.

The policy of broader and closer trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, which was initiated in the adjustment of the maximum and minimum provisions of the Tariff Act of August, 1909, has proved mutually beneficial. It justifies further efforts for the readjustment of the commercial relations of the two countries so that their commerce may follow the channels natural to contiguous countries and be commensurate with the steady expansion of trade and industry on both sides of the boundary line. The reciprocation on the part of the Dominion Government of the sentiment which was expressed by this Government was followed in October by the suggestion that it would be glad to have the negotiations, which had been temporarily suspended during the summer, resumed. In accordance with this suggestion, the Secretary of State, by my direction, despatched two representatives of the Department of State as special commissioners to Ottawa to confer with representatives of the Dominion of Canada. They were authorised to take such steps for formulating a reciprocal trade agreement as might be necessary and to receive and consider any propositions which the Dominion Government might care to submit.

Pursuant to the instructions issued conferences were held by these commissioners with officials of the Dominion Government at Ottawa in the early part of November.

The negotiations were conducted on both sides in a spirit of mutual accommodation. The discussion of the common commercial interests of the two countries had for its object a satisfactory basis for a trade arrangement which offers the prospect of a freer interchange for the products of the United States and of Canada. The conferences were adjourned, to be resumed in Washington on January, when it is hoped that the aspiration of both Governments for a mutually advantageous measure of reciprocity will be realized.

FIGHT IS BITTER

Social Evil in Winnipeg is Stirring the Electors.

Winnipeg, Dec. 7.—The hottest of several hot municipal campaigns is now on here. Churches and social reform people throwing their weight and influence into the civic scale against Mayor Sanford Evans and the old regime, which they accuse of violating the laws in permitting, or rather establishing, an immoral colony. In the other hand, mayoralty candidates Waugh and Harvey, not caring to split that vote which, if not satisfied with the status quo, is satisfied with their present official representative, agreed to withdraw from the field, if they could induce Mayor Evans to run again, as a demonstration against scandal mongering and defamation of the city.

The nominations yesterday were as follows: For mayor, W. Sanford Evans; E. D. Martin (reform candidate. For controllers (four vacancies), R. D. Waugh, J. W. Cockburn, A. A. McArthur, D. McLean, J. G. Harvey, T. Wilson, A. W. Puttee. Four school trustees by acclamation, D. Sinclair, D. A. Lister, A. H. Browne, Johnson Douglas.

May Choose Hahn.

Toronto, Dec. 7.—In labor circles last night, the name of Mayor Charles Hahn of Berlin was mentioned as the probable Government choice for the vacant secretaryship of the Ontario Bureau of Labor. Mr. Hahn is one of the most prominent labor men in Canada to-day, having been strongly urged on two occasions to allow his name to stand for the presidency of the Dominion Trades Congress, with no doubtful chances for success. He is a staunch and active Conservative and was a hard fighter for the Whitney-Beck power policy from the first. He is one of the most vigorous advocates of public ownership in Canada to-day, and Berlin has advanced far in this direction in the matter of a municipally-owned street railway, successfully operated, and civic-owned light and power facilities.

Oshawa, Dec. 6.—The remains of J. O'Driscoll, an old Oshawa boy, who for many years was identified with the mechanical interest of this town, were brought here yesterday from Toronto, for burial. REFUSE TO HAVE ACCOUNTS PROBED

Haughton Lennox's Amendment to Motion to Submit Nation's Books to the Committee is Voted Down by 25—Joint High Commission.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—The first straight party division of the session took place yesterday, on the acceptance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's sub-amendment to that moved by Haughton Lennox, respecting the submission of two years' accounts to the public accounts committee. The division was: Liberals 98, Conservatives 73, giving the Government a majority of 25.

This is the smallest on record.

A. Verville (Maisonneuve), and F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier) were absent from the chamber, and Arthur Gilbert (Drummond and Arthabaska) voted with the Opposition.

The evening sitting was occupied with a discussion in committee on the resolution appropriating money for the expenses of the new international joint high commission, and a lengthy dissertation took place on the question of the rights of the commission over those held by Parliament in respect of works on navigable boundary waters. Hon. Wm. Pugsley explained that the treaty was a further safeguard of the terms involved in the Ashburton treaty.

The Opposition wanted more tangible evidence of that, and the whole discussion became involved in St. Lawrence River geography. The resolution finally passed, and the bill was introduced.

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) precipitated a long discussion by moving in amendment to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's formal motion to submit the public accounts and Auditor-General's report to the public accounts committee for the past fiscal year, that, instead, these documents for two years past should go before the committee. Mr. Lennox explained that many public works are undertaken, which do not progress sufficiently the first year to warrant investigation, and these accounts are closed to the committee, when an effort is sought to enquire into the entire transaction on completion. He also thought that the Government should follow the English custom and elect the chairman from the Opposition. He claimed further that the committee was too large and unwieldly. "Take down the bars," he said, "and let the people see how the country is run."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought that the proposal to extend to two years was not logical. He was personally of the opinion that all the committees were too large, but it would not be advisable to make a change at this period of the present Parliament.

Sir Wilfrid moved in amendment: "If when, in a report of the public accounts committee, it is recommended that particular items of the Auditor-General's report of the previous year be referred to the said committee, the House will favorably consider such recommendation."

R. L. Borden advanced the argument that the committee last year had only dealt with half the accounts of the Public Works Department. On account of the indisposition of Mr. Brodeur, the marine estimates were not touched at all, while the printing bureau estimates had hardly been considered. It would be no detriment to the public interest if these accounts went before the committee. The Premier simply told the committee to do as they had already done, and really restricted further investigation.

Dr. Reid (Grenville) described some of the transactions entered into by the Public Works Department as robbery, looting and thieving. Referring to the obstruction of Mr. Pugsley and others, he was surprised that the Prime Minister was willing to stand behind these blockers. He refused to accept the amendment of Mr. Lennox. He must be in league with them.

W. H. Smythe (Algoma) declared that the Premier and others were guilty of causing civil servants, whose bread and butter were dependent upon the Government, to perjure themselves after they had come to the committee, intending to give honest evidence.

Richard Blain (Peel) said the chief reason why the work of the public accounts committee was unsatisfactory, was because the Government insisted upon purchasing goods from middlemen, who made enormous profits.

Major Sharpe (North Ontario) observed that the most flagrant sinner was Mr. Pugsley who had obstructed efforts to show that the Imperial Realty Co. of Ottawa had secured a rake-off on lighting and heating contracts made by the city for the Departmental Buildings. This company was composed simply of middlemen.

Mr. Lennox refused to accept the sub-amendment offered by Sir Wilfrid, and the House divided, Gilbert, member for Drummond and Arthabaskaville, voting with the Opposition. The vote stood, Liberals 98, Conservatives 73. The amended motion passed on the same division.

Chase, Allison Stewart, John V. Dittemore, and Adam H. Dickey, have taken full charge of the church management, and the scope of these powers includes matters of organization, finance and discipline. They are supreme in the mother church and control branch churches.

An expression of opinion from two score of prominent Christian Scientists throughout New England has been obtained on the future of the church, and they are unanimous in saying that the church will in no way be affected by the passage of the leader. At the mansion at Chestnut Hill, where the body lies in an upper chamber, there are no outward signs of grief. There is no crepe on the door, the window shades are up and the household comes and goes as usual.

The comb was introduced into the case by the state, and Mrs. Glover testified that it belonged to Hattie Leblanc. McCall swore that he often visited the Glover home, and that he saw the comb in question, or one just like it. He said that it was being worn by a woman when he saw it.

Not Seen Near Laundry.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 6.—The prosecution's direct case against Hattie Leblanc, on trial for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, will probably be before the jury to-day.

No witness has yet testified to seeing Hattie Leblanc enter or leave the laundry, where the shooting is said to have taken place, and three efforts by the district attorney to introduce testimony that more closely connected the girl with the crime have been ruled out by the court. On the other hand, the defence has turned the attention of the jury from the little Cape Breton girl to Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, the widow. Half a dozen witnesses testified yesterday to seeing her in her own home about the time the shooting is said to have occurred in the laundry.

Mrs. Glover's personal counsel, S. D. Elmore, was on the stand longer than anyone else yesterday, and was forced to admit he was paid $4,513 by Mrs. Glover immediately following the murder to defend her against a situation which had arisen.

The colonel stated with some warmth that the Speaker appeared in an official capacity, wearing his new robes of office, which had been paid for by the people of Canada.

LIBERALS NOW LEAD BY ONE

Hamar Greenwood and Laborite Win Notable Victory in Sunderland by Displacing Unionists—John Burns is Back With an Increased Majority.

London, Dec. 7.—A situation has been developed almost phenomenal in the closeness of the race between the Government coalition parties and the Unionists. The pendulum swung slightly toward the Government yesterday, and the result of three days' voting, in which 289 seats have been filled, gives the coalition one more member than they had in the last Parliament from the same constituencies. Up to Monday night the Unionists had a clear gain of five.

The returns last night showed that the Unionists had regained St. Helens from the Laborites. This borough, with the exception of last election, had been Unionist since 1906. The Liberals gained Southwark (West), Burnley and Coventry, and the Laborites gained Woolwich and Whitehaven, all from the Unionists, while yesterday morning's returns from Sunderland showed that the Liberal candidate, Greenwood, and the Laborite, Goldstone, had replaced the two Unionists there.

The Unionists concentrated their heavy fire on Battersea, but John Burns, President of the Local Government Board, again surprised them, bringing up his majority from 555 in the last election, to 1,292. The Socialist, Shaw, whom Mr. Burns' enemies among the workmen put up, in the expectation that he would divide the votes, polled a mere handful. John Burns dashed around the constituency all day in an automobile, Sir John Harrington, the Unionist candidate, and his wife, followed suit in another. Mr. Burns appealed to his friends: "Don't be taken in by the blandishments of fine ladies, who visit the mean streets only when they want something."

Almost everywhere fewer ballots were cast than in last election. More Liberals than Unionists stayed away from the polls. Excluding the districts which changed their complexion, the Unionists made relative gains in eighteen, the Liberals in twelve. The Socialist candidates in London did poorly, none commanding 500 votes.

The turning of the tide toward Liberalism is a surprise for the Unionists, who counted upon capturing half a dozen seats from the enemy. The greatest surprise was in Coventry, because that is the seat of motor manufacturing, and the protectionists had put great stress on their plea that tariff reform would prevent the growing competition from American machines.

The Liberals hardly expected to win Burnley, because the Socialist Hyndman was in the field and hoped to take part of the Labor vote. The Southwark contest was one of the most interesting, E. A. Strauss, Liberal, winning by only 12 votes. In Woolwich, Will Crooks, who was turned out in the last election, recaptured his old seat by a majority of 236.

The prominent fact in yesterday's early returns in the Parliamentary elections was the capture of Sunderland by the coalition parties. T. Hamar Greenwood, the Canadian Liberal, who returns to the House of Commons after an absence of less than a year, and Frank Goldstone, the Laborite, turned out the two Unionist members, Storey, Independent Tariff Reformer, and J. Knott, who were elected last January by majorities of 741 and 1,212, respectively. The polling took place in Sunderland on Monday, but the results were not announced until yesterday. Greenwood received a majority of 1,097, and Goldstone had a margin of 991 votes. The turnover is attributed in part at least to the bitterness of the boilermakers in the Sunderland district who were locked out some months back. The results in Newcastle-on-Tyne were also made known for the first time yesterday. They show no change, the Liberal and Laborite candidates being returned by slightly reduced majorities. Unopposed returns, however, placed the Unionists again in the front yesterday with a total of 129 seats against 126 secured by the coalition. Taking a line from Mr. Balfour's speech at Sheffield Monday night, most of the Unionist morning papers yesterday blamed Premier Asquith for "rushing" the elections on the old register, and, as a further excuse for the failure of the Unionists to make a better showing at the polls, complain that they did not have sufficient time to perfect their electoral organizations. The Daily Telegraph says: "If it had not been for the deplorable inferiority of the Unionist organization, both in London and Manchester, the work of stamping out the dollar domination would be still further advanced."

The address was a lengthy one, comprising about 30,000 words, and many matters of importance were touched upon. The one of most interest to Canadians was on the tariff negotiations and the reciprocal relations between the United States and Canada.

Along this line the President said: The new tariff law, in section 2, respecting the maximum and minimum tariffs of the United States, which provisions came into effect on April 1, 1910, imposed upon the President the responsibility of determining prior to that date whether or not an undue discrimination existed against the United States and its products in any country of the world with which we sustained commercial relations.

In the case of several countries instances of apparent undue discrimination against American commerce were found to exist. These discriminations were removed by negotiation. Prior to April 1, 1910, when the maximum tariff was to come into operation with respect to importations from all those countries in whose favor no proclamation applying the minimum tariff should be issued by the President, one hundred and thirty-four such proclamations were issued. This series of proclamations embraced the entire commercial world, and hence the minimum tariff of the United States has been given universal application, thus testifying to the satisfactory character of our trade relations with foreign countries.

The policy of broader and closer trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, which was initiated in the adjustment of the maximum and minimum provisions of the Tariff Act of August, 1909, has proved mutually beneficial. It justifies further efforts for the readjustment of the commercial relations of the two countries so that their commerce may follow the channels natural to contiguous countries and be commensurate with the steady expansion of trade and industry on both sides of the boundary line. The reciprocation on the part of the Dominion Government of the sentiment which was expressed by this Government was followed in October by the suggestion that it would be glad to have the negotiations, which had been temporarily suspended during the summer, resumed. In accordance with this suggestion, the Secretary of State, by my direction, despatched two representatives of the Department of State as special commissioners to Ottawa to confer with representatives of the Dominion of Canada. They were authorized to take such steps for formulating a reciprocal trade agreement as might be necessary and to receive and consider any propositions which the Dominion Government might care to submit.

Pursuant to the instructions issued conferences were held by these commissioners with officials of the Dominion Government at Ottawa in the early part of November.

The negotiations were conducted on both sides in a spirit of mutual accommodation. The discussion of the common commercial interests of the two countries had for its object a satisfactory basis for a trade arrangement which offers the prospect of a freer interchange for the products of the United States and of Canada. The conferences were adjourned, to be resumed in Washington on January, when it is hoped that the aspiration of both Governments for a mutually advantageous measure of reciprocity will be realized.

McCall, superintendent of the Glover Laundry, testified that the lady's comb found in the laundry the next day after the tragedy was that of Mrs. Lillian M. Glover.

The comb was introduced into the case by the state, and Mrs. Glover testified that it belonged to Hattie Leblanc. McCall swore that he often visited the Glover home, and that he saw the comb in question, or one just like it. He said that it was being worn by a woman when he saw it.

FIGHT IS BITTER

Winnipeg, Dec. 7.—The hottest of several hot municipal campaigns is now on here. Churches and social reform people throwing their weight and influence into the civic scale against Mayor Sanford Evans and the old regime, which they accuse of violating the laws in permitting, or rather establishing, an immoral colony. In the other hand, mayoralty candidates Waugh and Harvey, not caring to split that vote which, if not satisfied with the status quo, is satisfied with their present official representative, agreed to withdraw from the field, if they could induce Mayor Evans to run again, as a demonstration against scandal mongering and defamation of the city.

The nominations yesterday were as follows: For mayor, W. Sanford Evans; E. D. Martin (reform candidate. For controllers (four vacancies), R. D. Waugh, J. W. Cockburn, A. A. McArthur, D. McLean, J. G. Harvey, T. Wilson, A. W. Puttee. Four school trustees by acclamation, D. Sinclair, D. A. Lister, A. H. Browne, Johnson Douglas.

May Choose Hahn.

Toronto, Dec. 7.—In labor circles last night, the name of Mayor Charles Hahn of Berlin was mentioned as the probable Government choice for the vacant secretaryship of the Ontario Bureau of Labor. Mr. Hahn is one of the most prominent labor men in Canada to-day, having been strongly urged on two occasions to allow his name to stand for the presidency of the Dominion Trades Congress, with no doubtful chances for success. He is a staunch and active Conservative and was a hard fighter for the Whitney-Beck power policy from the first. He is one of the most vigorous advocates of public ownership in Canada to-day, and Berlin has advanced far in this direction in the matter of a municipally-owned street railway, successfully operated, and civic-owned light and power facilities.

REFUSE TO HAVE ACCOUNTS PROBED

Haughton Lennox's Amendment to Motion to Submit Nation's Books to the Committee is Voted Down by 25—Joint High Commission.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—The first straight party division of the session took place yesterday, on the acceptance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's sub-amendment to that moved by Haughton Lennox, respecting the submission of two years' accounts to the public accounts committee. The division was: Liberals 98, Conservatives 73, giving the Government a majority of 25.

This is the smallest on record.

A. Verville (Maisonneuve), and F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier) were absent from the chamber, and Arthur Gilbert (Drummond and Arthabaska) voted with the Opposition.

The evening sitting was occupied with a discussion in committee on the resolution appropriating money for the expenses of the new international joint high commission, and a lengthy dissertation took place on the question of the rights of the commission over those held by Parliament in respect of works on navigable boundary waters. Hon. Wm. Pugsley explained that the treaty was a further safeguard of the terms involved in the Ashburton treaty.

The Opposition wanted more tangible evidence of that, and the whole discussion became involved in St. Lawrence River geography. The resolution finally passed, and the bill was introduced.

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) precipitated a long discussion by moving in amendment to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's formal motion to submit the public accounts and Auditor-General's report to the public accounts committee for the past fiscal year, that, instead, these documents for two years past should go before the committee. Mr. Lennox explained that many public works are undertaken, which do not progress sufficiently the first year to warrant investigation, and these accounts are closed to the committee, when an effort is sought to enquire into the entire transaction on completion. He also thought that the Government should follow the English custom and elect the chairman from the Opposition. He claimed further that the committee was too large and unwieldly. "Take down the bars," he said, "and let the people see how the country is run."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought that the proposal to extend to two years was not logical. He was personally of the opinion that all the committees were too large, but it would not be advisable to make a change at this period of the present Parliament.

Sir Wilfrid moved in amendment: "If when, in a report of the public accounts committee, it is recommended that particular items of the Auditor-General's report of the previous year be referred to the said committee, the House will favorably consider such recommendation."

R. L. Borden advanced the argument that the committee last year had only dealt with half the accounts of the Public Works Department. On account of the indisposition of Mr. Brodeur, the marine estimates were not touched at all, while the printing bureau estimates had hardly been considered. It would be no detriment to the public interest if these accounts went before the committee. The Premier simply told the committee to do as they had already done, and really restricted further investigation.

Dr. Reid (Grenville) described some of the transactions entered into by the Public Works Department as robbery, looting and thieving. Referring to the obstruction of Mr. Pugsley and others, he was surprised that the Prime Minister was willing to stand behind these blockers. He refused to accept the amendment of Mr. Lennox. He must be in league with them.

W. H. Smythe (Algoma) declared that the Premier and others were guilty of causing civil servants, whose bread and butter were dependent upon the Government, to perjure themselves after they had come to the committee, intending to give honest evidence.

Richard Blain (Peel) said the chief reason why the work of the public accounts committee was unsatisfactory, was because the Government insisted upon purchasing goods from middlemen, who made enormous profits.

Major Sharpe (North Ontario) observed that the most flagrant sinner was Mr. Pugsley who had obstructed efforts to show that the Imperial Realty Co. of Ottawa had secured a rake-off on lighting and heating contracts made by the city for the Departmental Buildings. This company was composed simply of middlemen.

Mr. Lennox refused to accept the sub-amendment offered by Sir Wilfrid, and the House divided, Gilbert, member for Drummond and Arthabaskaville, voting with the Opposition. The vote stood, Liberals 98, Conservatives 73. The amended motion passed on the same division.

Sale of Danish West Indies.

Copenhagen, Dec. 7.—The agitation for the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States has been renewed by the islanders and yesterday the Government received an address, in which the petitioners asked that negotiations to that end be opened.

Not Seen Near Laundry.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 6.—The prosecution's direct case against Hattie Leblanc, on trial for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, will probably be before the jury to-day.

No witness has yet testified to seeing Hattie Leblanc enter or leave the laundry, where the shooting is said to have taken place, and three efforts by the district attorney to introduce testimony that more closely connected the girl with the crime have been ruled out by the court. On the other hand, the defence has turned the attention of the jury from the little Cape Breton girl to Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, the widow. Half a dozen witnesses testified yesterday to seeing her in her own home about the time the shooting is said to have occurred in the laundry.

Mrs. Glover's personal counsel, S. D. Elmore, was on the stand longer than anyone else yesterday, and was forced to admit he was paid $4,513 by Mrs. Glover immediately following the murder to defend her against a situation which had arisen.

Gives Premier the Lie.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Col. Sam Hughes, M.P. for Haliburton, commenting last night on the answers given by the Premier in the House of Commons yesterday regarding matters in connection with the Eucharistic Congress, said that in every case the replies of Sir Wilfrid Laurier to his questions were untrue.

Col. Hughes repudiates the assertion of the Premier that Speaker Marcil did not appear in the eucharistic procession in an official capacity, because the mace was not there. The colonel stated with some warmth that the Speaker appeared in an official capacity, wearing his new robes of office, which had been paid for by the people of Canada.

"More will be heard of this affair," said Col. Hughes. "The matter is by no means ended. I am not asking these questions for nothing."

Settled After Charge Was Laid.

St. Catharines, Dec. 6.—Magistrate Campbell spent all afternoon hearing a charge of theft of $20 by William Meadows, from Lowry, Vivian & Shoveller, grocers at St. Davids, by whom he was employed. It was shown that the accused had collected money appropriating it to his own use, but after the information was issued, he had settled the amount. Under the circumstances, the magistrate held him guilty, but did not send the case for trial. To-day Meadows will answer to another charge of theft of $26 [illegible]

Lancaster Deserts Whitney.

St. Catharines, Dec. 6.—At a meeting of the executive of the Conservative Association of Lincoln County, E. A. Lancaster, M.P., declared that, owing to the Hydro-Electric power policy of the Whitney administration, he no longer is a supporter of the Ontario Government.

He claimed that that policy had made conditions such that it would be almost impossible for him to again be elected in this county.

THE GREATEST OF ALL THESE IS CHARITY

The moving spirit of the sentiment is charity in all things, but the approach of the Christmas season brings the suggestion of charity in a practical sense.

Thousands are perplexed in a matter of duty to one's fellows. Christmas is the time of the beneficent hand, that others, as well as ourselves may have some of the joy and a share of the plenty. If we have much it is ours to give, to share, that others may partake.

Thousands are confronted with the thought, "is it right to spend on trinkets, on gifts, to friends and relatives, the sums that might, if dispensed, bring a share of the Christmas pleasure to poor homes?" Mostly we compromise with conscience and go half-and-half.

Assuredly, we have the right to do as we wish with our own, within reasonable limits, so long as we do not deprive others associated with us of a rightful share.

Let there be thanks that there are those who are thoughtful and sympathetic, and who, confronted with a sense of duty, will harken to its call. Here are two illustrations where charity and helps were given. They present two phases of the question—

A citizen wished to have some work done. He was directed to a man who wished work. He went to the home and found the family, husband, wife and four children. They sat at the kitchen table and were partaking of dinner. On the table was a loaf of bread and a jug of hot water.

That was all—all the home afforded.

The good wife explained circumstances. Her husband had injured his arm and was out of work—would be for another two weeks. They had a very little money, but bravely determined to face the matter. They would not run bills at the corner grocery, to remain unpaid. The family had lived on bread and water for four days, and expected to do so for days further on. They had not asked for charity—from a feeling of modesty and reticence that neighbors should know how really badly they were situated. There was no repining, no whining, no despair, but a brave determination to pull through. There was $1.75 in the house.

The citizen came away, and as he walked down the street made certain resolutions. He told his wife the story, and they decided it was their duty to forego presents to themselves, to relatives and friends, and devote the money to helping some poor souls to a happier Christmas than they hoped for.

It is true help and assistance are often given and misplaced. One cannot sift and determine.

A family in poor circumstances was helped generously by kind neighbors. One good housewife—following upon her gift of provender, interviewed the family, and was received with a general air of patronage, and gained the impression that the folks believed the world owed them a living and that they were going to collect it.

The lady of the house explained that they could not possibly get along with less than five pounds of butter per week, and as for the friend who sent in a salad, would the caller say that they enjoyed it very much and would they send the recipe.

AFRAID OF THE PEOPLE

It is amusing to see how the self-styled Liberals are afraid of consulting the people. They seem to think that if a political party believes that a certain policy will benefit the country they should put it in force, so that the people should not be consulted in regard to it, no matter how important the question may be. Who are the people that they should have a voice in the matter? It is true they will be compelled to pay the piper and to carry the responsibility of the measures, but, say these latter day Liberals, why should they be consulted?

This is the ground they take with reference to both Mr. Balfour's promise in regard to tariff reform and Mr. Borden's demand that the people of Canada should be consulted on the naval policy. Mr. Borden's position, however, is much stronger than Mr. Balfour's. The question of the establishment of a navy, or the lines upon which it should be established, have not been submitted to the people and they have not been consulted upon it either by a referendum or by the regular method of a general election. At the last election it was not discussed or presented to the people and the Government was not given a mandate to establish a navy, much less one that would not be in a position to immediately co-operate with the armored vessels of the other parts of the Empire should the necessity for such action arise. The Government has committed the country to the carrying out of a policy that will call for large yearly expenditures without giving an adequate return in increased protection and this they have done without the sanction of the people.

It is surely a sound and safe constitutional doctrine that the Dominion should not be committed to a new departure of the greatest importance, one that follows an entirely new line of policy without the question having been discussed before the people and their views obtained. If a Premier once in office is thereby made an autocrat, it might be argued that he may force through Parliament any measure he wishes, but if we have a system of government by the people it is the party that involves the country in new departures without taking the voice of the people that is acting in an unconstitutional manner.

Responsible government is not abrogated by consulting the people. Its essence requires that the sense of the electors shall be taken on a new policy by an appeal to the people, and if by returning a majority of members in favor of it the people endorse it, the Government is then in a position to carry it out. Neither by this constitutional method, nor by the method of a referendum such as is now being discussed in England, nor in any other manner, have the people been allowed to express their wishes in regard to a naval policy. The Conservatives take the ground that the wishes of the people should be carried out and that they can only be carried out when they are made known. The Government and its supporters oppose this view and claim the right to adopt any new policy, either in building a new transcontinental railway, or establishing a navy on such lines as suits them without any consultation of the people. That is a dangerous doctrine, and one that the electors should put down at the earliest opportunity.

SIX MINUTES LATE

Be on time.

If you have an appointment for any purpose, be on time. If the matter is important enough to fix a time for its consideration it is of sufficient importance to be dealt with at the time appointed.

To be late at an appointment is to break your word with the other party. One's word should always be kept and then it will be known that you can be relied upon.

It is a wrong to others to keep them waiting. It is stealing their time, and time is money. It annoys them and that injures their tempers. They have no right to deprive them of their time that they might devote to another purpose, and you should not weaken their tempers.

To be late once is wrong, if it can be avoided, and a habit of being late can easily be formed. Then you may miss something important some time by being a little late.

A politician in Manchester lost a nomination for Parliament last week by being six minutes late. His opponent got the seat, and the man who did not keep the appointment will not be an M.P.

PROTECTING AT CROSSINGS

Mr. Maybee, chairman of the Dominion Railway Commission, has made a ruling that in future municipalities must pay a proportion of the cost of safety appliances at level railway crossings. "There is no use arguing that municipalities should pay anything," he said, "because they have got to pay." The only question is whether they should pay one-third or three-quarters of the cost.

There may be no use arguing with Chairman Maybee, but others may hold an opinion different from the one embodied in the ruling. If a railway owns the land and has built its line upon it, and a municipality secures the right to open a street across it, there is a reason in the claim that they should pay towards any protection needed at that point. But when a railway is permitted by law to take possession of part of a street and to make use of it for the purpose of its business without paying anything for the privilege, it surely should pay the expenses needed to protect the people, the owners of the land they use, from the danger of being run down by the trains. The municipality does not cause the danger. The streets were safe for traffic before the railway was built upon them. All the danger is caused by the railway company, and they should provide the protection.

The chairman says the towns and cities are growing. True, and the streets were provided for the growing traffic. When Peterborough was a hamlet Aylmer street did not need to be sixty-six feet wide to accommodate the traffic of that time, but the street was laid out with a view to the future, as were other streets, and it is sufficient and would be safe for the traffic to-day without the railway. It looks reasonable that the company that causes the need for protection should provide it.

MATERIALISM

BY WALT MASON

I gazed upon the noble oak that threw its shadow far and wide, and to the husbandman I spoke: "That tree should be your boast and pride. Perchance a thousand years it's stood—a thousand years of sun and rain—the sole survivor of the wood that one time clothed this radiant plain. Before Columbus sailed the sea, to find Chicago and New York, the red man rested by this tree, or slung his hammock in its work. Since first those branches swayed and sighed a thousand wars have shaken thrones; a thousand kings have reigned and died, and given to the earth their bones. And cities that were mighty then have crumbled into ruins gray; and dynasties, and tribes of men have lived and laughed and passed away. Oh grim survivor of a time when knights went forth, in steel arrayed! I yet might sing one song sublime, could I but dwell within thy shade!" The farmer scratched his toilworn head, and chilled the fervor of my soul; "I guess I'll cut it down," he said, "they charge a man so much for coal."

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DINING CARS

The volume of business which has offered on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway since their passenger service was put into effect last July, has necessitated the early increase of equipment, and the Canada Car Co. have turned out for the Grand Trunk Pacific three new dining cars, which are models of elegance and beauty.

The exterior length of the car is 82 feet, and the length of the dining room 32 feet 6 inches, the balance of the interior of the car being taken up by the modern kitchen, refrigerators and pantry. They are mounted on standard six wheel trucks. The platforms are of steel and the vestibule of the Pullman type. They are equipped with high speed quick action Westinghouse air brakes. The interior of the car is finished in plain and figured mahogany, with a harmony of colors that is pleasing to the eye. The cars are heated by steam, and lighted with electric light.

The dining room accommodates 30 people at one sitting. The floors are covered with handsome carpets of an exclusive design, and with a pattern conforming to the general color scheme of the interior. These cars are equipped with all the improvements and safety appliances that are known to modern skill and are the handsomest dining cars that have been turned out from Canadian shops.

They will leave for the west in a day or two, and will be objects of interest as well as supplying comfort to western travellers, and will be an addition to the already well known service that is being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific in Western Canada.

The Riverman

By Stewart Edward White

"Frank," said Orde, rousing himself, "I've got to be here. I couldn't get away if my life depended on it. I want you to go to California and look after those interests for me. Make what arrangements you please, but go. It'll be like a sort of vacation to you. And I'll make it worth your while. Take Clara with you. Now, straighten it out as quick as you can. Borrow that money on it and send it on p. d. q."

Taylor hesitated. "All right," he said at last.

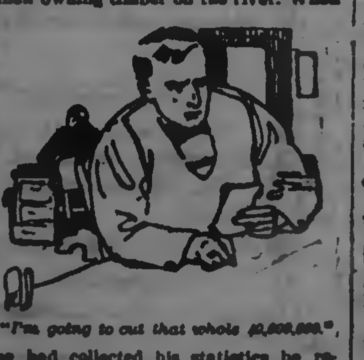
"Good!" cried Orde, rising and holding out his hand. He made his way to the office of the Welton Lumber company.

"Look here, Welton," he demanded abruptly when he had reached that operator's private office, "how much of a cut are you going to make this year?"

"About 20,000,000," replied Welton. "Why?"

"Just figuring on the drive," said Orde, nodding a farewell.

He then drove to the offices of all the men owning timber on the river. When



"I'm going to cut that whole 40,000,000."

he had collected his statistics he returned to his desk, where he filled the backs of several envelopes with his characteristically minute figures. He nodded his head vigorously.

"Joe," he called across to his partner, "I'm going to cut that whole 40,000,000 we have left."

"Do you think you can do it? It's two years' work."

"Sure thing," replied Orde. Then to himself he added, "I've got to."

Chapter 32

ORDE was fighting for his very life. The notes given by Newmark & Orde would come due beginning the following summer. Before that time Orde must be able to meet them personally or his stock in the Boom company would be turned in to the firm. This would of course spell nearly a total loss of it as far as Orde was concerned.

The chief anxiety under which the riverman labored, however, was the imminent prospect of losing under the mortgage all the northern peninsula timber. Now, as the time approached, he realized that if he could not pay the notes the firm would certainly be unable to do so. What with the second mortgage due two years later and to be met by Newmark, with the outstanding obligations, with the new enterprise of the vessels ordered from Duncan McLeod, Newmark & Orde would be unable to raise anything like the necessary amount. He fell upon the woods work with unparalleled ferocity. A sale of the 40,000,000 feet remaining of the firm's up river holdings, together with the tolls to be collected for driving the river that spring, would bring Orde through by "the skin of his teeth." To cut 40,000,000 feet, even in these latter days of improvements, would be a task to strain to the utmost every resource of energy and organization.

Nevertheless Orde accomplished the task. He lived constantly in the woods. The Rough Red had charge of the banking, where his aggressive, brutal personality kept the rollways free from congestion. When the drive started the cut was banked for miles along the stream, 40,000,000 feet of it.

The strain over, Orde faced the task of driving the river.

From Taylor, Orde had several communications. The lawyer confessed himself baffled as to the purpose of the land office investigation. The whole affair appeared to be tangled in technicalities and a snarl of red tape.

He lived constantly in the woods.

Orde did not much care for this delay. He saw his way clear to meeting his obligations without the necessity of hypothecating the California timber and was the better pleased for it. With the break up of spring he proceeded confidently with the largest drive in the history of the river, a matter of over 200,000,000 feet.

The morning of June 26 dawned clear. Orde drove rapidly to the distributing booms. After a glance at the river he entered the tiny office and set about the examination of the tally sheets. The foreman, Tom North, entered.

"The river's rising," he said.

"You're crazy," muttered Orde. "There have been no rains reported."

"It's rising," insisted North.

An hour later Orde walked out over the booms. The water certainly had risen. He called a boy.

"Here, Jimmy," said he, "mark one of these piles and keep track of how fast the water rises."

The river slowly rose.

"I don't like June floods," Orde told Tom North. "A fellow can understand an ordinary spring freshet and knows about how far it will go, but these summer floods are so confounded mysterious I can't figure out what's struck the old stream unless they're having almighty heavy rains up near headwaters."

By 3 o'clock in the afternoon Jimmy Powers reported a rise since morning of six inches.

"Tom," said Orde to the old riverman, "I'm going to send Marsh down for the pile drivers and some cable."

"What in blazes do you expect to do with that?" he inquired.

"We may need them," Orde stated, with conviction. "If those logs ever break through they'll go on out to Lake Michigan and wouldn't be worth the salvage."

"That's a mighty long chance," North commented.

"If this drive goes out it surely busts me," replied Orde, "and I'm not taking even long chances."

A cloudburst in the China creek district followed by continued heavy rains was responsible for the increased water. The evening papers mentioned this only incidentally. Their columns were filled with an account of the big log jam that had formed above the iron railroad bridge. The planing mill's booms had given way under pressure, and the contents had piled downstream against the buttresses.

Orde slept that night at the booms. The water by morning had crept so far up the piles that there began to be danger that it would overflow their tops. In that case, of course, the logs in the booms would also run out.

Orde set a crew of men to raising the height of the piling by tying logs firmly to the bolted timbers atop. This would take care of an extra two feet of water, a two feet beyond all previous records. Another crew stretched the fifteen inch manila cables across the field of logs in order to segregate them into several units of mass.

About two hours later the pile driver moved up. The swing was opened, and the men began to drive clumps of piles in such a position as to strengthen the swing when the latter should be shut. It was a slow job. Each pile had to be taken from the raft at the stern of the scow, erected in the "carrier," and pounded into place by the heavy hammer raised and let drop in the derrick at the bow.

Long before the task was finished the logs in the temporary booms had begun to slide atop one another, to cross and tangle, until at last the river bed inside the booms was filled with a jam of formidable dimensions. From beneath it the water boiled in eddies. Orde, looking at it, roused himself to sudden activity.

"Get a move on," he advised Captain Aspinwall of the driver. "If that jam breaks on us we want to be ready, and if it don't break before you get this swing strengthened maybe we can hold her where she is. There's no earthly doubt that those boom piles will never stand up when they get the full pressure of the freshet."

The driver's crew labored desperately, hoisting the piles into the carriage, tripping the heavy hammer, binding feverishly the clumps of piles together by means of cables.

Two of the clumps had been placed and bound when suddenly, with a roar, the upper booms gave way, projecting their logs upon the opening and the driver.

The half dozen members of the crew were scattered by the winds of a panic. Two or three flung themselves on their faces; one leaped into the river. Imminent destruction seemed upon them.

Tom North, at the winch that operated the arm of the swing, however, retained his presence of mind. At the first sag outward of the boom piles he set in operation the machinery that closed the gate. Clumsy and slow as was his mechanism, he nevertheless succeeded in getting the long arm started. The logs, rushing in back of it, hurried it shut. Immediately they jammed again and heaped up in a formidable tangle behind the barrier. Tom North, his little black pipe between his teeth, stood calm, the lever of his winch in his hand. A short three feet from the spot on which he stood the first saw log of the many that might have overwhelmed him thrust forward its ugly head. The wash of the water lifted the huge pile driver bodily and deposited it with a crush half on the bank and half in the water.

Instantly after the first break Orde had commenced running out over the booms from the shore.

"Good boy, Tom!" he shot at North.

Across the jam he hurried to where the pile driver lay. Captain Aspinwall examined the supports of the derrick on deck.

"That was lucky," said Orde briefly. "Stove you in?"

"I—I don't think so," replied the captain.

"That's good. I'll send over the tug to help get her afloat. We've got our work cut out for us now."

"You don't expect me to work my driver under the face of that jam!" cried the captain.

"What's the matter?" asked Orde.

"It isn't safe," replied the captain, "and I don't intend to risk my men or my driver."

Orde, with a snort of anger, seized the man and thrust him bodily over the side to the bank.

"Safe, you white livered skunk!" he roared. "Safe! Go over in the middle of that ten acre lot and lie down on your face and see if you feel safe there! Get out, the whole pack of you! I'm in charge here now."

Aspinwall picked himself up.

"Get off my driver!" he snarled.

"This driver is requisitioned!" cried Orde. "Get out! I've got to save my logs!"

Tom North and some others of the crew came running across the jam.

"Get a cable to the winch!" Orde shouted at these as soon as they were within hearing. "And get Marsh up here with the Sprite. We've got to get afloat."

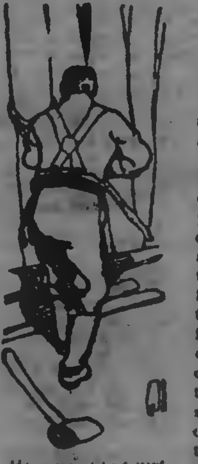
He paid no more attention to the ejected crew.

A few minutes' hard work put the driver afloat. Fortunately its raft of piles had not become detached in the upheaval.

"Tom," said Orde briskly to North, "you know the pile driving business. Pick out your crew and take charge."

Orde took charge of the situation in its entirety, as a general might. He set North immediately to driving clumps each of sixteen piles, bound to solidity by chains, and so arranged in angles and slants as to direct the enormous pressure toward either bank, thus splitting the enemy's power. The small driver owned by the Boom company drove similar clumps here, there and everywhere that need arose or weakness developed. Seventy-five men opposed to the weight of 20,000,000 tons of logs and a river of water the expedients invented by determination and desperation.

Orde gave over formal defenses and threw his energies to saving the weak places which rapidly developed. By the most tremendous exertions he seemed but just able to keep even. Piles quivered, bent slowly outward. Immediately, before the logs behind them could stir, the pile driver must do its work. Back and forth darted the Sprite and her sister tug, the Spray, towing the pile drivers or the strings of piles. Under the frowning destruction the crews had to do their work. And if ever a break should come there would be no escape. Crushed and buried, the men would be borne to an unknown grave in the lake. Every man knew it. Darkness came. No one stopped for food.



He seemed but just able to keep even

Morning found no change in the situation. The water rose steadily. The logs grew more and more restive; the defenses [illegible] more inadequate.

Smallest Typewriter.

A London novelty is a midget typewriter that has been put on the market recently. It is made to look like a watch and is not much bulkier. There is a revolving disk mounted inside of it, and this disk is provided around its edge with rubber type. An indicator on the outside shows what letter is in position to print. The printing itself is done by placing the apparatus on the sheet of paper, turning the disk until the desired letter is in place, and then pushing down on the little stem or knob in the ring.

It is hardly to be expected that this machine will do the work of the best $100 typewriters, but with practice it can be operated with considerable speed and the writing looks very creditable. Many kinds of miniature typewriters have been got up, but this is the "last word" in that line.

English Brass.

The composition of English brass is about seventy parts copper and thirty of zinc. "Prince Rupert's metal" contains 75 to 80 per cent of copper and, on account of its golden color, is employed to some extent in jewelry. The kind of brass called tombac contains still more copper, nearly eighty-five parts in a hundred. It is the alloy used for the manufacture of what is called Dutch metal, an imitation of gold leaf. It can be rolled into sheets, and these can be beaten out till they are only fifty-three thousands of an inch in thickness.—Chambers' Journal

Just Ignored the Prohibition.

Winnipeg, Dec. 6.—The street railway employes closed their case yesterday morning with a statement, signed by 400 employes, to the effect that they individually had ignored the rule forbidding drinking in uniform; that they understood prohibition referred only to excessive drinking, and that they did not feel that they, therefore, incurred either chastisement or dismissal.

The Rayo Lamp is constructed to give the maximum diffused white light. Every detail that increases its light-giving value has been included.

The Rayo is a low-priced lamp. You may pay $5, $10 or even $20 for other lamps and get a more expensive container—but you cannot get a better light than the Rayo gives.

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

COLLEGE STREET, TORONTO

READY FOR MOTHER.

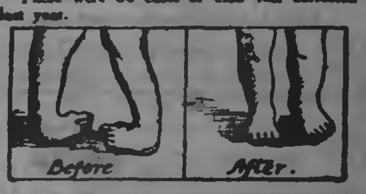
This Institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,857 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay and were treated free.

There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

The sick child from the most remote corner of Ontario has the same claim as the child living within sight of the great House of Mercy in College Street, Toronto. Our cause is the children's cause. Could there be one that has a stronger claim on the people of this Province?

Before
After.

If the Hospital is to continue its great work, it must appeal to your pocketbook as well as to your heart. Let your Dollars be messages of mercy to the suffering little children of Ontario.

PRICE OF BOOKS AND SUPPLIES

The secretary of the Board of Education read a report to the members at their meeting last night in regard to the books and supplies account.

The report shows that to date, and since the system was adopted, in 1903, there is a deficit of $680.97, the explanation of which is that the charge to the pupils for their books and supplies is under, and not above the cost of same to the Board.

$40 FROM LITERARY.

Mr. Crane notified the Board that the Literary Society of the Collegiate Institute, out of their own funds, had made a contribution of $40 to the Institute, and with this amount pictures and hangings had been hung on the walls in the rooms of the Institute.

"It is a extremely nice thing to do and is a step in the right direction," commented the chairman.

All the members thought so, too, and the secretary was requested to write the Society, and express the appreciation of the Board.

A NICE BALANCE.

Mr. Fair reported that the Property Committee had a balance of $811.15. The appropriation at the first of the year was $1600.

INSPECTOR'S REPORT.

Inspector Mowat reported that the changes at Queen Alexandra, King Edward and East City schools, in regard to the principals had been completed with as little interruption as possible. Mr. Pickering, of Toronto, was in charge of East City school as a substitute, till Mr. Park, the appointment of the Board, commenced his duties at the first of the New Year.

The report was received and the Inspector's action in securing Mr. Pickering was approved and confirmed.

HOSPITAL STAMPS.

Mr. Crane, speaking for a representative of the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives, asked that the Board approve of the teachers in the schools being supplied with stamps to be sold to the pupils.

The money received goes to the Hospital. The price of the stamps vary. The customary practice is to use them on the backs of envelopes and parcels.

The Board gave their approval in the matter.

A communication re the boiler inspection was referred to the Property Committee with power to act.

G.T.R. Elevator and Powell Coal Sheds Destroyed at Port Dalhousie---St. Catharines Fire Brigade Arrived Too Late.

Port Dalhousie, Dec. 7.—The Grand Trunk elevator was totally destroyed by fire this morning at 2.30 o'clock along with Powell's coal sheds and and other small buildings belonging to the Grand Trunk. The station building caught fire, but was only partially damaged.

The loss will exceed $100,000. The cause of the fire is unknown as yet. The town has no fire-fighting apparatus and consequently nothing could be done to save the elevator. The St. Catharines brigade responded to a call for help, but when the reels had made the four miles trip the fire was beyond control. The burned elevator was empty.

THE DEATH WATCH

Has Been Placed on James Gorham, Sentenced to be Hanged on January 31st—Condemned Prisoner Will be Guarded Till Sentence is Either Commuted or Carried Out—Gorham Seems to be as Much at Ease as Ever.

James Gorham, the young man sentenced to be hanged on January 31st, 1911, for the murder of his mother, is now confined to the death cell in ward 4, of the Peterborough county gaol, and is constantly under the guard, day and night, of Death Guards Armstrong and Christopher. The condemned youth was placed in the death cell immediately upon the passing of sentence by Chancellor Boyd and will remain till the sentence has been commuted or carried out, as the Department of Justice at Ottawa decides.

He seems quite at ease under the new and more rigid restrictions.

LOOKING FOR SITE FOR THE BONNER-WORTH CO. PLANT

Mr. Isaac Bonner, of the New Firm, in the City To-day for That Purpose—Heads of the Company Practical and Experienced Men—Firm Will Operate in a Field That is Not Overcrowded.

Mr. Isaac Bonner, of the Bonner, Worth Company, the new firm which is desirous of locating in Peterborough is in the city to-day for the purpose of selecting a site.

Messrs. Bonner and Worth are young men of a large practical experience both in a business and technical sense in the work in which they are engaged. They are connected with the Paris plant of Penman's Ltd. Paris, manufacturers of hosiery, woven and knit work, etc.

Mr. Bonner has been with the firm eight years as manager of one of the mills and head of the cost department and in other responsible offices and Mr. Worth is manager of the company's worsted spinning plant. Worsted spinning will be the line of activity the Bonner Worth Company will take up and they will operate on a very comprehensive scale, manufacturing a wide variety of yarns.

This field of manufacture is one that affords much opportunity in Canada as the manufactories in the Dominion don't nearly meet the demand, 90 per cent of the yarns being imported from Great Britain.

Industrial Commissioner Duggan stated to the Review to-day that the fullest investigation had been made as to the financial worth of the company and everything in this connection was found thoroughly satisfactory. Mr. Bonner and Mr. Worth will subscribe one-third of the capital themselves and their associates are business men of excellent standing.

LECTURED ON SOUTH AMERICA

Rev. E. T. Fox, of Toronto, who for some years has occupied the position of treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board lectured in Murray St. Baptist church last evening on South America. The evening was under the auspices of the Willing Workers' Society of that church and the attendance was encouraging.

By the aid of limelight views, thrown on the canvas by Mr. H. O. Fiske, the lecture was made more vivid and the views of the various parts of South America were profusely illustrated.

The country itself is one rich in historical connections, and recent travellers there have found the study of the people, the language and morals of the inhabitants to be one of absorbing interest.

South America is one of the oldest countries in the world. It was the scene of many conflicts in the days when the Spanish leader, Pizarro, came over and conquered the Indians and cruelly massacred them. In the neighborhood of Peru is an immensely rich mine, which the Spaniards were never able to discover, and which has never been discovered.

The people of the country are of a rather low type, without any ambition, although in the past they were an industrious and intelligent race, as shown by the remarkable architecture.

The climate during the day is very hot, but in the evening it becomes very chilly, and a heavy overcoat is none too much clothing for that time.

Some remarkable idols are found in the country, the work of the natives in preceding years. The scenery of the country is one of the prettiest in the world, and the houses and sacred structures are artistically constructed and of very beautiful architecture.

The city of Lapas, the capital of Bolivia, is situated in a very pretty valley at the foot of a cliff fifteen thousand feet in height, and descending in a sheer drop.

The formation of the land, the condition of the people, and many other interesting matters concerning the country were told by the lecturer in an entertaining manner.

Rev. Mr. Fox has travelled extensively in South America, and is perfectly familiar with the country. His address was much appreciated.

$25 FINE IMPOSED ON PROCURER FOR "LISTER"

The procurer of liquor for a blacklister was fined $25 to-day by Magistrate Dumble. The "Indian" paid the fine.

The blacklister, who was charged in the police court last week with having violated the law, gave the names of two men who supplied him whiskey.

He was called again this morning, but could not say to a certainty that the defendant knew him to be on the list. He would not go any further than saying that "he thought he knew," and "he supposed he knew."

Inspector Stewart brought the examination up to a date when the witness was taken to his home in an intoxicated condition.

The answers were not satisfactory and the inspector asked for an enlargement to allow of the blacklister's wife being brought into court.

Witness didn't like the idea of his wife being asked to attend court, and offered that the accused would plead guilty to the charge.

This plea, however, was not made, but the defendant went into the box and, after some sharp questioning by Inspector Stewart, admitted that previous to Tuesday, November 29th, when he purchased a flask of whiskey for the lister he had been told by the proprietor of a hotel that "he should be careful, as the man was on the list."

Judgment in the case of the blacklister for his offence will be given by his Worship on Saturday.

CHRONIC CATARRH NOSE AND THROAT

"At the Advice of Friends I Tried Pe-ru-na and the Results Have Been Highly Satisfactory." — So Writes Mr. Pilon.

MR. RAOUL PILON

MR. RAOUL PILON, 116 Rue Notre Dame, Lachine, P.Q., Can., writes:

"I write you a few words to express to you my satisfaction at being cured. I was afflicted with catarrh of the throat and nose and suffered much. I was greatly discouraged. I had a bad breath and a bad taste in my mouth in the morning.

"I took treatment for some time without obtaining relief. At the advice of friends I tried the Peruna and the results have been highly satisfactory. At the end of four months I was completely cured."

Neglected catarrh becomes chronic. Having developed into the chronic stage, a longer and more persistent treatment will be required to cure it than if the disease were treated at the onset.

However, Peruna generally brings relief, whether the catarrh is acute or chronic. If you are wise you will keep Peruna on hand and take a few doses at the first appearance of a cold or cough, and thus perhaps save yourself both suffering and expense.

Peruna is recognised the world over as a standard remedy for catarrh. A multitude of people have been benefited by it.

CUTTER WAS OVERTURNED

An employee of a local Telephone Company, while driving at the corner of George and Perry Streets yesterday morning, was upset. The horse took fright at a passing street car and reared, turning the cutter over and throwing the driver out into the road. With great presence of mind he managed to retain his hold on the reins and bring the animal to a stop. Beyond a bad shaking up the young man was none the worse for the affair.

THE PASSING OF THE LEADER

Toronto News.

In all probability the passing of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy marks the beginning of the end for Christian Science. So long as the founder lived, the cult had a definite personal focus in Boston. Now that she is gone her sustaining and restraining influence will be missed and the factions amongst her followers, apparent even during her life time, may be expected to gain headway. A materialistic age is always credulous, and hence the acceptance of a frantic doctrine by thousands of people who pretend to some intellectuality. Certainly a superhuman amount of intelligence would be required to elucidate the mysteries of Mrs. Eddy's writings. The propaganda for which she was responsible robs Christianity of its spirituality and reduces it to the level of a quack medicine. It is a dangerous narcotic rather than a healthy stimulant. The half truth upon which its ephemeral success has been largely built lies in the sympathy between a nervous person's mental attitude and his physical condition. It is safe to say, however, that the old orthodox faiths brought, and still bring, more strength and sustaining force to people with neurotic tendencies than Mrs. Eddy's patent medicine religion even can. In keeping qualified physicians from the sick bed, Christian Science has been responsible for many deaths. In the opinion of most its influence is doomed steadily to dwindle from this time forth.

The Town of Wainwright

Advices received at the Grand Trunk Pacific offices state that there is an excellent opening at Wainwright, Alberta for a flour mill. The local consumption of flour is a carload a week. There is plenty of water and cheap fuel, and the district produces the best hard wheat.

To show the growth of a town in Western Canada, it is stated that Wainwright, Alberta, which is not more than two years old, are negotiating for a $5,000 steam fire engine. They have also authorized the employment of an engineer to run the level of the entire town preparatory to the installation of a complete drainage system.

SPORTING NEWS

NEW LEAGUE TO MATERIALIZE IF—

Ottawa Citizen.

"Unless our terms are accepted within the next forty-eight hours and every man of last year's team signed up, the proposed new league will certainly come into existence."

Capt. Bruce Stuart of the Ottawas made the foregoing announcement to the 'Citizen' when questioned last evening as to the hockey situation. Many people seem to be under the impression that the players are "bluffing," and that their new association is a matter of fancy. It is not, however, Stuart, Walsh and Lake being in touch last evening with those who are backing the league in the Montreal end. It now develops that there is a strong probability of a fifth team being entered. The Ottawa players have learned where they can get another team, and have arranged for an interview this afternoon. Manager Cossitt, of the Brockville rink, who has applied for admission, wired last night informing Albert Kerr that he had already landed three or four good men. The Island City sports are counting on a very strong septette and are dickering with two or three players who figured last year on one of the fastest amateur teams in the Ontario Hockey Association.

"We were approached to-day by six or seven influential sporting men who offered to aid us in every possible way," said Capt. Stuart. "Of course if the Ottawas offer to talk business we are willing. But we must know where we are at once. No, we are not worrying about rinks. You never yet saw a rink company pass up a league which means money to them. You admit also that the league that gets the players will draw the patronage. Well, can you beat this list of drawing cards!" And Bruce ran off a number of names of prominent Montreal and Ottawa players. He says that both Billy Gilmour and Horace Gaul have thrown in their lots with the "hold outs," both, he says, declining to act as 'strike-breakers." Stuart predicts a repetition of last season's hockey sensation when the National sprung into existence and knocked the Canadian League higher than Wilbur Wright's aeroplane ever climbed.

The Wanderer "rebels" say that they will eventually get the arena. Their main worry just now is about the league, which will, in the event of an armistice being organised on the meantime, be organized onThursday. Prominent sportsmen, who until recently were members of the Ottawa Club, are mentioned in connection with the new team. The Ottawa players, like Wanderers, are said to have deposited money to stick together and will, it is said, refuse to gether and will, it is said, refuse to go back to the National Association under any conditions or at any price.

The Ottawa players assert that Mr. Ambrose O'Brien, the Renfrew magnate, controls three or four franchises in the National and that it is only his interests in the present league and his desire to dispose of such at par that forces Renfrew to stick by the salary limit organization. That they will do this is certain from a a statement credited to Mr. O'Brien yesterday, who said, "Renfrew will remain in the National. If it goes down Renfrew goes down too."

BURRITT AND CRANE OUT WITH SIMCOES

Yesterday's Toronto News has the following of local interest:

Some of those who were out last night with the Simcoes were: Lapp who played left wing for St. Helens last season, and one of the best wing men in the junior O. H. A.; Burrett, a speedy youngster from the Peterboro' Strathconas; also Crane, a coverpoint, from Peterboro.

Origin of Kilts.

It will doubtless surprise many Scotchmen to learn that the kilt as at present worn is only a modern fancy costume and is not of Scottish origin at all. The honor of its invention is due to two Englishmen—an army tailor who accompanied Gen. Wade's forces to Scotland in 1719 and Thomas Rawlinson, overseer of some iron works in Glengarry's country. For more than a century previously, indeed, the tartan plaid had been the common garb of the highlanders, but it was all in one piece, wound in folds around the body, leaving the knees bare. Prior to the adoption of the tartan, which probably took place about the close of the fifteenth century, the long, loose saffron colored skirt, the real "garb of old Gaul," was the highland dress.—London Mail.

"CATCH MY PAL" UNION.

A Temperance Movement That Is Sweeping Great Britain.

Great Britain and Ireland are now being swept by a strong temperance movement which is being directed by the Irish Protestant Total Abstinence Union, or, as it is better known, the Catch My Pal Society. Its origin was singular.

July 13, 1909, Rev. R. J. Patterson, LL.B., a Presbyterian clergyman in the city of Armagh, happened to pass a lamp post around which stood six men, some of whom were recovering from the effects of a drinking bout the day before. One of the men suggested half in jest to Mr. Patterson that he should try and induce his companions to take the pledge. A conversation followed, and the six men promised to go the manse three days later as the curfew rang and take the pledge. The men carried out their undertaking, signed the pledge, and the union became an accomplished fact and grew rapidly.

From Ulster the organization spread to other parts of Ireland, and now branches are to be found south, east and west. Then the channel was crossed, and several of the large industrial centres in Scotland came under the influence of the movement. branches being formed in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Paisley and other towns.

The churches have taken a very laudable part in this organization and have worked tirelessly in promoting the cause.

The wonderful effect of the movement has surprised even those who hoped most from it. In many cases hardened drunkards have become the best pledge keepers and the anxiety of the quondam inebriate to reform his boon companion has stirred the emotion of the most phlegmatic onlooker. The result is that in every town there are at least a score of members who, in the past deemed to be hopeless slaves of drink, are now living as respectable citizens. Moreover, trade has revived. Men are now paying their debts. Children are being better fed and clothed and a higher standard of living prevails among the people.

The Dominion Coal Company's output for November was 325,000 tons.

OLD TIME SEA PUNISHMENTS GRIM AFFAIRS

There is probably no code of manners and customs so encrusted with tradition as that of the sea. In our own service we can trace the first code of naval laws back to the time of Richard I. When that monarch was, for the first recorded time, leading a British fleet in the Mediterranean he issued a series of "lawes and ordinaunces for his Navie," one of which laid it down that if any mariner was found gambling he should be dipped into the sea every morning for three days—"after the manner of seamen."

In other respects it was an eye for an eye in those days. A man who killed another was to be tied to the dead body and thrown with it into the sea, while if the deed was done on land the murderer was to be buried with his victim. A man who drew a knife on another was to "loose his head," while if the blow was struck with the hand, three morning dips—which were probably keel-hauls—were provided.

But perhaps the most interesting of these punishments is that which is thus recorded in Hakluyt's Voyages: A thief or felon that hath stolen being lawfully convicted, shall have his head shorne, and boiling pitch poured upon his head, and feathers or downe strawed upon the same, whereby he may be known, and so at the first landing place they shall come to, there to be cast up."

In several other directions Richard codified the maritime laws of the country, his regulations being uniformity marked by a laborious effort to "make the punishment fit the crime." One of the customs of the time was that if a ship was wrecked on the foreshore of a private land-owner, a third or a quarter of the value of the ship and cargo went to the owner of the land. The result was that if any captain or pilot sought to get into the good graces of one of these men, he tactfully threw his ship aground on the coast of his domain. Richard determined to put a stop to this source of wealth of the barbarons; so he decreed that if such practices ever come to light the guilty one was to be tied to a stake in the middle of his house, which was then to be set alight at each corner.

It is in Drake's time that we first come across a regular court-martial. Doughty, one of his captains was accused of conspiring against the admiral's life; and at "a general court holden for the service of her Majesty aboard the Elizabeth Bonaventure." Doughty was condemned to death. From this time onwards the court-martial became the regular and recognized method of dealing with offences against naval discipline and infringements of the "Fighting Instructions"; but in many cases the punishments were bizarre. In 1653 there was a mutiny in the ship Portland at a time when we were at war with the Dutch; and among other corrections—including the death sentence—three men were condemned to stand for an hour with halters round their necks and their right hands nailed to the mainmast.

Meanest Traders in the World.

There is a colony of merchants in Kingston, the capital of Jamaica, who can give cards and spades even to the bland Chinaman "for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain." They take one match out of every box they sell until they have enough matches to fill another box and so make an extra cent. They shave tiny flakes off cakes of soap and boil them down to make other cakes. They put a thin layer of molasses on the bottom of the scoop with which they serve rice so that a few grains will stick to the bottom. These are only a few of their thousand tricks to turn a dishonest penny. Without doubt they are the meanest traders in the world.

Dear Sirs: I must say that DR. PORTER'S ANTISEPTIC HEALING OIL is one of the greatest remedies known to me. I had granulated eyelids so badly it caused blindness for about six weeks. I got a bottle of DR. PORTER'S ANTISEPTIC HEALING OIL and up to the time of this writing have used about half of it and my eyes are almost entirely well. I wish every body could know the value of DR. THE GREAT AERIAL CHRISTENING

HOW Frank Williams Contributed to the County Fair's Aviation Day Programme

BY ARTHUR MORGAN LONGWORTHY

WHEN the Prairie County Fair Association held its autumn meeting among other new features was an exhibition of model aeroplanes, particularly those built by the Prairieville club. Frank had counted, of course, on having his new airship among those exhibited when the fair opened, but to his rage and amazement his model was returned to him.

This was nothing but a piece of spitework on John Turner's part. When Frank told his father of Turner's petty meanness, Mr. Williams said it was the smallest thing he'd ever heard of and it but proved for the hundredth time Turner's title as the "meanest man in Prairie county."

Turner's property lay next the Williams farm. Friendly relations had been strained between the two families for years, and the old man was always trying to show his dislike for Frank or his father in some such way. For, unfortunately, John Turner, besides being mean, was one of the richest and most influential men in the county. He owned the majority of stock in the Fair Association, which accounts for the fact that Frank's exhibit was rejected. Thus Turner spared no pains to do Frank an ill turn, particularly as the boy was a special object of his aversions because Frank had won in many previous tilts with his enemy, some of which you may have read.

But the enterprising management of the fair went further than the mere exhibition of model airships. They decided to set aside a special aviation day, with numerous aerial features, among which was to be the "great aerial christening." Three firms that manufactured airships were to release three brand new airships, each to be christened with elaborate ceremonies "before speeding on their voyage heavenward," as the programme put it.

Frank took much interest in the coming aviation day. He pondered deeply on the various aerial feats advertised to come off, and still nursing his wrath against John Turner, finally evolved a plan of retaliation so daring it took his breath away even to think of it. The whole dream was so wild that it appeared impossible of success. He was about to regretfully give it up when George Rogers arrived. George Rogers was one of the best known professional dirigible aviators in the State, and Frank's acquaintance with him dated a year back, when Rogers had made ascensions at last fall's fair and helped Frank play his famous "aerial baseball" game.

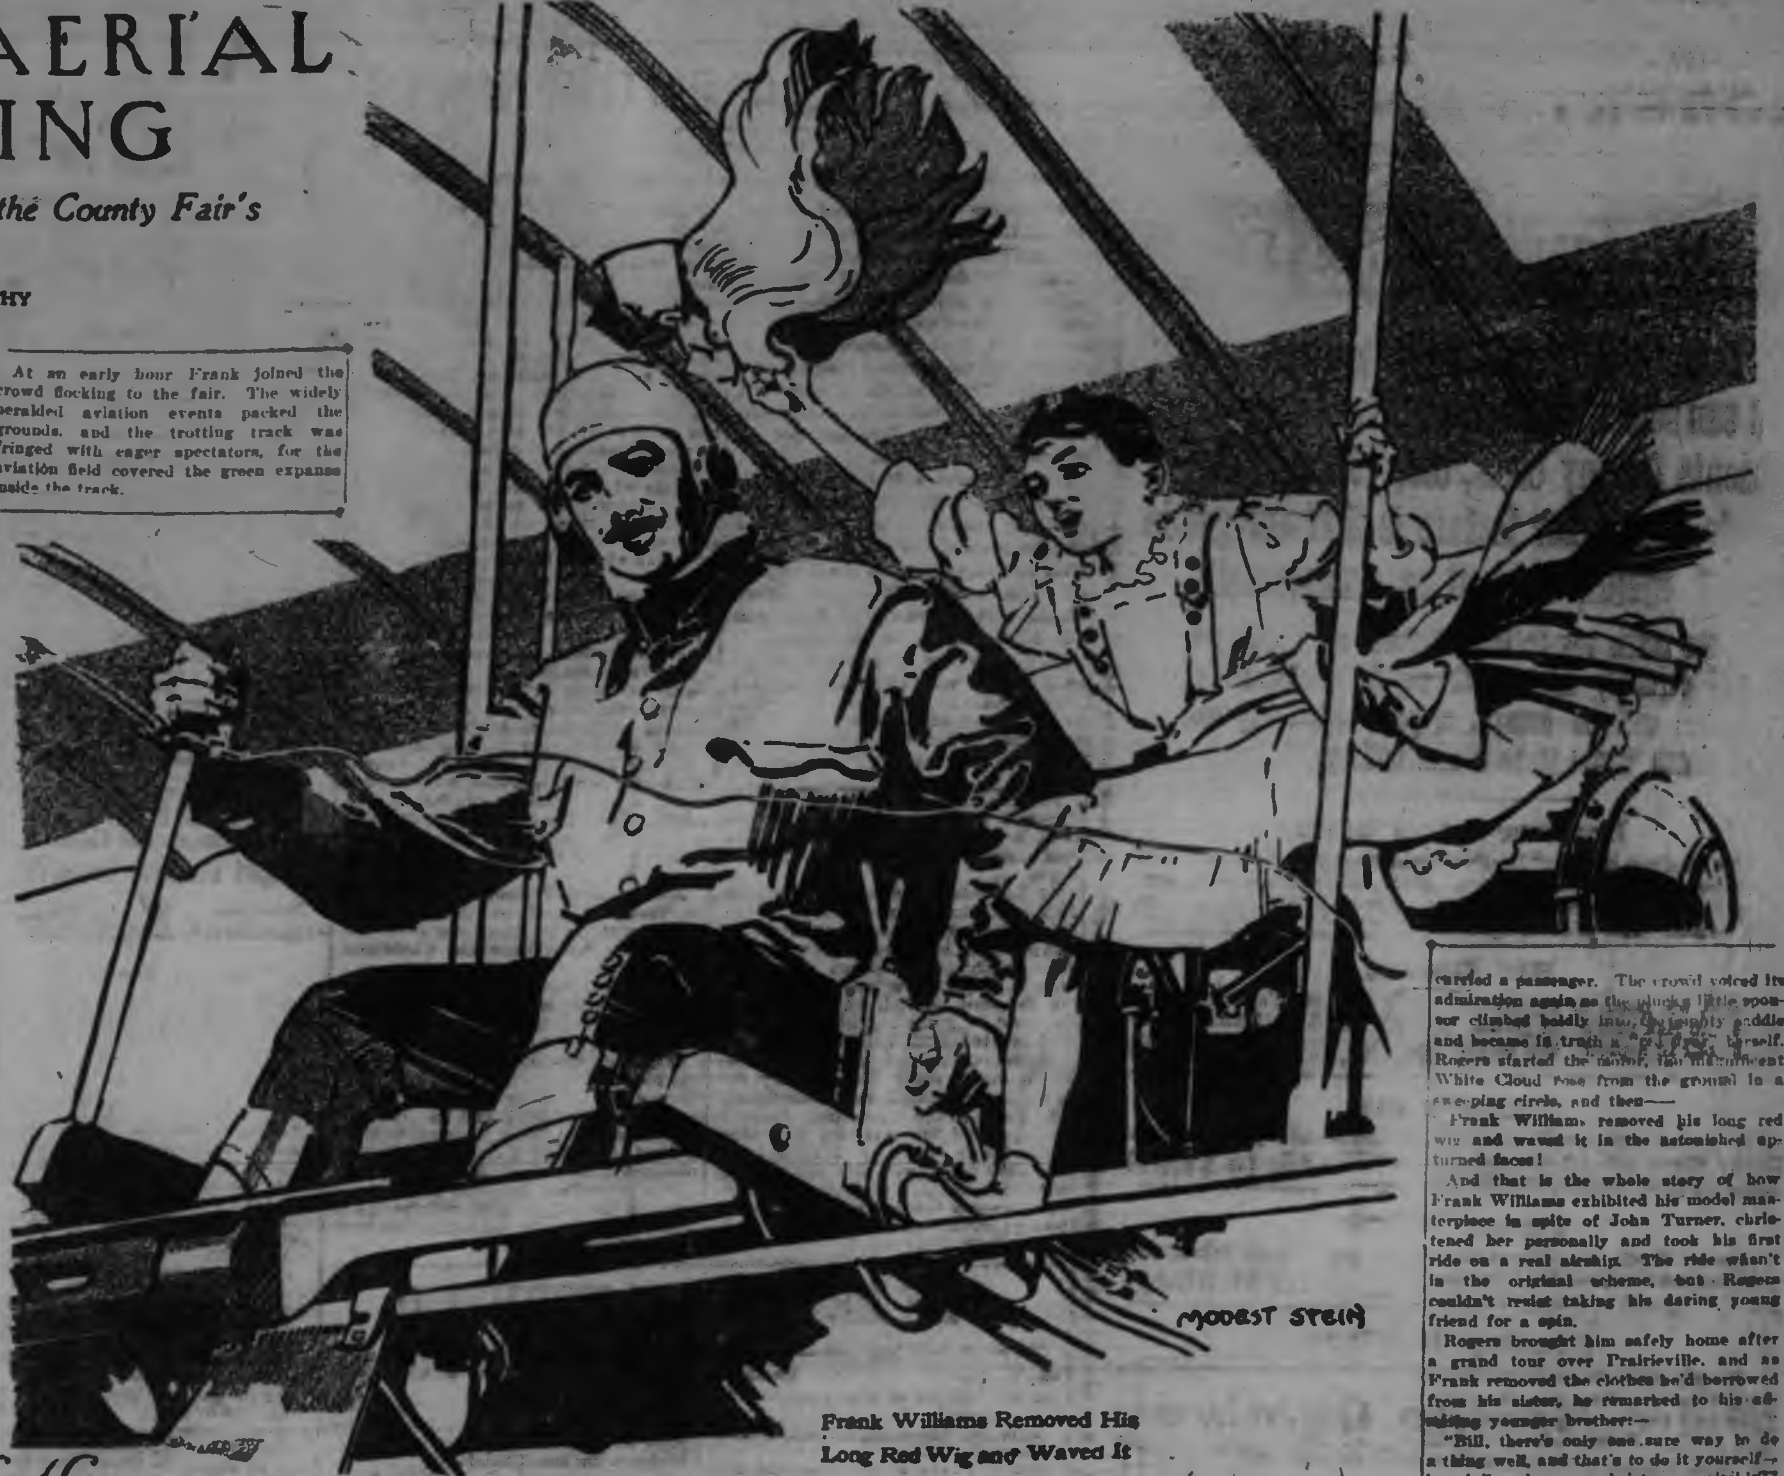
Frank lost no time in seeing Mr. Rogers, who was to handle the new aeroplane candidate for the christening. The boy aero builder told his aviator friend all about his troubles and what he wanted to do. Rogers grinned at the idea and shook his head rather dubiously at first, but as he had a genuine liking for Frank he finally promised to assist him if he possibly could.

Rogers even came out to the farm to dinner, which afforded him an opportunity to see the rejected aero. Frank had no reason to be ashamed of his production, for it was a beautifully modelled facsimile of the birdlike Santos-Dumont Antoinette type monoplane, 50 inches wide across the main planes. Of course the motive power was still generated by the old familiar rubber band motor, but the general excellence of construction was better than anything Frank ever turned out before. Rogers admired the red painted model so much, the fine impression it created went far toward enlisting his full co-operation in the plan Frank had laid before him.

And this accounts for the reason why Frank carried his "great unnamed" air craft to Rogers' room in the hotel next morning. The boy did not even see it again until—but first let me tell of what happened in the meantime.

Frank's next move was to see "Bob" Edwards, one of his close friends not among the model airship exhibitors. "Bob" had more nerve than almost any boy Frank knew, and it would take nerve to carry out the scheme Frank broached to him under seal of deadly secrecy. Perhaps a certain financial reward suggested by Frank in case of success had much to do with "Bob's" acceptance of his mysterious mission. Then Frank made several other preparations and retired to bed, but not to sleep—he was too excited, for the next day was Aviation Day.

At an early hour Frank joined the crowd flocking to the fair. The widely heralded aviation events packed the grounds, and the trotting track was fringed with eager spectators, for the aviation field covered the green expanse inside the track.



Frank Williams Removed His Long Red Wig and Waved It

The three "aerial infants" to be christened lay in the centre of this aviation field, in front of the grand stand. Frank sat in the stand, where he could watch every move in the field below. He stayed all the morning to see the thrilling airship flights, ate his luncheon on the grounds and returned for the afternoon session. The event that chiefly concerned him was the last to take place. Frank's face lit up as he examined the field: one thing was sure—George Rogers had succeeded in getting the aero into the grounds, and there it was before his very eyes, carried by "Bob," inside the roped off aviation field!

For the exhibitors of the model flying machines had been allowed to enter the aviation field with their machines. Frank had not counted on this advantage, which made "Bob's" part a good deal easier. Frank's original plan was for Rogers to smuggle in the aero and then use his influence to get "Bob" inside the lines. Now all "Bob" had to do was to pass himself off as one of the exhibitors, and as he carried the machine he was admitted without question.

Frank glanced at his watch. Nearly two hours remained before certain things transpired. Strange to say, the boy did not stay in the stand, but made his way out of the grounds. The young schemer had seen enough to satisfy him that all went well—so far.

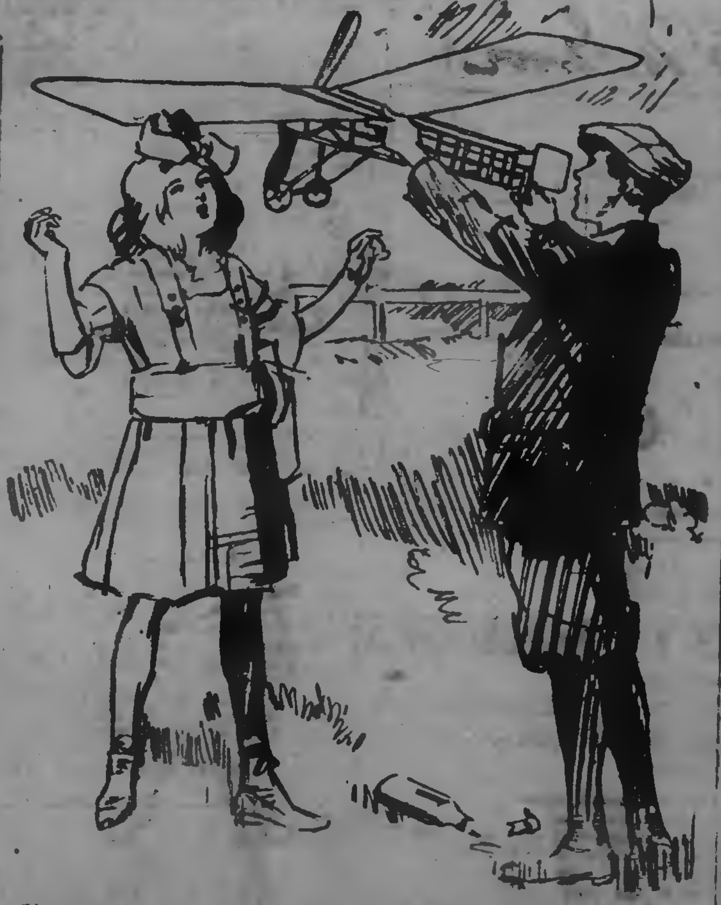
An hour passed, crowded with aerial features, but still Frank did not return. While the real flying machines were preparing for their various capers the model aeroplane exhibitors amused the crowd by flying their little machines about the aviation field. But Bob took no part in their fun, though invited to show what "his" aero could do. Bob was taking no chances of injury, for various reasons.

The last races of the afternoon were run; the crowd had its usual scare when one of the aeroplanes turned turtle and its pilot escaped injury by a miracle.

And now came the closing event of the day, the first christening ceremony. A large ordinary gas balloon headed the list. Its inflation was complete and it tugged at the ropes as if anxious to be off. The Christening Committee, composed of the fair officials, entered the aviation field. The president of the association made speech and then gallantly stepped over to one of the boxes in the stand, where he offered his arm to the first of the beautiful aerial sponsors (the young ladies who were to christen the airships).

He escorted the pretty girl, dressed all in white, across the lawn to the big gas bag, while the crowd applauded. The sponsor carried a large bottle decorated with a white ribbon and, taking a position near the wicker balloon basket, waited until the aeronaut climbed in. When all was ready the aeronaut gave the signal, and as the ropes were slashed the sponsor broke the bottle on the side of the basket, exclaiming:—

"I christen thee Jupiter!"



Shouted in a High, Shrill Voice:—"I Christen Thee Red Flyer!"

Ten seconds later the Jupiter was a hundred feet in the air, the crowd cheering frantically and the fair sponsor being escorted back to her box.

Precisely the same ceremony occurred with the big "dirigible" which became the West Wind. She headed her long cigar shaped bulk straight for the Jupiter, now a thousand feet in the air, and proceeded to do all kinds of tricks, flying over her, under her, diving and circling, while the crowd strained their necks and marvelled.

But where was Frank? Had he absented himself because he could not bear to see his plans fail? Only one more christening remained to be performed. George Rogers took his seat in the saddle of the splendid new biplane he was to pilot, and the last ceremony occurred; but, unlike the master of the West Wind, Rogers didn't fly to join the Jupiter.

The first trip of the White Cloud, as she was now called, was in a low circle over the aviation field. George Rogers didn't even look in the direction of his brother aviators. His attention was riveted as much as he dared to let it wander upon the scene directly below him on the lawn. And this is what Rogers saw:—

First Bob Edwards ran out into the centre of the now cleared aviation field. He'd hardly reached this position when a red haired little girl darted under the field ropes and dashed after Bob, holding a bottle in her hand. The crowd, just about to leave, paused surprised, for less than a minute had passed since the White Cloud was christened.

"See there! Another christening!" they shouted, laughing in surprise at the boy holding the little model and the girl with the bottle. The whole episode happened so quickly that it couldn't have been stopped if there had been an inclination to do so. The red headed girl tapped the side of Frank's machine with the bottle and as the bottle of water broke shouted in a high, shrill voice:—

"I christen thee Red Flyer!"

And Bob launched the Red Flyer into the air while the crowd repeated its applause louder than ever, for it made a merry climax to the grand christening bee. Even as the Red Flyer settled to the ground after a splendid flight of over 250 feet inside the arena another and larger aero returned to earth.

For Rogers came down to congratulate the little sponsor. Not only that, he invited her for a ride, as the White Cloud carried a passenger. The crowd voiced its admiration again as the plucky little sponsor climbed boldly into the mighty saddle and became in truth a "red flyer" herself. Rogers started the motor, the magnificent White Cloud rose from the ground in a sweeping circle, and then——

Frank Williams removed his long red wig and waved it in the astonished upturned faces!

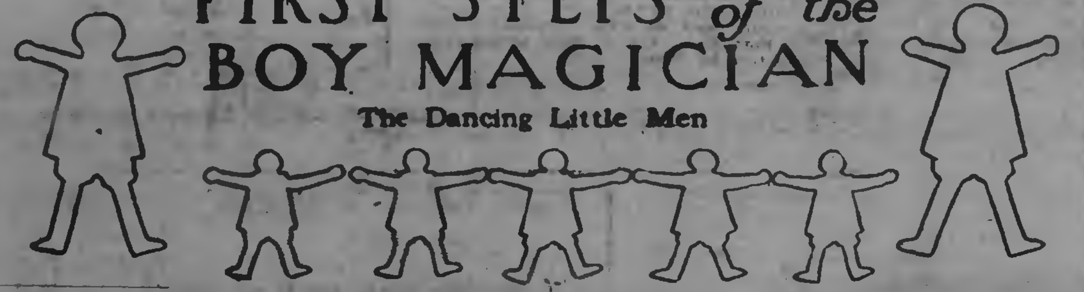
And that is the whole story of how Frank Williams exhibited his model masterpiece in spite of John Turner, christened her personally and took his first ride on a real airship. The ride wasn't in the original scheme, but Rogers couldn't resist taking his daring young friend for a spin.

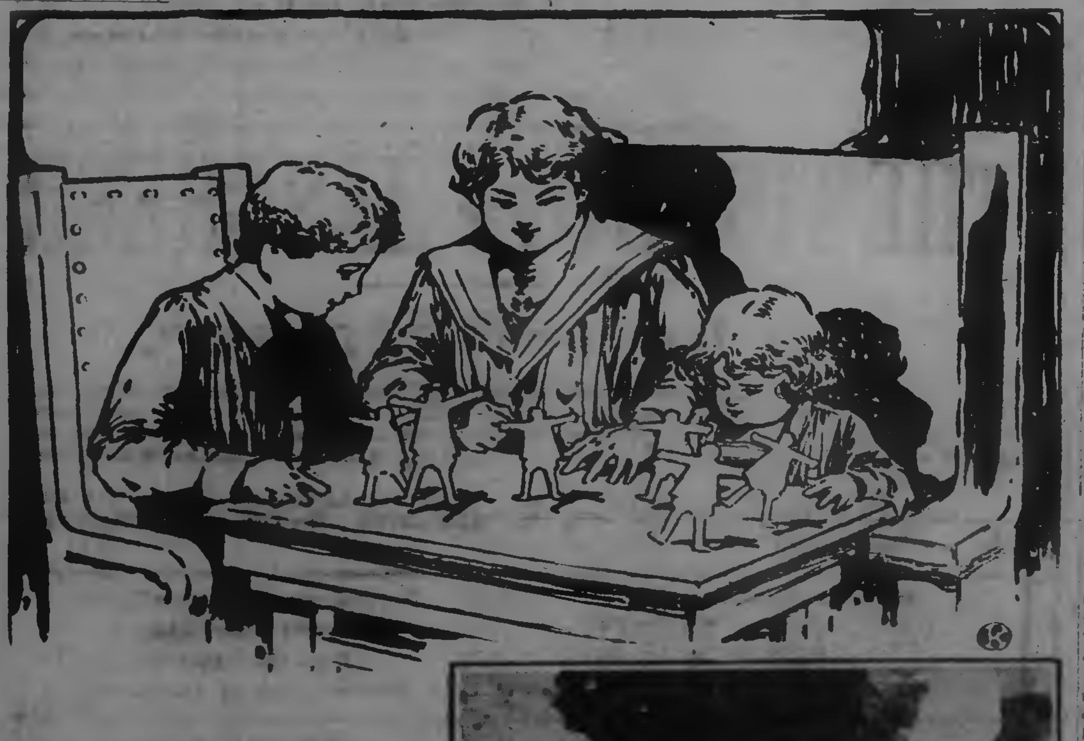
Rogers brought him safely home after a grand tour over Prairieville, and as Frank removed the clothes he'd borrowed from his sister, he remarked to his admiring younger brother:—

"Bill, there's only one sure way to do a thing well, and that's to do it yourself—'specially when you christen an airship!"

FIRST STEPS of the BOY MAGICIAN

The Dancing Little Men





FOR the amusement of one's friends in the long winter evenings it is a good plan to learn some simple tricks and experiments which one can do readily without too much preparation and with no paraphernalia except such as is to be found in the ordinary household at all times. Any boy who takes the trouble to learn how to do a number of these tricks or little experiments will find that he is much in demand for parties among his young friends and that the hostess is always grateful to him for helping to entertain her guests.

One of the most amusing tricks which one can do for the entertainment of very little children especially is making the little men dance, and nothing is needed for this trick but a piece of glass or a glass dish with a flat base, a couple of books and some little paper figures. The figures are tiny things cut from ordinary white paper or newspaper and they may be copied from those in the accompanying illustration or cut out in any fashion you desire.

Copyright 1909 by Henry Hill

First heat the glass dish or the sheet of glass, which is better than the plate if you can get it. Then place it on two books so that they will support it at both ends, as is shown in the picture. Place the little men under the glass and then rub the glass with the palm of your hand. The little men will begin to dance and frolic around in the most amusing fashion.

The books on which you have set the glass must be large enough to raise it high enough so that the little men will have room to dance freely. The secret of their activity is that the combination of warmth and rubbing applied to the glass generates a little electricity, which attracts the small figures.

The First Lion in America.

IN the year 1796 there were no steamships or railroads, but American ships could be found on every sea. In one of these ships, after a long voyage from the coast of Africa, in the month of September, a distinguished stranger arrived in New York. After concluding to remain for a short time he took up his residence in "The Fields," directly opposite Murray street, where he began to receive and entertain company. It is said he became very popular, until circumstances induced him to change his residence.

This distinguished stranger was a lion, and it is thought he was the first of his kind visiting New York, preceding circuses and menageries of all kinds.

The place of his exhibition was "The Fields," or what is called now the City Hall Park, New York city. In 1796 it was quite a different place from the park of to-day.

"The Fields" then extended beyond Broadway to the west and part way to Greenwich street. There was no City Hall or any buildings but a jail and poorhouse at the northern end. There were no trees or fountains. Only grass and some walks.

The lion was shown at a place called the "Ball Alley," in the west side of Broadway, where his royal cage was very large and commodious. The lion was a young one, and had been caught on the island of Goree, on the west coast of Africa. No doubt on the long voyage, as he grew up to some size and accustomed to human society, he doubtless continued for a time free from the disturbing vice of man eating common to his race. How long he visited New York I cannot tell.

From the yellow pages of the New York Gazette for September 24, 1796, I copy the following advertisement, verbatim:—

"TO THE CURIOUS.
"A BEAUTIFUL AFRICAN LION.

"To be seen every day, Sunday excepted, at the Ball Alley in the Fields, next to the corner of Murray street, in Broadway, where the proprietor has provided a cage, in which the lion moves at large and which exhibits him to the greatest advantage.

"Great attention has been paid in the choice of so pleasant a place and in the convenience of the enclosure to the accommodation of those ladies and gentlemen who may favor the proprietor with their presence.

"This noble animal is between three and four feet high, measures eight feet from nostril to tail, is of a beautiful dun color, between six and seven years old, and uncommonly strong built. His legs and tail are as thick as those of a common sized ox. He was caught in the woods of Goree, in Africa, when a whelp, and brought from thence to New York. He is tame as any domestic animal whatever, and is well worth the contemplation of the curious.

"Price of admittance, two shillings.
"To be removed the last of this month."

BARTENDER FINED $30 IN EACH OF TWO CHARGES

Sold Liquor to Two Minors—Magistrate Believed Story of the Two Boys—Counsel Gave Notice That Appeal Would be Entered.

Wm. Pearse a local bartender, was fined at the police court this morning in two charges of selling liquor to a minor.

It was $30.00 in each case with costs of $4.15 and $3.30 the same to be paid in five days.

Mr. G. N. Gordon representing the accused gave notice that an appeal would be entered.

The case was commenced yesterday morning when John Copperswaithe testified to having been served with eight or nine glasses of lager by the defendant. He gave his age as seventeen and swore that he had not been asked by the bartender.

Ross McCaul who was with him at the time did not appear in court, and an enlargement of the case was made till to-day. The chief made out a charge for selling to him.

McCaul in the witness box this morning stated that he was served with drinks on Saturday last. He was in company with Copperswaithe, and the bartender had not asked as to their age. He was seventeen.

DEFENCE EVIDENCE.

Samuel Atcheson, a boarder at the hotel, said he heard the following conversation:

The bartender said to one of the boys, "You'll get nothing here."

This was replied to with, "Then will you give me a cigar?"

Then to the taller of the two boys, Copperswaithe, the bartender asked, "What do you want?"

The reply was, "Give me a glass of beer."

"How old are you? Are you twenty-one?" asked the bartender.

"But you're —— life I am," was the reply.

"How much above twenty-one?"

"Nearer twenty-two than twenty-one."

Four other defence witnesses gave practically the same evidence. All swore that they heard the bartender ask Copperswaithe his age and that he replied as stated by Atcheson.

The defendant when called couldn't say as to the number of drinks served to Copperswaithe. All that McCaul was served with was a cigar. He might have been passed drinks by some of the others at the bar. He wouldn't serve McCaul, because he was certain he was under age, but witness felt he was justified in giving drinks to Copperswaithe after he asked him as to his age and being told that he was over twenty-one.

He had been a bartender for seven years and during that time had not been charged with a single offence.

Copperswaithe was recalled by the Chief.

It has been stated that you were asked your age by the bartender and your reply was "you're —— right I am?"

What do you say to that?

I can't remember if I was.

Where did McCaul get his beer?

Over the bar.

From whom? The bartender.

Did he get a cigar? Yes.

Is that the first he got? No, he was served with drinks before he got the cigar.

Witness explained on being questioned by the Chief that Gauthier, a witness who stated that he was beside McCaul when he was served with the cigar and also that the bartender then asked Copperswaithe's age, was not present when they first went into the hotel.

To Mr. Gorden—You knew you were not entitled to get the liquor? Yes.

You knew that in going into that hotel you were getting the bartender to break the law? I never thought of that.

To the Chief—You were sober when you went in? Yes. Sober when you came out? No.

McCaul was questioned again and to the Chief said that he was served with drinks before the cigar.

BREEZY BITS OF BRITISH NEWS

(By Percival G. S. Webb)

Just before the dissolution of the late Government, the Home Secretary announced that with the object of providing more frequent and thorough inspection of mines, thus reducing the number of fatal accidents in them, it had been decided to establish a new class of sub-inspectors of mines and quarries. Thirty of these posts will be created and will be filled by men who have actually been engaged as miners and quarrymen.

The ringleaders were sentenced to 21 days imprisonment.

"Now then Smith," the sailor hero of the Messina earthquake of two years ago has been drowned at Barnbury, West Australia. It will be remembered that at the time of the earthquake Smith's ship was anchored off Messina and at the words of the captain "Now then Smith" he rescued several women from the top storey of a tall building, which was on fire at the time. For his bravery the late King gave him a medal and the Italian Government also officially recognized his heroism.

Three girls met with a terrible fate in a fire which occurred at a Birmingham factory. The scene of the fire was the premises of Mr. W. Mr. and Mrs John Edgar of the North West are in Norwood at Mr. Napoleon Reynolds's. The Norwood pick and shovel society are organizing for their winter's doings, and already, meetings are being held laying out their plans of oeprations. It is understood that members are priviledged to carry fire arms while on the war path, but are advised that a shovel is much superior, as it is admitted that, to shoot a running fox is much harder than digging him out of his den after being driven there by three hounds and a terrier. One of the members of the club tried his luck a few days ago with a gun but gave up in despair after knocking his fox over three times, but was still unable to get him as he had gone out without the other, and more effective weapons named above. Any one wishing to join must have certain qualifications which will be made known on application at the head office of the company. We might mention two or three things required. You must be able to walk fourteen miles whithout stopping and carry your own tools and must always keep up a bold front and have unfailing patience as one fox for every fifteenth tramp is counted very satisfactory hunting. The first big day of the hunt will be on Christmas morning at seven. Every body come and bring his purp.

PARLIAMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

From The Pall Mall Gazette.

The Parliament House, Capetown, of the new Union Parliament of South Africa, is one of the most beautiful buildings in the world and was completed and opened for public use in 1885.

The principal front of the building is 264 feet in length and is divided into a central portico leading into the grand vestibule, the two debating chambers and pavilions. The portico is of massive dimensions and is approached by a commanding flight of granite steps which run around three sides of it.

The pavilions are revealed by groups of pilasters with Corinthian capitals and are surmounted by domes and ventilators. The whole of the ground floro is built of granite and the building above this is of red brick relieved by pilasters and window dressing of Portland cement.

Besides the debating chambers, which are 67 feet in length by 36 feet in width, (only ten feet in length or width less than the House of Commons,) there is a lofty hall with marbel pillars or tesselated pavements which forms the central lobby or grand vestibule. Adjoining this is the parliament library, beautiful apartment, 53 feet by 32 feet, with galleries above each other reaching to the full heigth of the building.

There are a number of committee rooms and spacious offices for the president, speaker and officers of the legislature. There are, moreover, refreshment and dining rooms, and not only smoking rooms but billiard rooms. There are likewise, roomy galleries for strangers, ladies, distinguished visitors and the press.

OPPOSITION DISCUSSES CASE OF COMMANDER ROPER

Mr. Brodeur Defends His Valiant Sea-Dog, But Sir Wilfrid Apologizes for Him—Position of Consuls Brought up and Premier Makes Explanations.

Ottawa, Dec. 8.—Canada's nucleus navy was under fire yesterday afternoon in the House of Commons. F. D. Monk (Jacques Cartier) in moving for information regarding the men engaged by the naval department, asked the Marine Minister if it was correct that the Rainbow had been discarded by the Admiralty before it was purchased by Canada. Hon. Mr. Brodeur said it had not.

Mr. Monk pointed out that he had got his information from the royal annual of 1907, which stated that the Rainbow, amongst others, had been struck off the list, and Mr. Brodeur retorted that the naval annual was not an official publication, and declared that the Rainbow was still on the Admiralty list as an auxiliary.

Mr. Monk then drew attention to public utterances made by Commander Roper in connection with the navy, who, he said, had been guilty of considerable indiscretion. On his arrival in Quebec, Commander Roper had been interview by La Presse, and had given his views regarding the naval question. Later, in Ottawa, he had attended a dinner, and had expressed his opinions freely regarding opponents of the Government's policy. He had deprecated the use of the word "Tinpot" as applied to the navy, which he believed had been used chiefly through ignorance or want of thought.

Mr. Monk demanded to know if the Minister approved of the conduct of Commander Roper in this instance.

Mr. Brodeur said the proceedings should be taken together. Commander Roper took the position that he had been attacked, and had the right to answer.

Mr. Borden said he had been present at the Ottawa dinner and heard himself described as one of a faction. Contempt had been poured upon him. The only thing, however, he had to say, was that Commander Roper had gone out of his way to criticize questions of policy, upon which he had no right to speak.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that, while he was not prepared to say that Commander Roper was justified, he thought that he might be excused. Mr. Foster was quite right when he said that the Minister alone was responsible. If an officer of a department felt that he had been improperly attacked, his only recourse was to go to the Minister.

Mr. Monk said it was evident that Mr. Brodeur lacked tact. This closed the incident, and the motion carried.

In answer to Col. Sam Hughes, who enquired regarding several items which appear in the Auditor-General's report as having been purchased at a tombola in connection with the Sacred Heart Church at Ottawa, the Premier said that these articles were bought out of the appropriation for the service of the House of Commons, and therefore did not come under the control of the Government.

Dr. Sproule, in moving for a copy of correspondence between the Governor-General and the Colonial Office, or between any member of the Government and the foreign consul-general, relative to the status of the latter at official functions, such as the vice-regal drawing-room, asked for a statement. The Premier pointed out that the status of consuls was at present undetermined and undefined.

"I have often taken the view," said the Premier, "that we are now a nation, and in fact we are in many respects. But we cannot have, under present conditions, diplomatic agents amongst us, other than the consular agents, who are entrusted by their Governments with commercial functions alone."

He thought that some official determination should be made, giving the status of consuls stationed at Ottawa. The motion passed.

New York, Dec. 8.—Sarah Bernhardt, the French actress, was shaken up, but escaped injury yesterday afternoon when her automobile, coming east through 65th street, crashed into a car at the Broadway corner. SHE ADMITTED STRUGGLE.

Hattie Leblanc's Statement After the Arrest Is Adduced.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 8.—Hattie Leblanc, at yesterday's session of her trial for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, was shown by her own statement, given immediately after her arrest, three days after the shooting, to have been in the laundry with Glover on the fatal night; to have seen the revolver in Glover's hand; to have struggle with him when he is said to have assaulted her; to have heard a noise in the laundry like the rustle of a woman's skirt, which also attracted Glover's attention; to have escaped from his clutches, and then to have heard a shot fired.

She declared in those statements, which she gave to the police in French, and which were interpreted to the police by Miss Zella Gallant, that she never shot Glover, that she did not know how to use a revolver, that she was angry at him for his conduct toward her, and that she had heard other people say that some one would shoot him. She did not know that he had been shot, or that he was dead, until after her arrest. She said that she ran back to the Glover house after escaping from the laundry, and remained three days without food, hiding under the bed, where she was finally found.

May Be McIntosh.

New York, Dec. 8.—A young man was arrested in New York yesterday afternoon, suspected of knowing something of the theft of 400 half-signed notes of the Canadian Government currency. According to the New York police the notes were stolen while in transit from the Government printing offices to the Traders' Bank of Toronto.

As an ammonia pistol was found on the prisoner, he was held on a charge of carrying concealed weapons, pending investigation.

It is supposed the young man is Edward McIntosh, for whom a warrant has been issued, though Supt. Rogers of the provincial police had not been informed of the arrest late last night.

TORONTO CITIZENS RIOT OVER NEW CAR SYSTEM

"Pay-as-You-Enter" Method on Street Railway Raises Storm of Protest and After a Huge Mass Meeting Mobs in Streets Wreck Cars---Many Are Injured and Police Make Several Captures.

Toronto, Dec. 8.—The worst spontaneous riot in Torontos history broke out last night to emphasize the sentiments of the city at large as towards the Toronto Railway Co.

For three or four hours after the Massey Hall meeting had concluded, street cars were the targets for missiles that wrecked many windows in over a hundred cars and broke plate glass windows in a number of downtown stores, as well as in the offices of the Toronto Railway Co. at Richmond and Victoria and at King and Church streets.

Six citizens had to go to St. Michael's Hospital for attention, due to injuries from broken glass and flying stones, bricks and frozen earth, and eight policemen were also injured.

Eight young men were arrested for throwing stones or dislodging trolley poles. They are charged only with disorderly conduct and with the far more serious offence of rioting.

The disturbance, beginning at Queen and Yonge street, spread to nearby corners, and then, as the crowds began to scatter, homeward bound, resulted in hardly less serious outbreaks at Queen and York, King and York, King and Church, Queen and Sherbourne and Sherbourne and Carlton streets. At 1.30 this morning a car was stoned at Queen and Bathurst streets.

When the Massey Hall crowd emerged a crowd of about 4,000, nearly all men, enthused by the address of the evening, were cut loose on Yonge street. As no one had anticipated that the "too docile public," as the mayor said, would suddenly become a raving giant and no extra police precautions had been taken, and, owing to the new schedule of duty, no reserves were available in the station. Consequently, the crowd was it for a while, almost immune from interruption the while they volleyed at the car windows. Unfortunately, little heed was paid to the passengers of the cars, and many women were in grave danger of serious injuries. Not a few prostrated themselves on the seats to avoid the shower of stones.

Then when the police did begin to mass at Queen and Yonge streets, and try to handle the crowd, they, for the occasion seemed to go about it in a much too gentle fashion. Certain it is, American police would not have hesitated to slam-bang with their clubs a great deal more freely.

Inspector Cuddy was the hero of an exciting incident at Queen and Yonge, when, after he had knocked out a rioter and was threatened by the crowd, he told them to back up or he'd draw his revolver. They fell back without further argument.

Before eight o'clock there was a fore-runner of the later events, when a College car, southbound, failed to stop at Shuter street, where many of the passengers wished to alight to attend the Massey Hall meeting. Instantly the bell cord was tugged so vigorously and at so many places that it broke, while somebody managed to pull off the pole, stopping the car, and putting it in darkness. In the rush to get out the fare receiver at the door was wrenche from the floor, while some windows were broken.

The meeting in Massey Hall was marked by the utmost excitement, and the speakers were continually interrupted by storms of cheers. Among those who addressed the gathering were: Mayor Geary, Hon. Thomas Crawford, Hon. W. K. McNaught, W. D. Macpherson, M.P.P., W. F. Maclean, M.P., Controller Church, Dr. Augusta Stowe Gullen, and Controller Spence. The following resolutions were passed:

"That this meeting of citizens records the emphatic protest against the Toronto Railway Co.'s disregard of the convenience and safety of the public, and its high-handed exercise of arbitrary power, in attempting to enforce regulations which cannot be carried out without annoyance and danger to passengers, most of the company's cars being unsuited, and the car service insufficient, for operation of the pay-as-you-enter system.

"That this meeting earnestly urges the Railway and Municipal Board to rescind the order approving of the Toronto Railway Co.'s bylaws, which have caused so much discomfort, danger and annoyance to the citizens, and calls upon the board and the Provincial Government to take whatever action may be found necessary to immediately stop, and entirely prevent, any recurrence of the indignity and inconvenience to which so many citizens have been subjected.

"That the railway company's unreasonable exercise, to the public disadvantage, of the power delegated to it by the Ontario Legislature, clearly shows the danger of entrusting a private corporation with such authority, and in the interests of the rights and liberties, as well as the safety and comfort of the people, that legislation ought to be repealed.

"That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Toronto Railway Co., the Railway and Municipal Board, and Sir James P. Whitney, Premier of the province."

ARE ON THE VERGE OF DESTITUTION

(CHICAGO GARMENT WORKERS' BAD PLIGHT)

Special to the Review.

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 8. — Settlement workers in close touch with the striking garment workers, declare to-day that 20,000 persons are on the verge of starvation as a result of the strike and the cold weather, and they fear bread riots unless the trouble is settled soon.

Thousands of the strikers are facing eviction for not paying rent and in many houses the gas has been shut off, leaving them without light or fuel.

The garment manufacturers have declined further arbitration, declaring they see nothing left to arbitrate.

Twenty-five thousand persons, thinly clad and hungry paraded through the down-town streets yesterday. The parade was followed by appeals for medical treatment as many of the strikers caught heavy colds in the cold march.

Fractured His Skull.

Belleville, Dec. 8.—Harris Bateman, G.T.R. cartapper, residing in this city, was struck on the head by a moving car, and sustained serious injuries Tuesday night. He is at present in the hospital suffering from a fractured skull.

Sir George on Reciprocity.

London, Dec. 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Sir George W. Ross has an article in The Morning Post on reciprocity. He says Canada wants the preference as a defence of the Empire against disintegration as the only remaining force whereby its permanent utility can be perpetuated, and asks, is British statesmanship equal to the task?

Established New Record.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 8.—Rene Barrier, a French aviator, established a world's record yesterday afternoon, when he flew a distance in excess of sixteen miles in 10 minutes 56 1-5 seconds, thereby winning a prize of $5,000 offered by the Memphis Commercial Appeal for the flight.

Charles K. Hamilton, in his heavier biplane, missed death by a hair's breadth. In an exhibition flight he had reached a height of 200 feet, when his motor went dead. Then he started to glide, eventually striking the earth with a thump, his machine a wreck, but his bones whole. Painful cuts and bruises about his face and body, however, he retained as a memento.

Will Be Redeemed.

Montreal, Dec. 8.—The Royal Bank of Canada has just received welcome news from Washington. "Some time ago, the bank's branch at Mayari, Cuba, was seriously damaged by fire," said Mr. William Botsford, local manager yesterday. "In the safe at that time were American treasury notes to the value of $50,300, which became so charred that it was impossible to handle them without running the risk of their falling to pieces. As we could not establish their value ourselves, and it was out of the question to send them to Washington for that purpose, we appealed to Mr. McCheney, U. S. Treasurer. The department lent the services of a young expert, Miss Elizabeth Smith, who went to Mayari, accompanied by her sister, a month ago, and word comes that the value has been re-established."

Wouldn't Dance With Japs.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 8.—Because society girls of Pasadena have refused to dance with officers of the Japanese training squadron, the plans for a brilliant ball for Rear Admiral Rokuro Yashiro and his subordinates have been abandoned. The Japanese admiral regarded the cancelling of the ball as a direct insult to his nation, so he cancelled invitations to the return dance on his ship, and refused to permit Long Beach school children to visit the fleet.

Several heavy fire losses are reported. The Rat Portage Lumber Co.'s mill at St. Boniface was destroyed and a big grain elevator owned by the Grand Trunk at Port Dalhousie was burned.

Twenty-three officers and men of the Egeria left Victoria last night for England. They have completed their service, and the vessel is being dismantled. It is likely the Egeria will be offered for sale by the Admiralty, as Canada is taking over the work of surveys.

Paris, Dec. 8.—Official advices confirm earlier reports that Lieut.-Col. Moll, Lieut. Jolly and two under officers were killed in the engagement between a French column and tribesmen in the Oualai region of Senegal, French West Africa. The French forces repulsed the enemy, but suffered severely.

The French column was attacked by 5,000 natives on Nov. 9, and the fighting lasted for an hour and a half, when the enemy was routed, leaving 600 dead and many wounded on the field. The French lost six officers and 28 tirailleurs killed, and an officer and three subalterns and 69 tirailleurs wounded. UNIONISTS IN YESTERDAY'S POLLING GAINED SIX SEATS

Lord Crichton-Stuart Wins in Cardiff for First Time in 25 Years—Waldorf Astor Surprises the Liberals by Carrying His Constituency.

London, Dec. 8.—The Unionists secured six gains in yesterday's pollings, and suffered a loss of only two seats. They thus return to the position held previous to yesterday's voting. The Unionist total gains for the last four days are eighteen, the Liberal gain eleven, and Laborite four. The O'Brienites (Nationalists) hold five seats.

The most notable Unionist victory was in Cardiff, which has gone Unionist only once in a quarter of a century. This victory was largely due to the personal popularity of Lord Crichton-Stuart, who overcome a Liberal majority of 1,555, winning by 299, and the withdrawal from politics of the old member, D. A. Thomas, who was replaced in the Liberal interest by Sir C. Hyde.

There was an even greater surprise, however, in the carrying of Plymouth by Waldorf Astor and A. Shirley Bonn, John Burns' old opponent in Battersea, who took Sir M. Durand's place as the running mate of the young Anglo-American. They proved a good team, and the work that Mr. Astor had done in the constituency was shown in his success in replacing C. E. Mallet, financial secretary to the War Office, who is the first Minister to be defeated. The Unionists also captured the Melton division of Leicestershire, and their other two gains were made from Labor. Dudley, which was consistently Unionist until 1906, returned to the fold, and Viscount Wolmer recaptured Newton, in Lancashire (S.W.), which Labor had held in two Parliaments.

Almost everywhere in the county the Laborites and Liberals voted, and the Unionists are more pleased with their gains here than anywhere else in the country.

The Government gets some comfort from London, all the districts of which are now polled. Yesterday the Liberals won Stephney, which was Unionist in the last election, and Labor gained Bow and Bromley.

The success of William O'Brien in Cork, and the possibility of his further increasing his following, somewhat complicates the situation. The Unionists are asking what the Government will do, if it has to face a stronger Unionist Opposition, with a strong fighting force of Irishmen on its flank. This fight between O'Brien and Wm. Redmond, the strongest candidates of the respective factions of the Nationalist party, to represent Cork City, resulted in a sweeping victory for O'Brien, who not only heads the poll with a majority of 638, but takes with him to the House of Commons Maurice Healey.

Altogether 64 members were voted for yesterday, but only 36 results were announced.

Speaking at Wrexham last evening, Mr. Balfour practically admitted defeat, and implored the Government, if it did not like tariff reform, to reconsider the whole situation before the next Colonial Conference, and suggest some other method of meeting the impending danger, which was dependent upon the position of the Government, and its obligation to "toe the line."

The situation was full of peril, unless they shook themselves free from Nationalist demonstration. It was clear that the nation could not be trusted in the keeping of the Liberal Government, and, he declared, before long another appeal must be made to the country.

Bonar Law will be offered a safe seat.

Played Fireman.

Halifax, Dec. 8.—The trial of D. M. Ferguson, charged with setting fire to the big Ferguson Block in Amherst recently, owned by Ferguson himself. A Close Vote.

Sherbrooke, Que., Dec. 8.—At a meeting of the Presbytery of Quebec held here Tuesday evening, the question of basis was discussed at great length. The vote, which was taken, stood at 10 to 9. Those opposed to the basis of union were chiefly ministers from the Scotch section of Compton County, where many are descendants of Highland settlers.

Both Feet Taken Off.

Fort William, Dec. 8.—L. J. Keating, telegraph operator of the C.P.R. lost both his feet by amputation here yesterday; they were frozen during a hunting trip two weeks ago. OTTAWA INQUIRY AS TO MAN WHO HANGED HIMSELF

Description Forwarded Does Not Tally With That of Dead Man---Gave His Name Emlie Taple---Had a Brother in Michigan.

Peterboro, Ont., Dec. 5.—The lifeless body of a young Englishman, whose name is not known, employed by James O'Hara, Cavan, was found hanging from a tree this morning about 8 1-2 miles from Peterborough. The circumstances point to suicide.

This morning Chief Thompson received the following inquiry from Ottawa relative to the above despatch, which appeared in the Evening Citizen:—

Mrs. Owen, care of Mrs. Way,
148 Hawthorne Ave.,
Ottawa, Ont.

With reference to the enclosed clipping: Is the person fair, fairly broad, thin face, top and bottom teeth artificial, average heighth, hair receding from the forehead, age 22 to 28.

If so, kindly communicate to above address. If you are not the proper person to whom I should write, I shall be glad if you will forward this letter to the correct quarter.

If this description describes the unfortunate man, I can produce this photo of the one I have in mind.

The Review called Mr. Archibald Reynolds, of Springville, over the long-distance to-day, but the description of the man given by Mr. Reynolds does not tally with that sent to Chief Thompson.

The Review's informant, who saw the man still hanging at the home of Mr. James O'Hara, stated that the deceased had brown hair, which covered his head. He would be about 27 years of age.

BROTHER IN MICHIGAN.

When he came to the O'Hara home he asked to be allowed to remain so that he might communicate with a brother in Michigan. He did this, being given the necessary articles, but received no reply. He had no money, and when his clothing was searched only some matches and tobacco were found. A trunk belonging to him, he said, was at the station on the line to Ottawa. His name he gave Emile Taple, and did not say anything about relatives, save his brother in Michigan. The body was cut down after time had elapsed and sent to Port Hope, and it is presumed, from there to Toronto.

SEPARATE SCHOOL BOARD

The regular meeting of the Separate School Board was held last evening, there being present Chairman J. J. Lynch, Rev. Dr O'Brien, J. Clancy, H. Carveth, J. Goselin and J. Murty. Rev. Father McColl, the superintendent, was also in attendance.

St. Mary's school reported 230 pupils on the roll, with an average attendance of 201.

St. Peter's school has 266 on the roll, with an average attendance of 254.

Accounts received—Kingan Hardware Co., $2.35; W. H. Hill, $30; F. R J. Macpherson Co., $4.45; Examiner Publishing Co., $2; Trebelcock Bros., $145.40; John Shannon, $4; J. J. Hoolihan, $3.85; E. N. Meyer Co., $56.65.

Mr. W. J. O'Brien was re-elected as principal of St. Peter's school for the year 1911.

Inspector O'Brien reported regarding his inspection of the several Separate schools in the city.

The secretary was instructed to make arrangements necessary for the nomination and election of trustees for the ensuing year.

Band Practice To-night

The 57th band rehearsal will be held to-night instead of to-morrow night, on account of a number of the bandsmen having to play at the opening of the Street Railway rink tomorrow evening.

GARBAGE AGAIN

It was late in the year when Ald. Duffus brought the subject of garbage collection before the Council at its last meeting, but better late than not at all. He should have received support, for if a scheme had been drafted, even if it had not been enacted this year, it would have been ready to be taken up early next year.

A complete system will scarcely be evolved in a day. It should not be difficult, but it will take a little time and some consideration. It should be ready to put into operation at least as soon as spring opens and before the hot sun begins to heat up the garbage heaps and breed the disease-spreading nuisances.

If the first steps had been taken this year there would be a ground for hope that next year an enemy of the house fly would have arisen into activity and that the health of the community would have been benefitted accordingly. The opportunity was allowed to pass. Another opportunity will come, next year if not this, and will it be taken advantage of, or will the people still have to suffer from the neglect and lack of initiative or energy of the authorities?

THE WEED

Consistency may be looked for and longed for, but scarcely be expected.

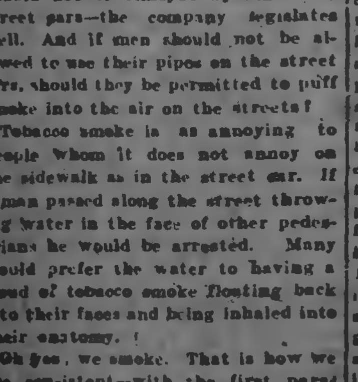
Canadian legislators voted that the cigarette is a bad thing and that its use should be discouraged. They impose a severe penalty on anyone who sells tobacco to a boy under eighteen years of age, in order to discourage the use of the weed. The Toronto street car authorities, after for years permitting smoking in specified seats, have prohibited it altogether on their cars, and the Provincial authority, the Railway Board, approved of the new rule. Here are distinct legislative acts—the Street Car Company can enforce its rule under the penalty of a fine—tending to discourage tobacco using.

And the Dominion Parliament has increased by $10,000 its appropriation to encourage tobacco raising in Canada.

Boys should not smoke—the legislators are right. Ladies and others should not be annoyed by smoke in street cars—the company legislates well. And if men should not be allowed to use their pipes on the street cars, should they be permitted to puff smoke into the air on the streets?

Tobacco smoke is as annoying to people whom it does not annoy on the sidewalk as in the street car. If a man passed along the street throwing water in the face of other pedestrians he would be arrested. Many would prefer the water to having a cloud of tobacco smoke floating back into their faces and being inhaled into their anatomy.

Oh yes, we smoke. That is how we are consistent—with the first paragraph of this article. But if a man enjoys smoking let him smoke, by all means, and enjoy it to the full, but not on the street to the needless annoyance of others.



THE NEW INDUSTRY

Two by-laws will be submitted to the electors for their approval at the time of the municipal elections. One is to give Mr. C. E. Dittman the right to lay mains on the streets to convey natural gas to the citizens should he succeed in finding it in sufficient quantity for that purpose in the vicinity of the city. The other is one to give aid to the Bonner-Worth Company, who purpose establishing a factory here.

The new industry will be one for the manufacture of worsted yarn. The two gentlemen who are promoting the establishment of the factory, Messrs. Bonner and Worth, have had considerable experience in the line in which they will engage here, and they very favorably impressed the members of the City Council and others who met them when they were here for several days preparing the way for the establishment of the factory.

The company which is to be organised and which will establish and conduct the business, will be authorised to capitalize at $100,000, and will have $35,000 of stock subscribed for and paid up. Of this sum it is understood that Messrs. Bonner and Worth will provide a considerable portion.

A site will be purchased by the company upon which they will erect the factory building. This must be completed and the factory running before the end of next year, but the promoters intended, if the weather would permit, to commence the construction this year and be ready to rush forward the work next year. Besides giving an exemption from municipal taxes for ten years, the city is, if the by-law is approved, to loan the company the cost of the site and building, but not more than $12,000. Half of this sum is to be advanced when the building is erected, and the balance after machinery to the value of $18,000 has been installed the factory has been running for a year and not less than thirty operatives are employed. This loan is to be repaid in annual instalments of $1,000 each, the first instalment at the end of a year after the last half of the loan has been advanced to the Company. The cost of the assistance the city is to give will be spread over from ten to thirteen years, depending upon the cost of the site and the building, and if the maximum sum of $12,000 is loaned, the first year the cost will be $270, the next $540, and then be reduced by $45 each year until the whole amount loaned is received back.

As to security, the city is to have a mortgage upon the Company's land, buildings and fixed machinery. There will also be the covenant of the company, which will have a paid up capital of $35,000. The provision that the first half of the amount to be loaned will only be advanced after the building is completed, and the second half after the machinery has been installed and the factory running for a year, ensures the bona fides of the company's operations before the city gives the assistance.

By the method in which the advances are to be made, the company will receive them only as it needs them. When the building is erected they will receive half of the loan, and that amount of their capital will be released to put into machinery or stock. And when the industry has got fairly going they will be given the other half of the loan when working capital will be drawn upon. By the time another year's operations have been carried on the business will be well established and returns coming in, and on the expectation that then the company will be in a position to begin repaying the loan the first payment is made due at that time.

The number of operatives to be employed may not look large in comparison with the number who find employment in the large industries of this city. It is to be remembered, however, that the number mentioned is the minimum number to be employed and that in making an arrangement like this manufacturers naturally desire to state a number below that which they expect to employ. Some manufacturers object to guaranteeing any number of employees. When the electric works, for instance, were first established here no such guarantee was given. The assurance is given that the new industry will have machinery installed at the beginning capable of giving employment to fifty operatives, and the authorized capital mentioned indicates that enlargements are looked for.

Industries of smaller size—and this one would look good in a great many places—are to be welcomed, for a few factories of the capacity of this one or smaller would make a considerable difference in the business of the city.

It is to be hoped that the electors will not evince any indifference on election day, but that every qualified elector who can reach the poll will cast his vote on the by-law.

EDITORIAL NOTES

At Lethbridge last summer Mr. E. M. Macdonald, M.P., speaking on the platform with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, told the people that they needed a post-office, but they would not get it as long as they voted Tory. This blunt statement of the Liberal policy of bribery by public funds so frightened the Premier that he promised the post-office, and the estimates brought down last week contain an appropriation for the building. Lethbridge can thank Mr. Macdonald's indiscretion for it.

Some times the money lender, and at times the druggist has been charged with exacting a large percentage of profit. But all have been outdone by a Toronto undertaker who charged $250 for a casket that cost him $41—charging 500 per cent. It is said that a sick man who was told that only an operation would save him, asked what it would cost, and on being told replied that "the undertaker would charge less." He had not heard of 500 per cent profit on caskets.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC DINING CARS

The volume of business which has offered on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway since their passenger service was put into effect last July, has necessitated the early increase of equipment, and the Canada Car Co. have turned out for the Grand Trunk Pacific three new dining cars, which are models of elegance and beauty.

The exterior length of the car is 82 feet, and the length of the dining room 32 feet 6 inches, the balance of the interior of the car being taken up by the modern kitchen, refrigerators and pantry. They are mounted on standard six wheel trucks. The platforms are of steel and the vestibule of the Pullman type. They are equipped with high speed quick action Westinghouse air brakes. The interior of the car is finished in plain and figured mahogany, with a harmony of colors that is pleasing to the eye. The cars are heated by steam, and lighted with electric light.

The dining room accommodates 30 people at one sitting. The floors are covered with handsome carpets of an exclusive design, and with a pattern conforming to the general color scheme of the interior. These cars are equipped with all the improvements and safety appliances that are known to modern skill and are the handsomest dining cars that have been turned out from Canadian shops.

They will leave for the west in a day or two, and will be objects of interest as well as supplying comfort to western travellers, and will be an addition to the already well known service that is being operated by the Grand Trunk Pacific in Western Canada.

Inter-Provincial Conference.

Toronto, Dec. 8.—Sir James Whitney, accompanied by Hon. J. J. Foy, left last night for Ottawa, to attend the inter-provincial conference. The Premier said that he thought the proceedings of the conference would be quite brief, taking probably not more than a day or two. There was only one question which might take up much time. That was in relation to the desire of the Maritime Provinces, especially Prince Edward Island, for a fixed minimum of representatives in the Dominion Parliament.

Sir James thought it likely that all the provinces would have representation at the conference, either by their Premiers or their representatives.

Imported Counterfeits.

Washington, Dec. 8.—A counterfeiting plot, extending over two continents has been discovered by the secret service. The climax of several months' detective work came Tuesday, when Chief Wilkie's men arrested George Paoletti, as he stepped from the steamer Italia, in New York.

The counterfeits had been made in Italy, it is alleged, by a gang whom the American authorities often have called to the attention of the Italian Government without avail.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Vindicating Secretary of the Interior Ballinger upon all the charges brought against him, and condemning his accusers as having been inspired by a deep feeling of animosity, built upon a supposed difference in policy respecting conservation, a majority of the congressional committee which investigated the so-called Ballinger-Pinchot case yesterday, submitted its report to Congress.

Chapter 33

ALL that day and the next night the fight was hand to hand without the opportunity of a breathing space. Then Orde bareheaded and disheveled, strung to a high excitement, began to be harassed by annoyances. The piles gave out. Newmark left, ostensibly to purchase more. He did not return. Tom North and Jim Denning, their eyes burning deep in their heads for lack of sleep, came to Orde, holding to him symbolically their empty hands.

"No more piles," they said briefly.

"Get 'em," said Orde with equal brevity. "Newmark will have enough here shortly. In the meantime get them."

North and his friend disappeared, taking with them the crews of the drivers and the two tugs. After an interval they returned towing small rafts of the long timbers. Orde did not make any inquiries, nor until days later did he see a copy of the newspaper telling how a lawless gang of rivermen had driven away the railroad men and stolen the railroad's property.

Orde was everywhere. Miles and miles he traveled, running along the tops of the booms, over the surface of the jam, spying the weakening places and hurrying to them a rescue.

Toward noon the piles gave out again.

"Where in h— is Newmark?" exploded Orde. He sent North and a crew of men to cut piles from standing timber in farm wood lots near the river.

"If the owners object stand them off with your peavies!"

Down river the various mill owners were busy with what men they had left in stringing defenses across the river in case Orde's works should go out. When Orde heard this he swore vigorously.

"Crazy fools!" he spat out. "They'd be a lot better off helping here. If this goes out their little booms won't amount to a whiff of wind."

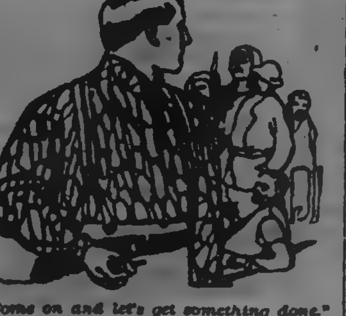
He sent word to that effect; but, lacking the enforcement of his personal presence, his messages did not carry conviction, and the panic stricken owners continued to labor, each according to his ideas. However, Welton answered the summons. Orde hailed his coming with a shout.

"I want a dredge!" he yelled as soon as the lumberman was within distance. "I believe we can relieve the pressure somewhat by a channel into Stearn's bayou. Get that government dredge up and through the bayou as soon as you can."

"All right," said Welton briefly. "Can you hold her?"

"I've got to hold her," replied Orde between clinched teeth. "Where in h— is Newmark? I need him for fifty things, and he's disappeared off the face of the earth! Purdy, that second cable! She's snapped a strand! Get a re-enforcing line on her!" He ran without another thought of Welton.

But flesh and blood has its limit of endurance, and that limit was almost reached. Orde heard the first premonitions of reaction in the wild grumblings that arose. Although the need for struggle against the tireless dynamics of the river was as insistent as ever, although it seemed certain that a moment's cessation of effort would permit the enemy an irretrievable gain, he called a halt on the whole work.



"Come on and let's get something done."

"Boys," said he irrelevantly, "let's have a smoke."

He threw himself full length against a slanting pile, leisurely filling his pipe. The men stared a moment and then followed his example. The horizon lay low and black against the afterglow. Beneath it the river shone like silver. Over beyond the rise of land that lay between the river and Stearn's bayou could be seen the cloud of mingled smoke and steam that marked the activity of the dredge. Orde was apparently more at ease than any of the rest, but each instant he expected to hear the premonitory crack that would sound the end of everything. Finally he yawned and got to his feet.

"Now," said he, a new ring in his voice, "come on and let's get something done!"

They responded to a man.

By midnight the water had gone down slightly. Half the crew snatched a little sleep. For several hours more the issue hung in equilibrium. Then, with the opening of the channel into Stearn's bayou, the heaviest pressure was relieved. For the moment the acute danger point was passed. Orde spent the next two days in strengthening the defenses. The men were able to take their quota of meals and of sleep.

The jam had been successfully held at the iron railroad bridge above Redding, but only by the most strenuous efforts. Braces of oak beams had been slanted where they would do the most good. Chains strengthened the weaker spots, and on top of all ton after ton of railroad iron held the whole immovably. Nolan had all the help he required. Every device known was employed to strengthen the jam. For only a few hours was the result in doubt. Then, as the Clarion jubilantly expressed it, "It's a hundred dollars to an old hat she holds!"

Orde received all this with satisfaction, but with a slight skepticism.

"It's a floating jam, and it gets a push from underneath," he pointed out. "It's probably safe, but another flood might send it out."

"The floods are going down," said North.

"Good Lord, I hope so!" said Orde.

Newmark sent word that a sudden fit of sickness had confined him to the house.

Now Orde decided to break out a channel through the jam itself. This was a necessary preliminary to getting the logs in shape for distribution. An opening was made in the piles, and the rivermen, with pike poles and peavies, began cautiously to dig their way through the tangled timbers. The government pile driver, which had finally been sent up from below, began placing five extra booms at intervals downstream to capture the drift as fast as it was turned loose. The troubles appeared to be quite over when word came from Redding that the waters were again rising. Ten minutes later Leopold Lincoln Bunn, the local reporter, came flapping in on Randall's old white horse, like a second Paul Revere, crying that the iron bridge had gone and the logs were racing down river toward the booms.

"It just went out!" he answered the eager exclamations of the men who crowded around him. "That's all I know. It went out! And the other bridges! Sure! All but the Lake Shore! Don't know why that didn't go out. No; the logs didn't jam there—just slid right under!"

"That settles it," said Welton.

"You won't quit?" cried Orde.

"Certainly. You're crazy!" said Welton, with some asperity. "If they can't stop a little jam with iron, what are your wooden defenses going to amount to against the whole accumulation? When those logs hit the tail of this jam she'll go out before you can wink. It's sure death, and I'm not going to sacrifice my men."

Already the news was spreading among the workers on the jams. Orde saw the government driver below casting loose from her moorings. A moment later her tug towed her away to a side bayou of safety out of the expected rush to the lake.

"But we can hold her!" cried Orde in desperation.

"It's no use, boy," said old Carlin; "it's sure death."

"Sure death!" Orde laughed bitterly. "All right; sure death, then. Isn't there a man in this crowd that will tackle this sort of sure death with me?"

"I'm with you." "And me," said North and the Rough Red in a breath.

"Good!" cried Orde. "You, too, Johnny Sims and Purdy and Jimmy Powers? Bully boys!"

"I reckon you'll need the tug," said Marsh.

A dozen more of Orde's personal following volunteered.

"We've got to close that opening first thing," said he. "Marsh, tow the pile driver up there."

The opening was to be closed by piles driven in groups of sixteen bound together by chains. The clumps were connected one to the other by a system of boom logs and ropes to interpose a continuous barrier. The pile driver placed the clumps, while the tug attended to the connecting defenses.

"Now, boys," said Orde as his last word, "if she starts to go save yourselves the best way you can. Never mind the driver. Stay on top."

Slowly the tug and her consort nosed up through the boiling water.

"Work fast!" Orde called to the men on the pile driver. "If we can close the opening before those Redding logs hit us we may be able to turn them into our new channel."

He did not add that if the opening were not closed before the jam broke, as break it would in a very few moments, the probabilities were that both pile driver and tug would be destroyed. Every man knew that already.

Tom North ordered a pile placed in the carriage. The hammer descended. The work went forward as rapidly as possible. Four times the jam shrugged and settled, but four times it paused on the brink of discharge. Three of the clumps had been placed and bound, and fifteen piles of the last clump had been driven.

"One more pile!" breathed Orde.

SCOTLAND YARD.

Its Council of Sleuths Is a Thing Dreaded by Evil-Doers.

In the great, rather grim, red-brick building which, like a medieval fortress, dominates the Thames, within a stone's throw of the Houses of Parliament, there is a large, barely-furnished room, which holds more secrets than any other in London, with the possible exception of the the room of Cabinet mysteries. It is the nerve centre of England's great and complex detective system, which controls the currents radiating all the world over for the discovery of crime; and it is in this secret chamber that the mysterious Council of Seven hold their meetings to unravel the tangled skeins of tragedy.

If walls could speak, the walls of this room could unfold stories of romance, tragedy, and mystery such as would drive the writers of fiction to despair; for there is no form of crime which has not been dissected and laid bare there in all its complex and naked hideousness. But walls are dumb; and so are the members of this secret Council, who recognize that silence is one of their most powerful weapons.

This Council has not long been in existence; in fact, it is practically unknown to the outside world. It is only a short time since it occurred to the authorities of New Scotland Yard that, in place of casual conferences between detectives engaged in the solution of some problem of crime, it would be well to appoint a body of their cleverest detectives—men of acute and astute brains, with long experience of crime and criminals—to combine their efforts in solving the principal mysteries; and, as might be expected, the plan has worked admirably.

The greatest care has naturally been taken in choosing men for this responsible work. It was important that the Council should, as far as possible, cover the whole range of crime. The detective who has specialized in murder or burglary may know little of, say, coiners and begging-letter imposters; and thus the leading expert in each of the principal branches of crime was chosen—men who know practically all that is to be known about their own branch and its professors, and whose names even are a terror to evil-doers the whole world over.

But let us see how this Council works. Suppose that a mysterious murder has taken place in London. Within a few minutes after it has been reported to the nearest police station the detective-inspector and his assistants are on the spot making investigations. Meanwhile the news has been flashed to New Scotland Yard; and almost before the local men have well commenced their inquiries a member of the Council—the man whose special province it is—appears on the scene and takes charge of the operations.

If the problem is a fairly simple one, as it often is, and the murderer is speedily run to earth, the services of the Council are naturally not required. But if there is no sufficient clue to the assassin, or he has made his escape good, the Council is at once summoned, and takes the case in hand.

All the available evidence is placed before it and thoroughly sifted, deductions are made, a plan of campaign is drawn up, and the whole of the complicated and far-reaching machinery of Scotland Yard is set to work under the collective guidance of the cleverest detective brains in England. How energetically and thoroughly the Council does its work has been shown in the recent Crippen case, in which a closely-meshed net was in a few days thrown round the world for the capture of the criminal.

John Was Stung!

Some time ago John Burns, M.P., who is nothing if not precise in his methods, had an amusing experience with a policeman whom he suspected of breaking the law. While out walking one day "Honest John" observed a constable in deep conversation with a man in civilian dress. Just as Mr. Burns was nearing the two the civilian suddenly drew something out of his pocket and handed it to the policeman. Scenting a disregard of the law against tipping in the force, Mr. Burns was quickly at the policeman's side. "Open your hand!" he demanded in stentorian accent. For a moment the constable hesitated and looked very confused. "Open your hand!" repeated the now furious Mr. Burns. Slowly the policeman obeyed and extended his open palm, revealing to the M.P.'s puzzled gaze neither a piece of silver nor even a penny, but—a large cough drop! The next moment "Honest John" had disappeared.—London Ideas.

PRIMATE OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Lang Is the Youngest Archbishop Since the Middle Ages.

Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York and Primate of England, is not only the youngest archbishop in Great Britain, but the youngest who has been raised to that dignity in that country since the Middle Ages. He is the son of Principal Lang, of Aberdeen University, who has acted with distinction as moderator of the Church of Scotland and as president of the Council of Presbyterian Churches. The son left Scotland, however, to enter Balliol College at Oxford, where he soon became noted as an athlete, being specially devoted to football. In his studies his interest in sociology and economics naturally led him into the debating field, and he won the honor of being elected president of the renowned Oxford Union, that training ground of so many great Parliamentary leaders. This position may well have been the turning point in his career, for later he was appointed secretary of a committee to investigate social conditions in London's East End.

What he learned by actual observation, combined with his academic interest in social questions, caused him to resolve upon a political career as the most effective way of bringing about the changes he thought were necessary. Soon after leaving Oxford he found that his income could not stand the strain of politics, so he turned to the law and entered the Inner Temple, London, although during the years of his reading there he found time to work for improvement in slum life. His friends naturally enough predicted a brilliant and useful career for him as a barrister, but after he had passed all his examinations he withdrew his name from the list of those to be called to the Bar. He had arrived at a final decision as to his life work and had chosen the ministry.

He soon received an opportunity to put into practice his plans for the betterment of the poor, for he was given charge of the large church at Portsea, near Portsmouth, where he found plenty of work for a dozen curates as well as himself in social service. Merited recognition of his labors came eight years ago, when he was appointed Bishop of Stepney, a district in London including many of the poorest quarters, where as a young student he had first become interested in the social problem.

From this squalid and rocky vineyard he was promoted to the archbishopric of York, where he draws a salary of $50,000 a year.

KNOCKED DOWN AND STUNNED BY RUNAWAY

Horse Ran on to Sidewalk and Cutter Collided With Pole, the Animal Falling—Fortunate Escape From Serious Injuries.

Mr. Edward Clarke is to-day congratulating himself on his escape from serious injuries last evening, when a horse attached to a cutter knocked him down on the sidewalk in front of China Hall.

As it was Mr. Clarke was stunned for some time, and after he was assisted into LeBrun's clothing store, Dr. Gallivan was called. Before he arrived, however, the victim of the accident had recovered, and was able to go to his home.

The horse came from Hunter street west, and in making the turn to go south on George street took the east side, galloping on to the sidewalk, the cutter colliding with a telephone post. This caused the animal to make a sudden stop and fall, knocking down Mr. Clarke, (who was unable to clear himself. His leg was caught under the body of the horse.

Dr. Blanchard, who was walking in front of Mr. Clarke, was more fortunate. He noticed the runaway and was prepared to act, according to the course taken by the horse. When it took the sidewalk he stepped out on to the road.

The outfit was owned by Mr. Chas. Scriver, of Smith. The horse got away from him in the vicinity of Green's Foundry, on McDonnel street. It took an easterly course, turning south on Aylmer street. Here an outfit driven by the young sons of Mr. Art. Johnston was struck, but not badly damaged.

BOY SCOUTS TO ASSIST

The Y.M.C.A. Boy Scouts are starting in on a campaign of relief for the sick in the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives, and at a meeting held in the Scout room last night about 30 scouts took out the Christmas stamps for sale at 1 cent each in aid of the hospital. They hope to raise the sum of $50.00 for the good work.

The collection of clothing, discarded toys, etc., for the benefit of the poor people and children of Peterborough was also arranged for, and we are asked to say that any citizens having any such articles to spare can help the work forward by sending the same to Scoutmaster Hodges, or 'phoning Mr. Tait, Boys' Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., who will arrange for one of the boys to call and collect them.

This movement is not confined to the scouts alone, but is extended to the whole boys' department of the Y.M.C.A.

Citizens, help the sick, help the poor and help the "Y" boys to feel that they have brought a little joy into some hearts that need it.

YOUNG MEN THROWN OUT OF SLEIGH---SOME RUNAWAY

Team Made Round Trip, the Overturned Outfit Being Righted en Route—No Injuries or Damage of Any Account.

The most spectacular runaway that has occurred in Peterborough for some time took place last night, and it is marvellous that some one was not injured.

A double seated cutter, drawn by a spirited team owned by Dr. F. H. Robinson, and in which were seated three young men, was proceeding out Charlotte street. At the corner of George the cutter slid on the hard icy surface, striking the groove of the street car track. The horses immediately bolted, turning the cutter over and throwing the three occupants into the road.

The young man who was driving pluckily hung to the reins and was drawn as far as F. R. J. McPherson's store. He was unable to rise to his feet owing to the slippery surface.

The buckle of the reins also parted and the team then had a free course. They took advantage of it and made a rapid run up George street as far as Hilliard street, then over on to Water, down Water to Edinburgh, over to George again and right down George to the south of the city, where they were caught. On the way up George the cutter was on its side, but righted itself on the return run.

Save for a few minor injuries to both the cutter and the driver, no serious injuries are known to have occurred. The drive was resumed and the team behaved very orderly as if to atone for their previous escapade.

FAIRYLAND AT R. FAIR & CO.

Store is Arranged In a Very Attractive Manner

A sudden transportation into Fairyland is the impression one receives on entering the store of R. Fair & Company. The whole lower floor is decorated and arranged in a highly artistic manner and reflects credit on the enterprise and taste of the management.

Extending the whole length of the store are strung green and white streamers of tissue paper, the ends of which are attached to hoops of electric lights which give a pleasing glow on objects below.

There are twelve of these hoops placed at intervals from the front of the store to the rear. Long festoons of holly with their berries are also strung from the different hoops the combination green and red proving very agreeable to the eye. The dress goods and other furnishings are displayed in an attractive manner.

Suspended from the hoops of lights are large red tissue Christmas bells entirely in keeping with the season.

Resents Address

CATHOLIC REGISTER

Reverend Wilson, J. P. Wilson, John Philpot, possibly — an ignorant Methodist ranter, of Lindsay, having exploded in stobolte fashion over the Eucharist, and said things no reverent man would care to utter, the Lindsay Council, No. 1,124 Knights of Columbus, politely requested the paper which gave publicity to his blasphemies, to re-state the objectionable words of the preacher and side by side with them to print Hon. Mr. Birrell's assertion in the British House of Commons that "nowadays nobody save a band of vulgar fanatics speaks irreverently of the Mass." This designation of the Protestant Secretary for Ireland certainly fits Reverend Wilson, and the Knights did well to thus severely teach him a lesson in the amenities.

BOOTS AND SHOES WITH UNION STAMP

Those Are What Organizer O'Dell is Here in the Interests of—An Explanation of the Objects of His Mission and the Methods He Uses.

There is in the city, a man who assuredly will do splendid work in creating a unanimous demand for union made goods. That man is Mr. E. W. A. O'Dell, general organizer of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, an international organization which has for its object the promoting of industrial peace and laying before the retailers arguments in favor of union made goods.

The arguments he puts forth are reasonable, and backed by common sense, and he speaks convincingly of the great benefit and satisfaction derived by handling the above mentioned goods.

When interviewed by the Review to-day Mr. O'Dell was optimistic regarding his prospects in Peterborough. He will be here for a week and is registered at the National hotel.

Regarding his methods the following, from the Fort William Herald is interesting and explanatory—

Mr. E. W. A. O'Dell, general organizer of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, is in town inaugurating a campaign in favor of union made goods.

The argument he puts forth is clear and concise, and backed by plain common sense. He points out that the buying power of the union men and their families and sympathizers is enormous, and if they insist on getting goods with the union stamp on them the demand will be so large that no store keeper can afford to be without them. It is the demand that creates the supply, and every time a person asks for union made goods and insists on getting them that person is helping the cause of union labor and dealing a blow at the sweat shop.

The union which Mr. O'Dell represents is the pioneer union in the fight for peace and amity between the employee and the employer, and if the example set by the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union was followed by the rest of the unions the words "lock out" and "strike" would soon be forgotten.

In every factory where the union boot and shoe workers are exclusively employed the employer and the union enter into an agreement by a signed contract which says that in case of any trouble or difference between them, each shall appoint an arbitrator, who will appoint a third party, no matter what the dispute is over, both the employer and the employees agree to abide absolutely by the decision handed out by the Board. All the contracts are entered into for the period of one year, and if either party wishes to annul the contract they must give notice of their intention at least three months before the end of the year, and if both parties are satisfied the contract runs on indefinitely. When any cause for arbitration arises the Arbitration Board is appointed at once and the work proceeds along the lines specified until a decision has been announced, the men do not stop working while the Board is sitting and a "strike" is out of the question.

It can be seen that under this arrangement there is no room for "strikes" or "lock outs." In the last ten years in Canada, industrial peace has been unbroken in every boot and shoe factory where the union stamp agreement of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union is in force. Figures speak for themselves. In the fiscal year 1909 Mr. O'Dell's union expended $76,000 on sick benefits and nothing on strikes. There are 15,000 employees working in boot and shoe factories in Brockton, Mass., a town just outside Boston, under the union stamp agreement, and in the 14 years the agreement has been in force the industrial peace has been unbroken.

The great success this union has made speaks for itself, and shows that employees and employers can work hand in hand and both benefit by the agreement, and the sooner this plan is copied by others the sooner will the ideal conditions between capital and labor be realized, and industrial peace the world over become an assured fact.

ARE NOT SATISFIED WITH THE COUNCIL'S RULING

St. Peter's T.A.S. Will Appeal to Legislature for Exemption it is Said—Statement of Prominent Members.

The refusal of the Council to grant exemption from taxation to St. Peter's Total Abstainence Society is not the end of the matter. The society, the Review was informed to-day, is going to carry their claims before the Provincial Legislature.

The Review endeavored to interview Mr. D. O'Connell, the T.A.S. solicitor, on the subject, but he is not in the city to-day.

"Why shouldn't exemption be granted," said a prominent member of the T.A.S., "the society is doing just as good a work in the interests of the city as the Y.M.C.A. or Y.W.C.A. The legislature will be asked to rule on the matter. It stands to reason the T.A.S. won't stand for such unfair treatment."

TURF CLUB SHAREHOLDERS AND DIRECTORS OF FAIR

Will Meet for the Discussion of Ruling Matters in Peterborough — By-law Will be Amended—Winter Races Will be Taken Up.

The directors of the Peterborough Industrial Fair will hold a meeting at the City Council Chamber on Friday, December 9th, with the shareholders of the Peterborough Turf Club.

The fair directors own the track and the Turf Club has the racing charter. In order that successful races may be held the co-operation of the two bodies is essential and the discussion of winter races for Peterborough this year will be one of the features of the meeting.

When the Turf Club was organized a by-law was passed to the effect that the shareholders of the club must all be holders of liquor licenses, but as it is the desire of the directorate that the club expand and that stock be sold to others than license holders, this restrictive clause will come up for discussion on Friday and there is every probability that it will be removed.

Some of the directors will also likely be elected to the official board of the Turf Club.

THE HOCKEY SEASON

The time is near, 'tis almost here, for us to shout, and yell and cheer, as up and down the glassy sheet the youths, with parted hair so neat, pass, shoot, or make a four-man rush, up to the end, there to bombard the hero of great games now past, and stands again his nets to guard. Perhaps the rubber disc goes high, perhaps it's wide, and sails on by; perhaps it's dead right on the mark—kerplunk, it's stopped, and to the side is batted there—the chesty youth smiles, smoothes his hair. We yell and cry "great work, old kid, there's nothing swell about your lid." The game goes on, the play is fast, and 'tis but seconds to the last. The puck comes up we place our bets, assured that he between the nets is on the job. The shot goes wide, the puck comes out, the players bunch, "Look out," we shout, but 'tis too late, the rubber rolls, and rolls on in; the game is o'er, we've lost our tin.

A Gifted Writer

Those who have enjoyed the reading of "Sowing Seeds in Danny," by Mrs. Nellie L. McClung, will be pleased to avail themselves of the opportunity of becoming closer acquainted with this gifted authoress. Mrs. McClung has only been in Ontario for a few weeks on this visit, but in that time there have been so many requests for her lectures that it was with difficulty that she could be persuaded to come to this city. The Young Ladies' Mission Circle of Charlotte street church were successful in doing so, and Mrs. McClung will appear in the lecture room of that church next Tuesday evening, December 13th. In Toronto Mrs. McClung has been greeted with crowded houses at each lecture engagement.

AN EARLY MORNING BLAZE

Fire broke out at seven o'clock this morning in the grocery store of Miss L. E. J. Lockhart, corner of McDonnel and Water streets. Damage to some extent was done to the floor, but none of the groceries were injured. It was extinguished by the brigade with the aid of chemicals.

It appears that Mr. Lockhart, who works at Mason's, kindled a fire in the stove of the store early this morning en route to his work. The reason given for the blaze was that he must have neglected to shut it off or have built too strong a fire for shortly afterwards the smell of smoke was noticed by the owners of the store who live in an adjoining building. They immediately sent in the alarm.

The store is closed to-day until repairs are made. No valuation of the damage could be ascertained.

WILL LECTURE SUNDAY NIGHT

In the Ashburnham town hall on Sunday evening a lecture will be delivered entitled "A Choice of a Bride." The meeting will be bright and will be conducted by Messrs. R. and A. McMurdo, who are both excellent speakers. There will be bright special singing and the address should be well attended.

Next week, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday a series of free lectures will be given on John Bunyan. They will be illustrated by crayon sketches, and a children's choir will assist in the services.

SIDNEY DREW IN "BILLY"

With the Original New York Cast

That Sidney Drew will corner the laugh market of Peterborough next week there can be no doubt, for he is to appear at "The Grand" on Tuesday next, in George Cameron's novel comedy "Billy." He will have the support of the original New York and Chicago cast, and the play will be admirably staged.

This ticklesome comedy was first produced at Daly's Theatre, New York, last season and caught on with a rush, in fact it was more often described as a perfect gale of fun and storm of laughter. After a run of nearly a year in New York Mr. Drew took the play to the Cort Theatre, Chicago, and it kept them laughing all last summer. The story is a simple one to hang so much real pleasure to, but it affords more than 57 different varieties of real joy and what is still better is thoroughly wholesome and clean. The plot deals with the experiences of Billy Hargrave, a football hero, who is deeply in love with a charming maiden by the name of Beatrice Sloane. At the time the story begins "Billy" has lost his four front teeth in a big football match and having replaced the lost molars with artificial ones, he pretends to be ill and takes a steamer trip to Havana to have time to accustom himself to the use of them in seclusion. He is accompanied by his sister, but by strange coincidence Billy discovers that Miss Sloane, the lady of his heart is also a passenger and his rival in love, one Sam Eustace, who seeks to make progress whilst Billy is out of commission, is also a passenger. Billy in his excitement loses his false teeth and purloins those of his prospective mother-in-law. The complications that arise out of these conditions keep the auditor in hysterical laughter from the rise of the first curtain to the final fall when master Cupid regulates everything to the world's entire satisfaction, also Billy's.

Don't fail to hear Miss Julia Choate, Peterborough's leading violin soloist, at Conservatory Hall, Friday, December 9th.

Often in winter you dare not open a window, even though the room be warm, because the cold air makes a draught that is dangerous. With a Perfection Oil Heater there need be no danger from draughts.

Open the lower part of the window a little, put the Perfection Oil Heater in front of it, and the cold draught will be turned into a pleasant, healthful current of fresh air. The

SPORTING NEWS

GOTCH WON'T TAKE THE MAT AGAIN

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 7.—"In addition to that he offered me the sum of $20,000 for a match with a man he was to select and of course that man would have been "Hackenschmidt," that makes $[illegible] but I have turned down the offer cold."

"The wrestling game has been good to me, but I think I have been good too, because I have always tried to be square and to wrestle on the level. Always have I tried to give the public that supported me so well and enabled me to accumulate a large fortune a good run for its money and "these things," I think, entitled me to retirement at this time and I want to take occasion while I am in Chicago to thank my thousands of friends here for their kindness and support.

Emil Klank, his former manager, was with him during the day, and he also received a call from Jack Curley, Hackenschmidt's manager, with whom he chatted freely in the hotel lobby.

Gotch refused to express any opinion about Mack or any of the other foreign wrestlers. He said he had come to Chicago merely to do some Xmas shopping and would probably remain for the match at the Coliseum. But he will stick just for the purpose of seeing his old rival to-night.

THE SITUATION IN HOCKEY DOWN EAST

Ottawa, Dec. 7. — Indications tonight point to a peaceful settlement of the hockey friction and the continuation of the N. H. A. The Ottawas meet to-morrow to consider the situation and will arrange a conference with the players.

One of the Ottawa officers announced to-night that only some of last year's men would be taken back. The players have formed a compact, however, and will insist on all of last year's team being signed.

Renfrew and Wanderer officers are trying to bring about peace, the Wanderers announcing that they will take the players in as shareholders. It is likely that the salary limit will be raised to $6,000 in order to accomodate clubs who are up against holdout players.

RENFREW IN IT AGAIN

Ottawa, Dec. 7 — The Renfrew Hockey Club held a special meeting this evening at the Windsor Hotel, at which it was decided to get right out after the fastest available team. Scouts will be put on the trail at once, Renfrew planning, in fact, another strenuous campaign in quest of the Stanley Cup. They have Lindsay, Jordan and Rowe already, as well as Fred Taylor, and will probably make offers in the course of the next week or two to Lester and Frank Patrick, Hay Millar, Herb Clarke and Fred. Whitcroft. "Newsy" Lalonde is still, in reality, the property of the Renfrew Club, although he has signed a Les Canadiens contract, and Renfrew will likely insist on a high price for his release.

Amongst those present at the Renfrew meeting were M. Doheny, ex-President of the National Association; M. J. and Ambrose O'Brien George and James Barnet, William Jamieson and George Martel, all well-known Creamery Town magnates. It is stated that Renfrew will obey in every particular the constitution of the National Hockey Association, the inference being that they will pay the men about $600 out of the club treasury and give them the balance, if necessary, on the side.

ICE RACES

The Lindsay ice meet will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 11 and 12, and promises to be the best yet. The committee have gone to considerable pains to make this season's meet a decided success. Best of accomodation for the public is guaranteed and Mr. Frank Smith, of Buffalo, who has been starter on many previous occasions will again be in the starter's box.

Four races, a 2.28 pace for $200 purse, a 2.20 trot for $200 purse, a 2.18 pace for $200 purse, and the free-for all for a purse of $200, will be on the program.

The meet will be held on the half mile track at the Agricultural Park which will be prepared for the occasion.

THE RING

The Toronto Star says professional boxing will be launched in the Queen City, despite the frownings of the authorities. The first bout will be called to take place around New Years.

Sam Langford is nearing his goal a battle with Jack Johnson. His latest feat is a knockout at Boston to Morris Harris, in the second of a scheduled 12 round bout.

As yet the negro champion, has not sent any letter of condolence to Tommy Burns, who is reported to have bid a fond adieu to the ring, on account of an injury to his knee.

Pat Nelson ought to make good with a burlesque show in a sketch entitled, "Meet Me To Night in Dreamland."

PUCKLAND

Will somebody take the covering off the Mercantile League. This organisation dished up a palatable brand of hockey last season, with the C. G. E. taking the championship.

The Pill Manipulators are looking for a berth and claim to have a few choice ones to trot out on the ice. All of last years sevens ought to be able to enter again. With the City League in cold storage, the prospects are brighter for the Mercantilers. Somebody get busy.

The Church League has yet to be heard from, but the Tame Bandits are still in the coop, and ready for their third annual game.

Randall, an ex Scugoger is billed for the line of the Belleville professionals. Moffatt of Cobourg, is out with Eatons.

No certificates will be issued junior O. H. A. players without the proper birth declarations.

All that remains of Cobourg's Intermediates of last season, are Payne, a centre player, Dick Turpin, point, and Cressen, cover.

Stratford is bemoaning the fact that their Intermediates will not have a go with Lindsay this year, but is hoping to meet a junior seven from the town of dreams. May we be pardoned for saying that Peterboro juniors will make this impossible.

SPORTING TALK

Christy Mathewson, of New York, won more games than any other pitcher in the National League last season, according to the official record made public yesterday. Three other twirlers, however—Phillippe, of Pittsburg; Cole, of Chicago, and Crandall, of New York—had higher percentages of victories than the Giants' star.

Mathewson won three-fourths of his contests, his wins numbering 27. Of the pitchers who had higher percentages of victories, Phillippe is credited with 14 wins. However he took part only in five complete games. Cole has 20 and Crandall 17.

Cole held his opponents to a lower average of runs per game than any of his rivals; Moore, of Philadelphia, excelled in strike-outs, while Harmon, of St. Louis, enjoys the distinction of issuing more passes and uncoiling more wild pitches than any one else.

Australia has furnished this list of boxers—

Bill Lang, heavyweight.
Peter Jackson heavyweight.
Tom Leeds, heavyweight.
Bob Fitzsimmons, heavyweight.
Dan Creedon, heavyweight.
Jem Hall, heavyweight.
Joe Goddard, heavyweight.
Bill Squires, heavyweight.

HOCKEY

The Port Hope Guide has the following to say of the professional hockey team—

George A. Brown and Capt. Colwill have lost no time at the rink during the recent cold snap, and if this weather continues there should be skating and curling on Thursday evening.

And their attention has not only been on ice making, but also to securing a hockey team, and in this they have been very successful. Eight men have signed certificates, and and there are a dozen or more applications for places on the team. The following players have signed, and will report here by the 15th of the month—Andy Kyle, formerly point player with the Eurekas; McGreggor, cover point for Brantford; Rowden Port Hope, centre; Lane, Eurekas, rover, Randall, Oshawa; Donald Smith, Cornwall, and Clarke, Ottawa, wings. There is applications from three goalkeepers, Mercer, Gorrie and Toose. Hockey followers will readily see from the above names that Port Hope will be represented by a speedy aggregation. The league opens on January 5th, but there will be exhibition games on Christmas and New Year's nights.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE "GAME"

"I have always been on the square with the fans. I always have been open and above board, and have tried to elevate the wrestling game."—Frank Gotch.

This is what the champion says in announcing his retirement, according to a despatch from Chicago.

In elevating the wrestling game Gotch has a big field. It's a game of so-called smart deals, which are really nothing more than ordinary crooked transactions; it's a game in which the principals are in a combine pretty nearly as well organized as the Standard Oil Trust; it's a game in which the paying public are made dupes and suckers for a band of big-muscled brigands

Of course this is expressing it pretty mildly, and we would like to say a lot more if space permitted.

Showing Artistic Treatment of Walls with Stencil Designs

Decorative Window Treatment for a Girl's Boudoir

An Artistic Corner for a Girl's Den

Rattan Furniture of Special Design Is Often a Substitute for Wood

TO work out artistic color schemes for her own room, to study house decoration from a truly artistic standpoint, is the aim of any number of New York girls this season, and in one studio at least —that of two young women art workers in upper Fifth avenue—a class has been started for this very purpose. The girls are all from homes of luxury and the suggestion of the commercial has no part in their intention to become initiated into the mysteries of color harmony and all its attendant details.

The desire to know color values, the combination of materials, the style of furniture which different schemes demand, its proper placing in the general arrangement and the thousand and one details, for every one of which there is a reason and a rule, is the immediate cause of this sudden determination on the part of girls whose main diversion in life is, or will be, society, once they are fully launched for entering this new and untried field.

Back of their decision is the influence which the arts and crafts movement has exerted on the country. In addition there is the more intimate study of the home, which has been brought about by the classes for home makers started in nearly every one of the women's colleges in the country.

As the girl is essentially the home-maker in embryo, one of the really important things—quite as important as sanitation—is the beautification of the home, the ability to work out for herself a color scheme that will enable her not only to decorate her own rooms, those which come more nearly under her own control, but be able to detect discordant notes in the furnishings of the rest of the house.

In discussing the value of such a course for girls the art instructor said:—"A girl can work wonders in the home by cultivating her taste so as to be able to discriminate as to what is worthless and what is good. These young girls will before long have the superintendence of their own homes, so that by studying the subject, by closely observing the harmony of color, for one color is a complement of another; by studying the proper arrangement of furniture, the right use of pictures, correct wall coverings, the most suitable treatment for different apartments with reference to their use, lighting and location and the pros and cons of every other important detail, she will be saved at least from making the faux pas that other homemakers, and it may be her very mother, made before her.

"NEARLY every one has a sense of color values, though generally speaking it has to be cultivated. The experience of every one of us, I am sure, is the agony we suffered in some homes we have entered by reason of the discordant element in the furnishings. It may be the pattern of the carpet, the designs of the wall paper or the gaudy colors in the upholstering that have set our teeth on edge, or it may be a thousand and one other things of lesser note. It is to correct just such tendencies as these that I am taking these girls in hand.

"I shall start first by giving them certain materials and having them work out color schemes according to their own notion, then show them where they have erred. I think I can give you no better idea of the sort of drilling they will receive than in making suggestions which will serve to illustrate the danger marks they will encounter. Take wall covering for example. In choosing a paper the use for which the room is to be put is to be taken into consideration, the lighting, and whether the draperies are to be rich in quality or simple in texture.

"As tapestries would be out of place in a simple home, so would a light, characterless paper be undesirable in a room hung with rich damask. Burlap is one of the wall coverings which are safe to use for either a handsome home or a simple cottage. Bear in mind that it is quite possible to combine comfort and artistic effect in furnishing a house, and this applies to wall paper as to everything else.

"In buying furniture one must naturally be governed by the size of the room, and not use furniture that is obviously out of proportion. While it is not necessary to keep wholly to one style of furniture, it is inadvisable to combine articles of different woods in the same room. One suggestion not out of place here is not to buy furniture finished with varnish. It is inartistic and impracticable, as it scratches easily. Buy nothing that is not useful or beautiful.

"When it comes to floor coverings, there should be a decided harmony between the floors and the walls, though the carpets or rugs should be stronger in tone than the former. The floors, walls and ceiling should show a gradation of shades of the same color from darkest up to light.

"LARGE patterns either in wall paper or carpets should be rigorously eschewed. Turkish rugs are not only sanitary but, as a rule, safe floor coverings, though in buying them it is well to appeal to the wisdom of an expert in the line, since nowadays so much fakirism is charged up to the account of a good many persons who deal in rugs. One woman in New York is a rug broker and spends all her time in selecting fine rugs for her clients, who come or send to her from all over the country. She has visited the great rug centres and has written a number of books on rugs, so that her advice is to be respected.

"In selecting the colors for an apartment reference should be had to the lighting, whether the aspect is north or south. A north rooms calls for warm coloring, while the southern exposure needs cool tones. Then care should be exercised in the selection of colors. Get those that are restful. It is a well known fact nowadays that certain colors exert definite effect upon certain people, causing more or less annoyance and discomfort.

"To many persons yellow is a constant tonic, the effect of its radiance being like that exerted by the caloric rays of the sun, which cheers one up in spite of oneself. One young girl has made this discovery, and whenever she feels herself likely to have an attack of the 'blues' hies herself to the guest room and stays until it wears off. Red is probably the most abused color of all, for it is overpowering in a small room and at night absorbs the light to such an extent that it is difficult to light the apartment attractively.

"A rich deep red might be used in a large, spacious apartment, like a hall or a library, but, generally speaking, it is a color best left out of one's calculations in furnishing a house. In the brighter tones it has even been known to cause insanity to highly nervous persons.

"In furnishing any room it is always best to study out the color scheme first for restful ensemble. In these days of strenuous living nothing will be more greatly appreciated than restful surroundings. Don't have things around that are not used and have no real beauty in themselves. Feel the need and then fill the need, and all who enter the room will be constrained to remark, 'What a comfortable room!' whether they appreciate the underlying reason or not.

"DON'T overcrowd the apartment. The entire beauty of a room is lost when there is a hodgepodge of furniture and knick-knacks in it. Good furniture needs proper space to show it off. In arranging a room it is always well to consider the aspect of the adjoining apartment. Study the outlook from every quarter where it is visible and create pleasing pictures wherever possible. Figure each piece of furniture out, the place where it should go. If there happens to be a window with a good reading light, then place a chair where the light will fall properly over the reader's shoulder. For night reading have comfortable chairs where one can see without straining one's eyes. Have a reason for everything.

"Hanging pictures is another difficulty that many women have to contend with. A picture appropriately hung should be on a level with the eye and not up under the picture rail where it is entirely out of one's line of vision. One law that is very frequently violated in our home is the law of contrast. Plain backgrounds are much to be preferred for pictures to those that show a decided pattern. Dull gold grass cloth makes charming backgrounds, and as this comes in green gold, copper lustre and a silvery tone there is a pleasing variety to select from.

"Proper window draping is one of the most difficult details of housefurnishing—at least difficult for the average woman and wholly hopeless in the hands of the average house decorator. There is no individuality in having lace hangings at one's windows nowadays and frequently they are wholly out of place. To think up some artistic materials in a shade that harmonizes with the color scheme of the room is one of the delights of the artist in this line, and this feature lends greater individuality to the home than almost any other except, perhaps, attractive methods of using artifical light.

"Cream net curtains are always in good taste, and with the addition of some soft silk to soften the glare inside one can not go far astray or depart a great ways from the tenets of good taste. These are only a few suggestions to show how much there is to learn, and of the immediate value of such knowledge to the average girl, who, generally speaking, has never before given the matter a thought. I am enthusiastic over my new class and am expecting great things of them in the future. At any rate I mean to instill in their minds the difference between good and bad art in house decoration, and there is no doubt in my mind that it will have a lasting effect on their lives."

There is still another studio in Thirty-third street where girls study house decoration, and where the artists carry the work on in a little different way, in that they are themselves designers of furniture and are constantly bringing out stunning pieces of woodcraft to illustrate certain points in artistic construction or to create a piece of furniture for some special use. Oak stained gray is largely used, and the effect is delightful combined with the soft gray hangings and wall paper of the same shade, which is now so much used. The work here will constitute a sort of post graduate course in the art of furniture design, so that between the two schools of instruction the pupils will have a foundation which would, if need be, suffice for a commercial career, though in every case the girls are studying for their own pleasure or to supplement an art course.

Glove Modes and Glove Care.

MANY varieties of smart looking gloves have been brought out for autumn and winter service. A sort that is easily drawn on and perfectly adapted to the requirements of the girl who attends a city day school is the pique sewed one clasp mocha in black, slate or tan.

Equally serviceable and certain to give satisfactory wear are the natural colored washable chamois and doeskin gloves fastening with several large self-covered buttons, the one clasp tan or black castor and the dogskin of mannish cut in oak shades. Exceptionally smart for walking as well as for riding and driving are the English hand sewn cape gloves, which fasten with a single big brass button, have great embroidered backs and come in brown tones as well as white and black. For a girl approaching the débutante period there is no driving glove quite so dainty as that of heavily stitched white glace gauntleted with black kid.

Dress gloves of lambskin and French kid vary in length from two to eight buttons and some of them fasten with three or four pearl clasps. It is possible to obtain these gloves in a shade matching almost any costume and it is best not to chose those with elaborately embroidered back, as that sort of ornamentation draws attention to the size of the hands. If a girl has not the exclusive services of a maid and not much time to devote to the care of her wardrobe, she would do well to buy mousquetaires whenever possible, since nothing looks quite so untidy as a glove from which one or more buttons are missing.

Best of all for motoring are the lined lambskin gloves of eight button length in mousquetaire style, and for very cold weather there is nothing to equal the comfort of knitted worsted gauntlets.

This season more light gloves than ever are to be worn at the theatre. For a short time it seemed as though the omnipresent long white glace had run its fashionable course and that darker hues would be adopted, but just now the fans [illegible] in favor are decidedly of a yellow [illegible] the grays verge closely upon the pearl tints. White glace gloves of elbow or twenty-four button length are good style with all evening frocks of delicate hue, and next in favor are the very palest shades of straw, ciel and rose. These tints are worn only with costumes which they precisely match.

The life of a glove, as every girl doubtless knows, depends largely upon the care bestowed upon it. To lay away, no matter how smoothly, a pair of gloves that are damp with perspiration is to invite that speedy decay which causes the kid to suddenly split. Moreover, the odor of the perspiration lingers and is liable to contaminate the entire contents of the glove case.

Gloves that have been continuously worn for several hours should be hung in some place where the air can fumigate them, and before putting them away a little talcum powder should be shaken inside them. This rule specially applies to evening gloves, which, being of thinner kind, are more easily decayed, and for the same reason they should not be permitted to get badly soiled, as in that case the professional cleaner can scarcely avoid tearing them.

It is far more economical to have the expensive long gloves cleaned after each wearing than to use them several times and run the risk of having them destroyed by hard rubbing.

To roll the gloves in a ball after removing them does more damage than any other sort of maltreatment. Another bad habit is that of jerking at the tips, which strains both the seams and the base of the fingers.

Every girl should have one of the little glove darners of celluloid, mother of pearl or hard wood, so that when repairing a rip the fingers need not be drawn out of shape or puckered. She should also provide herself with thread of every requisite shade, in order that she may always be prepared to make repairs, and if wise she will cut the buttons from all discarded gloves and preserve them against the time when they certainly will be needed. All these little rules are simple and their observation will go far toward preserving a ladylike appearance.

SOCIAL AMENITIES FOR THE SCHOOL GIRL

EVERY living being, young or old, rich or in humblest surroundings, has some influence over some one, and directly or indirectly over every one with whom he or she comes in contact.

The average normal girl if she dwells on the subject at all places the idea of influence as an attribute belonging exclusively to her parents or her school teachers—it is something which goes with age and consequent wisdom. But there is no theory a girl can have that is so astray as this one.

From the tiniest baby whose cry will disturb a household to the unreasonable old men or women whom nothing pleases now, because all through life the first thought has been of self, there is no age at which the influence of a human person is not felt. What a different atmosphere there is in the home when the baby is a lovely thing of smiles and happiness, and what a delight it is to meet dear old ladies or gentlemen who at the last turning point in their lives are still pleased at the least courtesy that is shown to them; contented with their lot in life and as interested as ever in all the doings and happenings of the young people about them.

There are lessons to be learned from both ages. In many households the daughter of the family is required to take the place of a small child—she is petted and indulged and her every wish gratified, as only an only daughter can be. In return surely the least she can do is to show appreciation of this affection and generosity by always being in a good humor; always trying to shed an atmosphere of happiness and love in her home. This is what the little baby does, and even though she may have attained full sixteen years or more it is a pity if she has lost the power to smile and laugh when smiles and laughs are needed, or to make all those around love her at a time when perhaps an atmosphere of love can accomplish a world of good.

Until she marries and often until she dies a daughter will always be but a lovable baby in the hearts of her fond mother and father, and if she will make them truly happy she will keep alive that picture to the extent of her power.

The old people, too, have many lessons to teach the daughter of the house. If she is the eldest of many sisters and brothers her place is clearly there as helper and adviser.

Like the dear old people who have lived their life, yet still are interested in all that exists for a younger generation, she can be a real help to the small sister with her first problems to worry over at kindergarten or the younger brothers with their first real lessons, which at first always seem so hard.

These times are still within recent memory for her and she should be able to give great help through her own experience. But even if she has not yet reached the pinnacle where she is sought out as a counsellor and help by her brothers and sisters, her influence is there just as strong as ever. If she allows herself to become lazy and shirk what incentive is there for the younger sister? If she is cross and says unkind words when the day has not gone well what example is there for the young brothers in the practice of restraint.

It is not only within the boundaries of her home that a girl's influence or example is felt. Often and often an entire clique of girls is made to bear the reputation of one of its members. If there is one girl especially charming her friends inevitably rise in the estimation of outsiders, just as a girl who makes herself conspicuous for her bad manners or hoydenish ways is sure to cast some slur likewise upon her companions.

While this outside opinion is often unfair, it is inevitable that every one is influenced to some extent by a friend with whom much time is spent. Be the example for good or ill, each character is bound to feel the effect of a friend's nature, the finer and stronger personality not so much but just as surely as the weaker.

It is a pity, too, that young girls should not realize this fact more—they should look for the weak points in their friends and take care that they do not develop like tendencies. They should down the undesirable qualities as much for their own sake as the others, for perhaps the friend will try to follow their example of never making an unkind criticism, of being always gracious, of firm loyalty to other friends or whatever the trait in question may be.

But even beyond the realm of one's intimate friends the power of influence is exerted. The girls in any particular class are sure to be spurred on to greater efforts if there is one girl who is especially conscientious and does better work than they, but the entire school, all ages and all grades also, receives an impetus when, at the monthly or yearly reading of reports, the names are given of those whose work is excellent.

Even the persons whom one passes in the streets are cheered by a bright and cheerful face and unconsciously depressed by a countenance that is cross and ill humored.

How much more is the acquaintance influenced who receives a warm handshake, as from an interested friend, instead of a curt nod. Just a few words and a smile to show a genuine mood will go far toward winning a reputation for good manners and charm combined than any amount of stiff and studied politeness.

Two Automobile Conveniences.

TO thoroughly enjoy motoring one wants to be entirely comfortable physically, and the girl who expects to spend many days in an automobile will have much more pleasure if she has everything ready for that particular form of amusement.

The proper kind of hat, veil, &c., is a very important part of one's equipment, but most necessary of all is plenty of warm clothing, especially as the weather grows colder.

A great help in this matter of keeping warm is an Angora wool waistcoat. The fine soft Angora wool, which is generally used for making babies' caps, makes the warmest kind of a waistcoat and is so deliciously soft and pliable that it does not give one any feeling of being bundled up. With one of these waistcoats on under it, the outer coat need not be especially thick; indeed a girl can wear her summer pongee coat and be quite comfortable.

The waistcoat can be bought, but not everywhere, and the girl who wants one will not find it much trouble to knit it for herself. If she does not know how to knit, her mother will probably do it for her and the wool can always be bought with no trouble.

One of the small drawbacks to the pleasure of motoring is the jar caused by the motion of the machine, especially when going fast. This jarring can be lessened by using a pneumatic footstool. These footstools have recently been made especially for automobiles and are a great comfort. A footstool of any kind is desirable for most girls, for automobiles generally seem to be planned for very tall persons, but the pneumatic stool is far better than any other and lessens very much the feeling of being shaken up.

JAMES WILSON GETS IN WRONG AT LINDSAY

Lindsay Post.—James Wilson, of Peterborough, came to town yesterday with the intention, so he said, of going to work on the new C.P.R. grain route. The last time James visited Lindsay was on the 12th of July, when he imbibed too much fire water and landed in the toils.

Yesterday Wilson filled up again, and last evening visited the Salvation Army, where he created a disturbance. The police coralled him, and he spent the night under the fire hall.

This morning he faced Magistrate Jackson, a picture of despair and degredation. He pleaded for his liberty, as he has done many times before, but the Court could not see it that way. He was fined $2 and costs, $6.10 in all, or twenty days in jail.

Wilson turned to the Post representative and asked for a loan of $6.10, but Jimmy was no stranger to the newspaper man and he turned him down. He will spend twenty days' meditation, interspersed with manual labor, in jail.

Wilson has a very poor opinion of Lindsay whiskey, as he claims he was "doped." He looks as if he would not stand many more drinks.

HICKS WEATHER FORECAST

A regular storm period is central on the 1st, being in progress from the westward as December comes in. Low barometer and storms of rain and snow will traverse central to eastern sections on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd, followed closely by anti-storm conditions from the northwest—that is by rising barometer, high northerly winds, and very much colder. General cold will prevail over most parts of the country from about the 3rd to the 6th. A seismic period, beginning in November, is central on December 1st, extending to the 4th.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 6th, 7th and 8th. This period will lead directly up to the beginning of earth's winter solstice, combined with a Mercury period. Threatening weather, with rain and snow will be general at this time, merging into the storm period next following.

A regular storm period extends from the 10th to the 15th, being central on the 12th. This period is exactly coincident with the annual December crisis of magnetic perturbations. The disturbed compass, volcanic unrest and seismic troubles are all natural results of astronomical conditions at this time. The barometer will fluctuate and fall to low readings, and storms of rain, with probable thunder southward, will appear in the west early in the periods, and for a long series of days following, rain storms, turning to snow, sleet and blizzards will sweep over most parts of the sea and land, in this and other countries. For three or four days before and after the 10th look for much seismic trouble, with volcanic eruptions and dangerous tidal waves at diagonal extremes of both the northern and southern hemispheres.

A reactionary storm period falls on the 16th, 17th and 18th, at the centre of the Mercury period. Winter gales and blizzards from the preceding period, will run into this period, making a stormy spell on sea and land for many days. Navigation on the North Atlantic Ocean will be perilous through all this part of December. Note this forecast.

A regular storm period covers the 21st to 27th, central on the 24th. This period is at the centre of December solstice, and it will bring to a marked degree midwinter storms of rain, sleet and blizzards. Vigilance on land and sea will avert suffering and save life and property at this and other December storm periods. Snow, high northwest gales, and a great cold wave will be in the sight to most parts, on or close to Christmas.

A reactionary storm period covers the last three days of the month and year. This period will bring change to warmer, falling barometer and rewarmer, falling barometer and renewed rain and snow. A seismic period extends three to four days on either side of the 31st. Hence seismic reports will be natural any time from December 28th to January 8, 1911.

Parker Broke Down

As stated in the Standard on Saturday, Robert Parker arrived from Belleville on that day to commence a life sentence in the penitentiary for the murder of a neighbor at Tweed. According to the Sheriff prisoner bore up with a fortitude remarkable for his old age, while on the train. He broke down completely as he passed through the gates of the big prison. — Kingston Standard.

WINSTON CHURCHILL NOT MUZZLED BY SUFFRAGETTES

Home Secretary Winston Churchill is apparently quite undaunted by the very vigorous and vicious organized attack upon him by the Suffragettes. Despite the fact that he is being tagged after by a horde of ladies who have shown that they are prepared to stop at nothing in their violent campaign for the enfranchisement of women. Winston is touring England and Scotland at breakneck speed. As travelling companions to protect him from the unwelcomed affections of the ladies, he has two or three detectives who ride with him in his automobile, in his compartment on the train, and who guard his rooms in the hotels. Still he "keeps-a moving," here to-day, there to-morrow, making speeches, and good ones at that all the time. Winston Churchill has been second only to Lloyd-George in introducing the strenuous life into British politics.

An illustration of the whirl-wind campaign that is being conducted this week in England is given us in the cables this morning. Opposition leader Balfour is scheduled to deliver a speech in Grimsby, Lincolnshire, to-night, the eve of the first contested elections to-morrow. It is advisable, from the Liberal point of view that he should not go unanswered. The Conservative party has switched policies so rapidly during the last fortnight that it is necessary to guard against another last-minute volte face and to have the other side prominently explained in to-morrow's morning newspapers which will contain Balfour's speech. Winston Churchill has been chosen as the man to answer Balfour.

But Churchill was yesterday speaking in his own constituency in "Bonnie Dundee," and it has been announced that he will address a couple of meetings in Cheshire in the northwest of England to-day. It is quite a jump from here to Grimsby on the east coast, and Churchill cannot get there until midnight to-night. But he is going to be there alright if the special train he has chartered does not breakdown. And what is more, he is going to be prepared beforehand to answer Balfour's arguments.

In order that he may know just what Balfour says at the Grimsby meeting to-night, fast automobiles will carry a report to Sheffield, a point en route between Cheshire and Grimsby, which will enable Winston to study and get his reply ready during the further run of the train.

Grimsby is rather used to midnight meetings. One was held on the eve of the last election in the town, when Lloyd-George turned up suddenly to reply to George Tait Blackstock of Toronto, who had earlier in the same evening apparently swept everything before him by his trans-Atlantic eloquence. Grimsby decided between the two by electing a Liberal.

To-morrow morning Winston will pike back again across England to Manchester, where he addresses a meeting to-morrow afternoon and immediately thereafter he will pop into a train for Chester, where he will speak at another Liberal demonstration at night.

The schooling which Winston Churchill got on the Nile with the 21st Lancers, they of forlorn hope fame, carried him through capture by the Boers in South Africa when he was war correspondent for the Morning Post, and is now enabling to enjoy a bitter political battle against his own class. His father, Lord Randolph Churchill, the greatest Tory democrat of his time and Winston is a worthy follower.

VALUABLE INSURANCE POINTS

THE BULLETIN.

The following is valuable insurance information credit men should require from their customers:

Mr. J. Vincent Nutter, of Winnipeg, before the Canadian Credit Men's Association, suggested that in order to help the insurance companies and protect themselves, credit men should require from each customer a statement giving in addition to the details which are required for other purposes, the following:

1. Date and value of stock at last inventory.
2. Approximate value of stock at present time.
3. During which month or months is stock the highest and approximate value at that time.
4. Amount of fire insurance carried on stock and names of companies.
5. Do the wordings on all policies read alike?
6. Will you agree for fire protection purposes to keep in a safe books of account and invoices showing value of stock and cash and credit sales?

Mr. Nutter held that it was important for credit men to know:

1. Percentage of insurance to value their customers are placing.
2. Are the companies carrying the insurance reliable?
3. Do the policies read concurrently, or in other words are all his goods properly protected?
4. In the event of fire loss are the books going to be intact and in such condition that the loss can be adjusted promptly instead of dragging on for months as is sometimes the case?

Plucky Bank Manager.

An exciting attempt at bank robbery is reported from Box Hill, near Melbourne, Australia, where an armed bandit broke into the Australian Bank, the manager of which, who lives on the premises, is Mr. Robert Sutton. After midnight he was awakened from his sleep and confronted by a masked robber holding a revolver close to his face. Mrs. Sutton adroitly disconcerted the robber by ringing an electric bell, and Mr. Sutton procuring his revolver from under the pillow of the bed, fired at the thief, who fled. In retreating the marauder fired through the door, but no damage was done. Trails of blood showed that Mr. Sutton's shot had taken effect.

APACHE DUEL TO THE DEATH

Tragedy After a Dance Over Belle of Low Life Orgy

Another ghastly "Apache" crime has startled Paris—a crime sordid in every detail. It was a quarrel between two "Apaches" over a woman known as Helen of the Golden Hair, a desperate fight with long knives and revolvers, a murdered man, and flight. But this time the murderer is a soldier of France, and he shot his man with the ordnance weapon he was authorized to carry.

His crime brings up once more the question whether such men as he—notorious criminals and evil-livers—shall be allowed to serve in the home regiments in France, instead of being sent out to serve in Africa.

There was a ball in the St. Denis suburb. The dancers were the riff-raff of Paris society—sallow-faced boys—the "Apache" of modern Paris is rarely much more than twenty years of age—in bowler hats, shirts without collars, and tight-fitting clothes, with humped-up shoulders and the curious slouching walk and sinister leer peculiar to the tribe; women with their hair curled high, wearing no hats, and dressed quite simply, looking modest enough, and to the stranger nameless, though every one of them carries a dagger in her stocking or hair, and was prepared to use it.

The belle of this orgy in low life was Casque d'Or II., or Helen of the Golden Hair, as she is indifferently called. She is notorious for the fact that fifty or more pitched battles have been fought in her honor among the "Apaches."

Her favorite cavaliers the other night were Fernand Cuviller—nicknamed Fernand the Great—and "Jojo" whose real name is Joseph Humbert. Both men are returned convicts, and are well known to the police. "Jojo" is doing his two years' military service, and had obtained leave for the All Saints' holiday.

The dancing was over for the evening, and the dancers were streaming out into the street, when Fernand saw "Jojo" walk up to Helen of the Golden Hair and offered her a plate of cake. He walked up to the woman. "Come out at once and bring him with you," he hissed through his teeth. A dead silence fell on the crowd. Both men were well known to be desperate characters, and there were only two policemen there on duty, who had seen nothing. For two men—brave though they might be—to try to prevent an "Apachee" duel would be suicidal madness, and the police know it.

The crowd streamed silently into the street and formed a square, with "Jojo," Fernand and Helen and a woman friend of hers in the centre.

The fight was fought in grim silence—such silence that, although they saw the crowd, the two policemen, who were only about eighty yards away, had no idea that a duel was in progress.

Then of a sudden Fernand's foot slipped and he fell. The soldier rushed at him, but Fernand, lying on the ground, drew his revolver and fired point-blank at him. The shot missed, Fernand jumped to his feet again, and as he rose "Jojo" fired three shots at him. Two of them took effect, and Fernand fell to the ground dead.—John N. Raphael in the London Express.

ULCERS AND COLD SORES

Are Healed By Zam-Buk

Ulcers, cold sores and chapped places are common troubles just now. The hands and the face are the parts generally affected, but sometimes cold sores arise from chilblains on the toes and feet, and bad ulcers sometimes follow cold cracks. Zam-Buk will be found a quick and sure cure.

Mr. W. J. Halliday, of Ash Grove, Ont., says: "I had my little finger frozen, and it cracked at the first joint, causing a bad sore, which discharged freely and would not heal. The pain was very bad, and the whole of my hand became swollen and in bad shape. Nothing I got seemed to do it any good.

"A friend advised me to try Zam-Buk, and I soon found that Zam-Buk was altogether different to any preparation I had ever tried. In a very short time it soothed the pain and healed the wound. I am convinced that Zam-Buk has saved my hand."

Miss Lillie May, of Stoney Creek, Ont., says: "A few weeks since several nasty, disfiguring cold sores suddenly broke out on my lips, which became much swollen. Seeing my condition, a friend advised me to try Zam-Buk and leave all other preparations aside. This I did, and was much surprised, after a few applications of this balm, to see every cold sore banished, and my lips in a better condition than before."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for eczema, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. You are warned against harmful imitations and substitutes. See the registered name "Zam-Buk" on every package before buying.

Felling Trees by Wire

A machine recently invented in Germany by Hugo Gantke subtitutes a steel wire for the axe and the saw in felling trees. The wire is about one millimetre in diameter, and is kept in rapid motion by a small electric motor placed at a sufficient distance to be beyond the radius of danger from the falling trees. The swift motion heats the wire, and it cuts with great faciltiy producing a slight carbonization of the wood. A trunk twenty inches in diameter can be severed in six minutes. The cut can be made at the level of the ground, or even below it if the surrounding soil is removed.—Dundee Advertiser.

MRS. GLOVER TOLD WITNESS SHE WOULD KILL HER HUSBAND

Mrs. Kate Simpson in Leblanc Murder Trial at Cambridge, Mass., Says the Wife of the Murdered Man Had Repeatedly Beaten Girl.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 9.—The defence in the trial of Hattie Leblanc, the little Cape Breton girl who is on trial for the murder of Clarence F. Glover, the Waltham laundry proprietor, opened with sensations yesterday. A. Farley Brewer, for the defence, declared in his opening address that the defence would show that some one beside the prisoner had the opportunity, the motive and the ability to commit the crime, and M. M. Johnson, senior counsel for the girl, called District Attorney Higgin as the first witness for the defence. Mr. Higgins declined to acquiesce, the jury was sent from the room, and a heated argument followed. Mr. Johnson declared that the prosecution had kept material witnesses off the stand, had introduced one witness who showed great bias, and had done everything he could to prevent the defence from properly preparing its case. Mr. Higgins denied the allegations, and retorted that Mr. Johnson had kept witnesses for the defence locked up so that the prosecution could not interview them. Judge Bond finally ruled that the district attorney need not take the stand, and the jury was recalled.

Evidence was later introduced to show that Mrs. Glover had three times threatened to shoot her husband.

Mr. Brewer in his opening address spoke of the mystery surrounding the death of Glover and declared that Hattie Leblanc was brought to the Glover home designedly.

"Somebody," he continued, "killed Clarence Glover and did it with a cold and deliberate purpose. Others had the opportunity to kill him and we shall show that one other in particular had opportunity, motive and ability."

Hattie, he asserted, had no motive for killing Glover. The defence, he said, would not attempt to defend the relations between Glover and Hattie which he said, "may or may not have been proper."

A firearms expert testified that the revolver with which Glover was killed could not backfire, this tending to show that alleged marks on Hattie's hand could not have been received in that way.

Mrs. Kate Sampson, a witness for the defence, said Mrs. Glover had made three threats while visiting her at Auburndale, and that she appeared enraged because, as she alleged, she had found her husband insulting Hattie Leblanc, who was working in their home, in the bathroom.

The witness said also that Mrs. Glover told her of having repeatedly beaten Hattie, and that once Mrs. Glover brought Hattie to the home of the witness and struck her under the chin, in an attempt to make her confess that she had acted improperly with Glover.

On cross-examination, Mrs. Sampson adhered to her story of the threats, but said that Hattie had denied the bathroom incident.

The final witness of the day, Hattie Leblanc's sister, Mrs. Irene Leblanc Langley, said Mrs. Glover had shown her three notes which she had written, in which she declared that she wished to rid herself of her husband, and would do it. On the night before the murder Mrs. Langley testified Mrs. Glover forbade her husband to come into the house to supper, and exclaimed that if he did come in it would be the last supper he would ever eat.

MRS. EDDY BURIED.

Extreme Simplicity Marks Christian Scientist's Funeral.

Boston, Dec. 9.—The body of Mary Baker C. Eddy, founder of Christian Science, was laid to rest in a receiving vault in Mount Auburn Cemetery yesterday after simple funeral services at her late home, the Chestnut Hill mansion in Newton.

The services were attended by about 120 persons, including her relatives, members of her household, officials of the Christian Science Church, and Publishing Society, and her personal students residing in Greater Boston.

Judge Clifford P. Smith, first reader of the Mother Church, conducted the services, which began by the reading of a lesson-sermon, composed of selections from the Bible, and corelative passages from Science, and Health with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker Eddy.

This was followed by silent prayer, and the repetition of the Lord's Prayer by all present. The poem by Mrs. Eddy, "Mother's Evening Prayer," was then read by Mrs. Carol Hoyt Powers, second reader of the Mother Church.

This concluded the services, and the casket was carried to the porte cochere and the hearse, when the journey to Mount Auburn began.

The honorary pall-bearers were: Hon. John L. Bates of Boston, Edward P. Bates of Syracuse, N.Y., Arthur Brisbane of New York, Judge Charles R. Corning of Concord, N.H., Frederick Dixon of London, Hon. Samuel J. Elder of Boston, Mayor Charles E. Hatfield of Newton, Mass., William Johnson of Boston, Albert Metcalf of Boston, and Gen. Frank S. Street of Concord, N.H.

Though all attending the funeral were dressed in black there was none of the spirit of woe usual at funerals, for all present bore up with dignity, evincing their faith that Mrs. Eddy was not dead, but merely had passed on.

Collapsed on Sidewalk.

Ottawa, Dec. 9.—Peter Larocque, a middle-aged man residing at 210 Bessamer street, was taken ill on Rideau street at 1.45 yesterday and collapsed on the sidewalk. He did not regain consciousness and died within a few minutes. Deceased worked for the W. C. Edwards Co. and leaves a family of seven.

New Women's Canadian Club.

Calgary, Dec. 9.—A Women's Canadian Club is being formed in Calgary to arouse interest in public questions among women of the city, and to prepare them for affiliation with the older Canadian clubs.

Coal Stays Up.

Philadelphia, Dec. 9.—The United States Circuit Court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania yesterday decided that there is no general conspiracy among the anthracite coal-carrying railroads or coal companies to restrain trade or commerce, or to monopolize the trade, or to maintain certain prices.

It decided, however, that the Temple Iron Co. is a combination of anthracite coal-carrying railroads, in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, and granted the prayer of the Government for an injunction, restraining that corporation from continuing in violation of the act.

The sum and substance of the decision is that the Government wins only one of several points, that in the Temple Iron Co. case, and that the defendants will not be compelled to change the present prices of coal, as a result of the court's decision.

Admits Two Burglaries.

Bridgeburg, Ont., Dec. 9.—Claud Dickeout, alias C. M. McCarthy, charged with having stolen goods from Swarts's drug store, Ridgeway, on Nov. 15 and 18, claims to live in Rochester, N.Y., but was born at Ridgeway, Ont. He was arrested by J. R. Dowd, provincial constable of Bridgeburg, in Buffalo, on Monday night. The officer also secured most of the stolen goods, worth over $500. Although Dickeout protested strongly he knew nothing about it at first, he finally admitted the two burglaries. Dickeout was taken before Magistrate Clark at Stevensville and admitted his guilt, but was sent for trial before the county judge.

Will Superintend Dominion Steel.

Montreal, Dec. 9.—The announcement is made here that George H. McDougall has been appointed mechanical superintendent of the Dominion Steel Corporation at a salary of $9,000 per annum. Mr. McDougall was formerly in the employ of the Steel company, but latterly at the works of the Superior Corporation at Sault Ste. Marie.

CREW ARE RESCUED.

Captain and Sailors of Dunelm Reach Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, Dec. 9.—Captain Atkinson and the 21 members of the crew of the Inland Navigation Co.'s steamer Dunelm, which stranded early on Wednesday morning on Black's Point, Isle Royal, were brought to Port Arthur yesterday evening by the Canadian Towing & Wrecking Co.'s tug Whalen, which, with the lighter Empire, left for the scene of the disaster in the afternoon.

They report the steamer resting easily, with her bow on the rocks, but in an exposed position, where she might be broken up, if heavy seas commenced to run. The hull is badly punctured in the forward part, but water has not reached the cargo. In addition to the danger of the boat being broken up, it is also possible that she may slip off the rocks and sink in deep water. It was impossible when the tug Whalen left for the lighter Empire to start taking off the cargo, but the Empire is standing by ready to start that work when it is considered advisable.

It was in a snowstorm Wednesday morning that the steamer Dunelm lost her way in endeavoring to get through the passage of the island gap. She could not pick up the light or whistle on Passage Island, and endeavored to turn back.

Shortly after she struck the rocks the U. S. steamer Squires, which followed the Dunelm out of port, had a narrow escape from the same fate, and seeing the Dunelm going aground, used her wireless to send word of the accident to Duluth, from where it was sent overland to Port Arthur.

Kingston, Dec. 9.—The cargo of the Dunelm is owned by James Richardson & Sons of this city, and was the last cargo the company was handling from Fort William this navigation season. The cargo is fully insured. The steamer and cargo are valued at $250,000.

Mayoralty Campaign Opened.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 9.—When two thousand incandescent electric lights in the business section at the south end of the city were turned on last night, the mayoralty campaign opened. Mayor Dores turned on the lights at eight o'clock, after which, at the athletic meet, held in Olympia Rink, Mayor Dores and Dr. S. E. Boulter, mayoralty candidates, made the initial addresses of the campaign.

That the price paid was $200,000.

MADE NO STATEMENT.

"They'd get a pretty fair price if they got $200,000, wouldn't they?" asked Mr. Larmonth of the Review over the long distance 'phone this morning when he was communicated with at the St. Lawrence Hotel, Port Hope.

"There is a rumor current that you have bought the powers," persisted the reporter.

Mr. Larmonth, in answer, wouldn't say anything about the matter, and was equally reticient as to whether there were any negotiations going on or not. While he was silent on the subject, it is quite safe to read between the lines that there is some big deal pending in connection with the transaction.

30,000 H.P.

He stated that the Electric Power Co. would run a line from Campbellford to Peterborough in the spring. There is 30,000 h.p. available at the company's holdings in Campbellford.

Power from this source will also be transmitted to Lindsay, Bowmanville and other towns.

Missionary In Court.

Toronto, Dec. 9.—Thirty-five years a missionary in the wilds of Northern Ontario and for the same length of time a colporteur, Mr. George Buskin, was summoned to the Police Court yesterday morning on a charge of non-support laid by his wife. His lawyer raised the question of the validity of her marriage and she explained that she had been married thirty-three years ago in the United States, but had divorced her husband for "incompatability of temper," and since then he had died.

"Where did your husband die?" asked Mr. Buskin's counsel.

"In Burlington, Vermont."

"Are you sure—because I am told that he is still alive and that you have no reason to believe he is dead. I am also informed that the divorce is not good."

He further alleged that Mrs. Buskin was of unsound mind and had been so described by several doctors, but would not consent to go to the asylum.

"I have worked for thirty-three doctors," said Mrs. Buskin, "and none of them have said I was insane, so I don't want to go to an asylum."

NO, BOOZE NO WORK

Young Girls Arrested.

Toronto, Dec. 9.—Bertha Sear, 17 years, and Agnes Book, 16 years old, were arrested yesterday by Detective Miller, charged with wholesale thefts from the T. Eaton store.

After their arrest, the detective recovered about $500 worth of rings, rats, furs, earrings and plumes at their rooms at 237 East King street.

He observed the girls selling valuable goods in a second-hand store and suspected that all was not as it should be.

Mary Morrison, Winnipeg, was arrested yesterday by Detective Tipton charged with stealing an ostrich plume from the Eaton store.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

CONDITIONS APPALLING

CHILDREN RESCUED

Investigation by Officers of Children's Aid Society Brings Out Terrible State of Affairs in Families Residing in Townships East of Here.

"Gross neglect of children, adultery, wife desertion, bigamy and incest" are among the vile conditions found in and near Havelock, by the officers of the Children's Aid Society of Peterborough County. Conditions were recently found to be so bad and getting steadily worse, that the society requested the Department to send down Inspector Gunton, who is associated with J. J. Kelso. In company with George Cochrane, agent for Peterborough, and Constable Williams, of Havelock, Mr. Gunton investigated again several cases which Messrs Cochrane and Williams had inquired into previously. It was thought at first that about twenty-four children would have to be removed. However, by taking only the worst cases and warning the others, the number committed by the court was only sixteen. In one old "shack," situated six miles from Havelock, in a barren wilderness, was found a family of five children, with the unfortunate mother and a day-old baby in bed. The house was cold, the fire out, and the children shivering.

No doctor had been in attendance, and no one to cut wood, and scarcely any food to eat, and the father, who deserted them some nine months previously, wandering in the north woods, hunting. This father had supplied nothing but 100 pounds of flour during the last year. He will be arrested soon on a charge, preferred by his thirteen-year-old daughter. These children were sent to the Peterborough Shelter, the mother being assurred it was not a permanent removal, but only until she can be called upon to attend an investigation. Money was given a neighbor to supply bread and a woman left in charge of this unfortunate mother.

FROZEN FOOD.

The next case was in Havelock village, where a family of four children were found in an old house, which is certainly unfit for habitation. The food was frozen on the table, although a fire was going in the same room. The children were foul with dirt, as was the father and mother. Their only excuse was that water is scarce. This, however, is not to be believed, in a town so well supplied as Havelock.

In another Havelock house, three women and two men, three of whom are separated from husbands and wife, was found a "Blind Pig" and three small children. The man of the house was convicted of selling liquor in a local option town, and the children handed to the Children's Aid Society. Out near Cordova after a sixteen-mile drive, part of which, over a road almost impossible, the officers found a man and woman guilty of bigamy. There were many children, HIS children, HER children, and THEIR children. The woman, in this case, has had a bad record. Three of her children have been taken in the past seven years, and now it was thought a stop should be put to it, when two more illegitimate children were found with her; accordingly, both she and her husband were arrested and committed to jail, charged with bigamy, which they both admit.

Other minor cases were investigated, but the people were given a second chance.

MANY ILLITERATES.

Around Cordova, a large number of children are not attending school, and accordingly many of the young people can neither read nor write.

It will be a great satisfaction to those who made "Tag Day" such a huge success, to know that the money is being used in such needy cases.

Inspector Gunton speaks of Officers Cochrane and Williams as being as conscientious and careful officers as can be found in Ontario.

The above is the report of Superintendent W. A. Gunton and which speaks without exaggeration of a condition of affairs, that one living in a Christian country, would think could hardly exist.

A BIG JOB.

Complaints were first made to Mr. E. L. Goodwill, the secretary of the local society, and Mr. George Cochrane the agent was dispatched to make an investigation.

What Mr. Cochrane saw made him decide to return and ask for more assistance, Toronto was communicated with, and the results are as stated above.

Children have been brought to this city during the week and placed in the Shelter here. One party arrived this morning.

HE'S HAPPY NOW.

"My gall," but I had a fine sleep last night was what one little fellow said to Mr. Cochrane, as he entered the Shelter this morning, with the other officers and their charges.

They were handed over to Mr. Henry, who has charge of the institutiontion. They were in an awful condition.

GARMENTS CUT OFF.

They were filthy, in the broadest sense of the word and the garments on one of the boys had to be cut off. While the clothing was being changed and their bodies washed the large window of the bathroom had to be opened so great was the stench.

All the clothes were thrown out the window, and a Review representative had a look at them as they lay on the clean snow. A distant inspection was sufficient.

TWENTY LBS. OF BEEF.

The children were hungry and very much so. Twenty pounds of beef and a quantity of pork was consumed at one meal. One girl ate nine slices of bread

It's the worst experience in my 11 years' work with the society, remarked Mr Henry to the Review. We need clothing at once and we need a considerable quantity. Then too the accommodation is away over taxed. Beds sheets and quilts we must have. At present some of the children are sleeping on the floor.

A BIG CHANGE.

The new surroundings and the attention which the children have received at the Shelter, has brought about a big change in their actions and appearance. They, of course, had to be fitted out in garments, within the limits of the supply on hand. They are clean and look as if they were really children—not cattle.

STRONG MEDICINE FOR DETECTIVE

Toronto, Dec. 9.—Rumors of a bomb having exploded in the office of Walter Duncan, inspector of detectives, and resulting in injuries to the inspector, resulted in a wild dash on the part of people near by into the room where Mr. Duncan holds forth. Crown Attorney Corley had given out the solemn statement, and no one for a moment thought of disbelieving.

The bomb turned out to be a bottle of strong smelling pink liquid which the inspector has been imbibing for some time in the hope of curing a slight attack of ptomaine poisoning. He lifted it up yesterday morning to have his little nip when the cork blew out and spattered his coat with medicine. Thinking that the safest thing to do was to put the cork back in he tried it, and the bottom of the bottle blew out with even more velocity. This process had the pleasing effect of spattering his neatly creased pantaloons with even more of the pink liquid than his coat had received, and the bomb explosion was a complete success.

FIGHT NECK AND NECK BETWEEN TWO PARTIES

Remarkable Campaign in Great Britain Will End in Practically Same House Being Returned to Westminster—Churchill Carries Dundee.

London, Dec. 9.—The fifth day of the elections ended with the parties still running neck and neck, and with the prospect that they will come under the wire in almost precisely the same relative position they held at the start. Returns had been received up to midnight from the voting for 419 members, and the result is a Union gain of two seats in that number over those held by that party in the last Parliament.

This amazing result is unprecedented in English history as it is embarrassing to politicians of all factions. Both parties predicted great gains, but are now convinced that the new House of Commons will be practically identical with the old. The Conservatives argue that Premier Asquith's bid for a sweeping endorsement from the country, and has not obtained it; therefore, he cannot be justified in fastening upon the nation such radical changes as home rule and the disarming of the House of Lords. The coalitionists insist that the voters, by returning them to power, endorse their policies, and direct them to carry out their program in its entirety.

Forty-four seats were balloted for yesterday. Returns were received from 21 of these, and from 44 which were balloted for Wednesday. In these 65 the Liberals gained Radnorshire and Bedford, while the Unionists gained Eskdale. The contests were close nearly everywhere. The Unionists continue to cut down the Liberal majority, and to make numerical gains all along the line, but insufficient to turn out the Liberal members.

Winston Churchill, the Home Secretary, was returned by Dundee, but about 1,500 votes shifted to the Unionist column. The indications are that the O'Brienites are cutting down the strength of the Redmondites in most sections of Ireland.

Heavy rains last night, coupled with a delay in the reports, decreased the general enthusiasm.

At Belfast rioting followed the closing of the polls. There was much stone throwing, and many windows were broken. Police reinforcements were turned out, and quelled the trouble.

O'Brien and Healy have issued the following message to the British people, with reference to the election in Cork:

"Cork has declared itself emphatically for a policy conciliating our Protestant fellow-countrymen, for uniting all ranks and classes in an appeal to the good feeling of the English people in favor of financial justice to Ireland, for the re-establishment of land purchase, and for the handing over to friendly united Ireland legislative control of their own domestic affairs."

Asquith, addressing workmen at the Guard Bridge Paper Works, said to reduce the Lords to the position of a subordinate chamber was the whole point of this election.

POWER FOR THE FARMERS

Adam Beck Announces the Government's Plan.

London, Dec. 9.—Speaking yesterday to the Middlesex County Council, Hon. Adam Beck announced the Government's plan for supplying power to farmers. Low tension wires are to be erected to radiate 30 miles from the power centres. The Government would adopt the same principle as the municipal telephone system. As 20 farmers could go to the County Council and have a telephone line erected; paying for it on the same basis as a local improvement, so would the Government foster the power lines.

"In a sense the Government would be but the financial agents of the people. We will erect the low tension lines, which you will pay off at the rate of four per cent. on the investment, retiring the indebtedness at the end of fifteen or twenty years, in the same manner as retiring debentures.

Forestry Convention.

Ottawa, Dec. 9.—Preparations for the Dominion forestry convention, called by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to meet in the City of Quebec Jan. 18 to 20, are rapidly going forward. Secretary James Lawler has just returned to Ottawa from Quebec, where members of the Provincial Government, under Sir Lomer Gouin, are forwarding plans. A strong local committee has been formed, with H. M. Price, chairman.

The Commission of Conservation, under Hon. Clifford Sifton, will hold its annual meeting in Quebec on Jan. 17.

Everything points to the largest and most practical forestry convention ever held in Canada. The Legislature of Quebec will be in session at this time. Railways have granted special rates, and a strong program is being prepared.

Aftermath of Riot.

Toronto, Dec. 9.—Of the eight men and boys arrested, two were fined in the Police Court yesterday morning, while six were remanded a week. Charles Smithson and Samuel Prince admitted having thrown stones at a Bloor and McCaul car at Queen and York street, and were fined $20 and costs or thirty days. The company is to report the definite damage to the car, which will be met from fines. The men were charged with malicious injury to property.

The other six were remanded a week, having all pleaded not guilty save Horace Fisher, who was taken in by Patrol Sergeant Griffiths at Queen and Yonge streets. He pleaded guilty. The sergeant was in court with a badly swollen face, from being hit by a brick. The young men taken are all fairly respectable looking folk.

Over Two Billions.

Montreal, Dec. 9.—It is now predicted at the Montreal clearing house that the clearings here will go over the two billion-dollar mark for 1910, a figure never before reached in this city.

The returns for the eleven months up to Nov. 30 of this year show an amount equal to $1,908,540,000. So, if this month is as good as last, the two-billion mark will be easily reached at the end of the present year. The returns at the clearing house for the first eleven months of 1909 were $1,670,240,000, so there has been an increase over last year of $238,400,000.

Porch Climbers In Detroit.

Detroit, Dec. 9.—Porch climbers on Wednesday night entered the residence of Mrs. J. Elizabeth Buhl, widow of the late Theodore D. Buhl, 1,810 Jefferson avenue, while the family were at dinner, and escaped with $4,000 worth of jewelry and diamonds.

FISH COMMISSION MEETS.

Matters Arising Out of Treaty of 1908 Will Be Discussed.

Ottawa, Dec. 8.—The International Fisheries Commission met yesterday in Ottawa in the rooms of Hon. Mr. Brodeur, House of Commons. The sessions will continue for three days, and will conclude on Saturday.

The commission consists of the U.S. commissioner, David Starr Jordan, the famous fishery expert, and Prof. E. E. Prince, Canada's leading expert on international and scientific fishery questions.

The object of the conference, it is understood, is to thoroughly discuss certain controversial matters arising out of the system of fishery regulations, which Profs. Jordan and Prince were authorized to frame under treaty of 1908 between Great Britain and the United States, for the settlement of fishery difficulties in the contiguous international waters from the Atlantic coast along the great lakes to the Pacific coast.

Members of the Saskatchewan Fisheries Commission, of which Prof. Prince is chairman, are also here drawing up their report.

Hon. Walter Scott, Premier of Saskatchewan, arrived yesterday to attend the conference of the Dominion Premiers in respect to the question of representation in the Federal House.

Prof. Prince has just received word that the University of St. Andrew's, Scotland, has appointed him the representative of Canada on the international committee which has been formed at the suggestion of Lord Rosebery, the lord rector of the university, in connection with the celebration of the 300th anniversary of the university.

Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, told a deputation yesterday morning, in effect, that the Rideau Canal would not be closed up at Ottawa. He said the Government had not considered the question of closing up the canal, for the simple reason that it had not been asked to do so.

Without committing the Government in any way, he would say that it would be a pretty large order for any company to ask of the Government to close up any portion of the canal, from the St. Lawrence to the Ottawa. If a company came and offered an alternative outlet, that might be a different matter, but there was a history about the old Rideau Canal, he said, which would make him, for one, not very ready to interfere with it.

The deputation also asked that the Rideau waterway be improved. The canal is a military defence work, which was built by British soldiers and handed over to the Dominion Government. The C.P.R. wants the Ottawa end of it, in order to build a tunnel through the city.

Navigation of the Fraser.

Ottawa, Dec. 9.—A delegation from British Columbia saw the Prime Minister and Hon. Mr. Templeman, Hon. Dr. Pugsley and Hon. Mr. Oliver, and asked for the improvement of the north and south arms of the Fraser River near New Westminster, so that navigation would be possible. The delegation was told that the Government favored the improvement of this river, and had already made a commencement with a dredge.

Impending Revolution.

Washington, Dec. 9.—In view of alarming reports of an impending revolution in Honduras, against the administration of President Daiavila, the navy department has ordered the cruiser Tacoma to Querto Cortes to meet any possible emergency that might endanger Americans or American interests. The Tacoma left Cristobal yesterday, and probably will arrive at the Honduran port to-morrow.

Touched Live Wire.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 9.—Wm. Riddell, a lineman, while at work, came in contact with a live wire, carrying 2,200 volts. For ten minutes he hung suspended by his safety belt, before his fellow workers succeeded in releasing him. He lost two fingers.

FRIDAY, DEC. 9, 1910.

CANADA AND BRITISH DIPLOMACY

Attacks have been made upon British diplomacy on the ground that in the negotiations of treaties in which Canada was interested the interests of the Dominion have not merely been neglected, but have been sacrificed. This has especially been a topic with the class of politicians who have professed to have in view the separation of Canada from the Mother Country. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who expressed the belief that Canada would separate from Britain, "as the ripe fruit separates from the parent tree," in 1892 made this bitter attack.

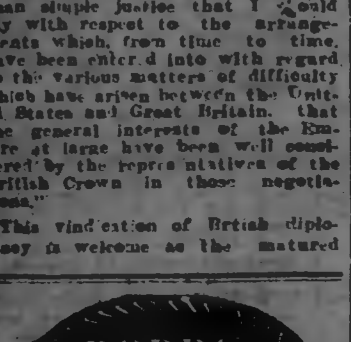
"Is there a Canadian anywhere who would not hail with joy the day when we would be deprived of the services of British diplomacy. What has been British Diplomacy to us sir? British diplomacy, so far as Canada is concerned, has been a record of failure, and of surrender and sacrifice. British diplomacy has sacrificed our lake frontier. British diplomacy has sacrificed our Oregon territories. British diplomacy has allowed the State of Maine to indent our own country. British diplomacy has sacrificed our Fenian claims, even though at that time the services of British diplomacy had a Canadian negotiator. It is well known, and I will repeat it, that I have no very great confidence in Hon. gentlemen opposite, but I would rather have a Canadian Tory than an English Liberal for the negotiation of a treaty with a foreign country in the interest of Canada. Those gentlemen opposite are really too timid."

Mr. Aylesworth, the Minister of Justice, was not pleased with the award in the matter of the Alaskan boundary and said; 'The award cannot be justified on any judicial principle.'

But the Minister of Justice has received new light, and in addressing the House of Commons on the award made with respect to the fisheries dispute with the United States used this language;

"I would wish only to say this further, not with reference to that particular treaty alone, but with general reference to all the various international arrangements and agreements, which during the last 100 years have been entered into between the Statesmen of Great Britain and those of the United States, that while it seems to be rather the fashion, or to have been rather the fashion in this country to take the view that in the greater number, if not all of those international arrangements, the United States has succeeded in getting the better of it, and that there has been in perhaps most instances on the part of British statesmen some sacrifice or some failure to recognize sufficiently the rights and interests of the British Colonies in North America. I, for my part, speaking certainly after considerable study of the matter and with some knowledge of it, do not in the least degree share those views. I think it is no more than simple justice that I should say with respect to the arrangements which, from time to time, have been entered into with regard to the various matters of difficulty which have arisen between the United States and Great Britain, that the general interests of the Empire at large have been well considered by the representatives of the British Crown in those negotiations."

This vindication of British diplomacy is welcome as the matured opinion of one who has had the opportunity for judging, and the declaration that he does "not in the least degree share the views" of those who stated that the interests of the British colonies on this continent had not been sufficiently recognized shows that with fuller knowledge, and perhaps calmer judgment, he has revised his own views. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when challenged to do so recently, refused to retract or explain his separatist utterances. Will he now withdraw his onslaughts on British diplomats and admit that there has been no surrender, or failure; or sacrifice of Canadian interests, or will he take issue with his Minister of Justice?



GOOD LITERATURE

People are getting simpler instead of wiser. This may seem a strange thing to remark of dwellers of an age of wireless telegraphy and flying machines, but its a fact nevertheless.

The public taste has degenerated in many ways and notably in the matter of literature. A few years ago, yes, only a few years ago, "Three Weeks," and "The Yoke" would have been considered pollution to the garbage heap, and now "milady" will read them and can't really find anything wrong in them.

And the newspapers, too, pander to the imbecile taste of the public by supplying such junk as "Ruth Cameron's Chit Chats," "Daddy's Bedtime" and other stuff for which the claim of "human interest" is made. Poor "human interest," you are a sadly abused phrase.

This class of present day chaff, is simple enough, but the simplicity is not of the strong virile vein that marked the writings of Dickens, but a simplicity and commonness that spells inanity and drivel.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS

A report has been given wide circulation that a high church authority in Quebec has forbidden the reading of certain French papers. The report did not look genuine, but it was not only given currency but commented upon, and it has now been denied. Referring to it The Mail and Empire says: Archbishop Langevin, of St. Boniface, denies that he has issued a mandate requiring Catholics in his diocese to abstain from the reading of the principal Laurier papers in Quebec, and to take instead journals of the Nationalist wing of the Liberal party. It would not be at all surprising if Sir Wilfrid Laurier's active and highly paid press bureau has invented this story in order to stir up the Protestants and to win for the right hon. gentleman and his comrades sympathy among English-speaking Canadians. The same bureau circulated the other day, the falsehood that Archbishop Bruchesi had given money to Rome in the expectation of becoming a Cardinal and being appointed to the Papal chair, in which position, it was alleged, he would be hostile to the so called Liberalism and friendly to the Nationalists. This appeal to an anti-ecclesiastical sentiment, obviously for political purposes, had to be withdrawn.

In a free country the application of the ban by Archbishop Langevin would have been a very serious matter. Yet it is hardly worse than the Laurier system in so far as it deals with the press. Sir Wilfrid gives huge printing contracts to public journals, and thus secures the support of these papers for his legislation and for the grafting of his party. Last year he distributed over a million dollars in what is described as "advertising and printing." One paper drew $32,000; another, $19,000; another $16,000. All the so called Liberal journals got something. When a Liberal balks at anything done in Ottawa, it receives a warning that the subsidy will be withdrawn unless it is more careful, and if it insists upon independence its income from the Public Treasury is stopped. The St. John Sun was served with a written notice that if it continued to criticize the management of the Intercolonial Railway, its business with the Government would cease. The St. John Telegraph dissented from the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, and at once its printing and advertising business at Ottawa, amounting to something like $10,000 a year was cut off. Not until the paper altered its attitude towards the Government was it restored to favor and to its subsidy. No paper that is not on its knees to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, offering the adulation so pleasing to vanity, no paper that fails to defend the crookedness at the capital, is permitted to transact one cent's worth of business with the Government. Even the announcements of the Intercolonial Railway are withheld from the Conservative public because they must be made through Conservative newspapers in order to reach the great mass of Conservative readers. Archbishop Langevin would have been open to severe criticism had he placed any public journals under the ban. But this much can be said for him, his interference with the liberty of the press would have been undertaken from conscientious motives, whereas that form of interference of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the founder has no such excuse behind it. Sir Wilfrid has made certain newspapers contractors under him, and he has established his astounding discrimination against public journals that are independent of him, in order that he may have a grip upon public opinion, and may find defenders in the press for all his schemes. Is it probable that the paper which receives $30,000 of public money from him in a year will condemn any of the grafting operations or oppose any of the improper legislative propositions?

The municipal authorities were afraid to tackle the house fly, even when it was dormant.

What is Bonner Worth? A new industry that will be started here.

Dr. Cook admits that he might have been mistaken when he thouhgt he reached the North Pole. Perhaps he was also mistaken when he thought he climbed to the top of Mount McKinley. These little mistakes tend to shake ones confidences in explorers.

Mr. Lewis, of West Huron, has given notice of his intention to introduce a bill into the Dominion Parliament to provide that a hunter whom, through negligence, shoots a human being, shall be considered guilty of manslaughter. Such a law might deprive the chase or the runway of some of its pleasures through fear of the consequences of negligence, but it should help to preserve human life.

The reverend gentleman who introduced the toast to "The Press" at the Farmer's Club Banquet Tuesday evening told us of the great antiquity of the pulpit. This in all probability accounts for the fact that so many of our dear brethren of the cloth lie beneath the surface, while, as we were led to infer from his remarks, editors lie above.—Norwood Register.

A National Museum.

Ottawa, Dec. 9.—A large deputation of prominent Ottawans waited on Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday, to ask him to use his influence to have the new Royal Victoria Memorial Museum constituted the National Museum of Canada, and that it be placed in charge of a special Government commission, comparable with the British Museum in London, and the National Museum in Washington, D.C.

Sir Wilfrid said he would bring the matter before the Cabinet, but before doing so, he would be obliged to be furnished with facts as to how the museum in London and Washington were managed. The Prime Minister said further that, if some gentlemen of leisure could be persuaded to act on a commission, so that they could throw their whole heart into the matter, it would be appreciated.

To Discuss Ferrer Trial.

Madrid, Dec. 9.—It is announced that the Government has accepted the proposals of the Republicans to discuss the trial of Prof. Ferrer, who was executed last year. This matter will be brought up next week in the Chamber of Deputies, when the Republicans intend to charge ex-Premier Maura, ex-Minister of the Interior Lacieda, with judicial murder.

It is probable that these two former officials will reply.

Premier Canalejas desires the subject to be disposed of finally, and it is expected that the debate will be a duel between the Republicans and the Conservatives, the Government taking no part in it unless the monarch is involved.

TAYLOR'S BORAX SOAP

The Riverman

By Stewart Edward White

The hammer ran smoothly to the top and fell. A half dozen times more it ripped. Then heavy chains were thrown around the winch, and the steam power began to draw the clumps together.

"Done!" cried Tom North.

North unmoored, and the driver dropped back with the current. The tug churned forward to accomplish the last duty of binding the defenses together by means of chains and cables. Two men leaped to the floating booms. Orde and the Rough Red set about the task. They worked from either end toward the middle. When they met Orde ordered Red aboard the tug.

"I'll tie this one, Jimmy," said he.

Aboard the tug all was tense preparation. In the engine room Harvey, his hand on the throttle, stood ready to throw her wide open at the signal. Armed with sharp axes, two men prepared to cut the mooring lines on a sign from the Rough Red. They watched his upraised hand. When it should descend their axes must fall.

Orde folded a knot. Upstream the jam settled deliberately forward, cutting a clump of piles like straw.

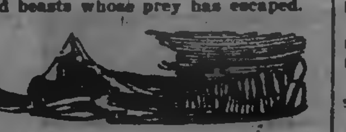
"She's coming!" cried the Rough Red.

"Give me every second you can," said Orde, making the last turns.

The mass toppled slowly, fell into the swift current and leaped with a roar.

"Jump!" the Rough Red cried, and his arm descended.

Orde leaped blindly for the rail, where he was seized and dragged aboard by the Rough Red. The axes fell; Marsh whirled over the wheel; Harvey threw open his throttle. The tug sprang from its leash like a hound. And behind the barrier the logs, tossing and tumbling, the white spray flying before their onslaught, beat in vain against the barrier, like raging wild beasts whose prey has escaped.



Chapter 34

ORDE now took steps to deflect into the channel recently dredged to Stearn's bayou the mass of the logs racing downstream from Redding. He estimated that he had still two hours or so in which to do the work.

This at first he succeeded in doing, and very successfully as affecting the pressure on the jam below. To the crew working in the channel dredged through to Stearn's bayou the affair was that of driving a rather narrow and swift stream, only exaggerated. A large proportion of the timbers found their way into the bayou. Those that continued on down the river could hardly have much effect on the jam. As yet only the advance of the big jam had arrived at the dredged channel.

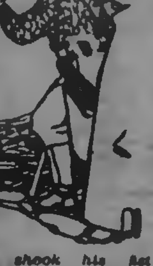
"We can't keep this up when the main body hits us!" Orde panted to Jim Denning. "We'll have to do more pile driver work."

He made a rapid excursion to the Boom camp, whence he returned with thirty or forty men.

"Here, boys," said he, "you can keep these logs moving in this channel for a couple of hours."

Orde now returned to the jam, where, on the pile driver, the tugs and the booms he set methodically to strengthening the defenses.

But shortly the water began to rise again, this time fairly by leaps. For the hundredth time the frail wooden defenses opposed to millions of pounds were tested to the very extreme of their endurance. The network of chains and cables tightened, drawing ever nearer the snapping point. Suddenly, almost without warning, the situation had become desperate.



He shook his fist against the menacing logs.

And for the first time Orde completely lost his poise and became fluently profane. He shook his fist against the menacing logs; he apostrophied the river, the high water, the jam, the deserters, Newmark and his illness, ending in a general anathema against any and all streams, logs and floods.

"Well," said Tom North, "he's good and mad this time."

At the dredged channel Orde saw the rivermen standing idle, and, half blind with anger, he burst upon them. Then he stopped short and stared.

Square across the dredged channel and completely blocking it lay a single span of an iron bridge. Behind it the logs had, of course, piled up in a jam, which dammed back the water.

"Where in h— did that drop from?" cried Orde.

"Come down on top the jam," explained a riverman.

Orde, suddenly fallen into a cold rage, stared at the obstruction, both fists clinched at his side.

"That about settles it," said Welton.

"Settle!" cried Orde. "I should think not!"

Welton smiled quaintly.

"Don't you know when you're licked?"

"Licked, h—!" said Orde. "We've just begun to fight."

"What can you do?"

"I'll blow her up with powder."

"Ever try to to blow up iron?"

"There must be some way."

"Oh, there is," replied Welton, "of course—take her apart bolt by bolt and nut by nut."

"Send for the wrenches, then!" snapped Orde.

"But it would take days. It would be too late. It would do no good."

"Perhaps not," interrupted Orde, "but it will be doing something, anyway. Look here, Welton, are you game? If you'll get that bridge out in two days I'll hold the jam."

"You can't hold that jam two hours."

"That's my business. Will you send for lanterns and wrenches and keep this crew working?"

"I will," said Welton.

During the next two days the old scenes were all relived, with back of them the weight of the struggle that had gone before. Pines belonging to divers and protesting owners were felled and sharpened. Even the inviolate government supply was commandeered.

Then all at once, as though a faucet had been turned off, the floods slackened.

"They've opened the channel," said Orde dully. His voice sounded to himself very far away. He felt himself moving in strange and distorted surroundings. He heard himself repeating to each of a number of wavering, gigantic figures the talismanic words that had accomplished the dissolution of the earth for himself, "They've opened the channel." At last he felt hard planks beneath his feet, and, shaking his head with an effort, he made out the pilothouse of the Sprite and a hollow eyed man leaning against it. "They've opened the channel, Marsh," he repeated. "I guess that'll be all." Then quite slowly he sank to the deck, sound asleep.

* * * * * * *

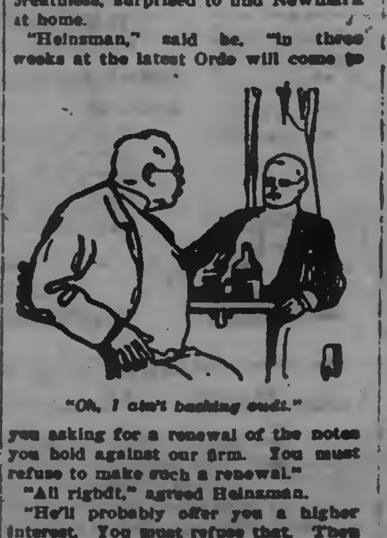
When Newmark left, in the early stages of the jam, he gave scant thought to the errand on which he had ostensibly departed. Whether or not Orde got a supply of piles was to him a matter of indifference. His hope, or, rather, preference, was that the jam should go out, but he saw clearly that Orde, blinded by the swift action of the struggle, was as yet unable to perceive. Even should the riverman succeed in stopping the jam the extraordinary expenses incidental to the defense and to the subsequent salvaging, untangling and sorting would more than eat up the profits of the drive. Orde would then be forced to ask for an extension of time on his notes.

On arriving in Monrovia he drove to his own house. To Mallock he issued orders.

"Go to the office and tell them I am ill," said he, "and then hunt up Mr. Heinzman. I want to see him immediately."

The German entered rather red and breathless, surprised to find Newmark at home.

"Heinzman," said he, "in three weeks at the latest Orde will come to you asking for a renewal of the notes you hold against our firm. You must refuse to make such a renewal."



"Oh, I ain't backing oudt."

"All righdt," agreed Heinzman.

"He'll probably offer you a higher interest. You must refuse that. Then when the notes are overdue you must begin suit in foreclosure."

"All righdt," repeated Heinzman, a little listlessly. "Do you think he vill hold that jam? I got lots of logs in that jam. If it goes out I vill lose a heap of money."

"Well, you'll make quite a heap on this deal," said Newmark carelessly.

"Suppose he holds it," said Heinzman, pausing. "I hate like the mischief to joomp on him."

Newmark looked at the German sharply. "I suppose you know just how deep you're in this?"

"Oh, I ain't backing oudt," negatived Heinzman—"not a bit."

Little by little the water went down. The pressure, already considerably relieved by the channel into Stearn's bayou, slackened every hour. Orde, still half dazed with his long delayed sleep, drove back along the marsh road to town. Orde began to review the situation. As Newmark had accurately foreseen, he came almost immediately to a realization that the firm would not be able to meet the notes given to Heinzman. Orde had depended on the profits from the season's drive to enable him to make up the necessary amount. Those profits would be greatly diminished if not wiped out entirely by the expenses, both regular and irregular, incurred in holding the jam.

"I'll have to get an extension of time," said Orde to himself. "Of course Joe will let me have more time on my own personal note to the firm. And Heinzman surely ought to. I saved a lot of his logs in that jam. And if he doesn't want to I guess an offer of a little higher interest will fetch him."

Hon. L. P. Brodeur is slated for the Lieut.-Governorship of Quebec.

SPENCER'S NEW EARL.

Lord Althorp, Who Succeeds His Half Brother, Is Widely Known.

Spencer's new earl has been a member of the House of Lords for the last four years, having been raised to the peerage as Lord Althorp in 1906, on the occasion of his appointment to the office of Lord Chamberlain, which he still holds. He is a half-brother of the late earl and is widower of a sister of Lord Revelstoke and of Cecil and Hugo Baring, all three of whom are well konwn in America. Moreover, he is a man of very chivalrous instincts and of a sense of honor unfortunately rare in these modern days. For on the occasion of the troubles of the fire at banking house of Baring, some fifteen years ago, he, although possessed of no fortune of his own, voluntarily came to the rescue of his father-in-law, the late Lord Revelstoke, and of the other Baring relatives of his wife, by surrendering to them her dowry. It was by sacrifices of this kind that the House of Baring was able to weather the storm. And now that it is once more on the high tide of prosperity, the money thus surrendered by the peer, familiarly known in the House of Commons as "Bobbie" Spencer, has been restored to him. But at the time when he turned it over to the committee of liquidation formed by the leading bankers of London it seemed doubtful whether he would see a penny of it again.

The new earl is noted for the perfection of his manners and of his attire, his collars in particular being as famous in their way as were those of the late Mr. Gladstone. It is this that caused his commencement of a speech in the House of Commons with the words, "I am not an agricultural laborer," to excite so much hilarity. Among the sobriquets which were applied to him in the lower House was that of "Bradlaugh's Baby," owing to his political connection with Northamptonshire, with which county the first professed atheist to occupy a seat in Parliament was identified. That he is a man of some pluck is shown by the fact that at the time his half-brother, the late earl, was Viceroy of Ireland and in constant danger of assassination, he made a point of accompanying him, in an unofficial capacity, everywhere in and around Dublin, no matter whether walking or riding, for the purpose of protecting him. He succeeds to the ownership of a very stately mansion in London, known as Spencer House, overlooking Green Park, and formerly leased to Mrs. Ogden Goelet, of New York, but now rented by Baron de Forest.

Althorp, his country seat in Northamptonshire, has been in the possession of the Spencers since long before the reign of Henry VIII., and although the celebrated library was sold by the late earl to Mrs. John Rylands for the Rylands Public Library at Manchester, yet the house remains full of treasures of every kind, including no fewer than twenty paintings by Sir Joshua Reynolds and thirty-two by Lely, in addition to masterpieces by Titian, Raphael, Rubens, Murillo, Holbein, Rembrandt, Kneller, Frans Hals, Gainsborough, Vandyc and Guido. The Spencer plate is also extremely valuable. It comprises two pails which are the largest pieces of pure gold plate in any private collection, and a silver wine cistern as large as a bath, all three inherited from the first Duke of Marlborough. Perhaps the most cherished pieces in the collection of plate are, however, the gold casket in which the third earl received the freedom of London when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and a beautiful silver-gilt jug, one of four provided by penny subscriptions from the nation for Lord Althorp, Lord Russell, Lord Grey and Lord Brougham, in recognition of their efforts in passing the Reform Bill, in the early part of the last century.

Albert Chevrier and Ludger Perrault will be sentenced at Montreal on Tuesday for the abduction of Cecile Michaud from her parents.

Irving's Magnanimity.

The changes of fortune place people sometimes in peculiar and embarrassing positions. A good story is told of the late Sir Henry Irving, the famous actor. When a young man, earning his laurels and comparatively unknown, Shakespeare's play, "Much Ado About Nothing," was about to be presented to the public by a certain manager of prominence. Irving had a part assigned to him, which he diligently studied. Letter-perfect in his lines, he felt assured of ultimate success, but, unfortunately, the manager disliked his acting of it, and took occasion to censure him before the company much to his mortification. Furthermore, the manager took his part away, and gave him another, less prominent, but more difficult.

Years went by, and Irving steadily climbed to a fame which brought him knighthood while the critical manager gradually lost ground. One day, shortly after Irving announced his intention of producing "Much Ado About Nothing," the old manager presented himself and asked that a part be assigned to him. Irving granted the request, and gave him the very part he had forced him to play years before. During rehearsal Irving narrowly watched the manager's acting, and at the conclusion went up to him and shook his hand, after gravely complimenting him upon his rendering of the part. Then he promoted him to the part from which he had been reduced. "I never knew what 'coals of fire' meant till then," was the remark which the old actor and manager was overheard to make when Irving retired.

Fatal Delay.

Sir William Crookes, the eminent scientist, who has been appointed a member of the Order of Merit, was one of the earliest amateur photographers. He experimented with the camera as far back as 1855, and was always saying to his wife, "Sit." She used to reply, "It sounds like a hen." Sir William is rather fond of telling the following story as illustrating the "instantaneous" knowledge needed in the profession of medicine. The professor of a certain medical college cited a hypothetical case on one occasion, and asked a student how much of a certain medicine should be administered to the sufferer. "A tablespoonful," answered the young man. In about a minute, however, he raised his hand and said, "Professor, I would like to change my answer to that question." The doctor took out his watch. "My young friend," he remarked, "your patient has been dead 40 seconds."

Will You Help It In Its Hour of Need.... ?

THE HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

COLLEGE STREET, TORONTO

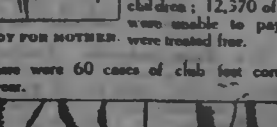
READY FOR MOTHER.

Appeals to Fathers and Mothers of Ontario on behalf of suffering children.

This Institution did more work in 1910 than ever before. Total In-Patients 1,224. Of these, 783 were from the city and 441 from the country.

Since its organization, the Hospital has treated in its cots and beds 16,837 children; 12,370 of these were unable to pay and were treated free.

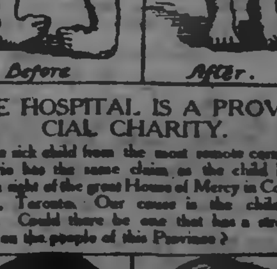
There were 60 cases of club feet corrected last year.



Before After.

THE HOSPITAL IS A PROVINCIAL CHARITY.

The sick child from the most remote corner of Ontario has the same claim as the child living within sight of the great House of Mercy in College Street, Toronto. Our cause is the children's cause. Could there be one that has a stronger claim on the people of this Province?



Before After.

If the Hospital is to continue its great work, it must appeal to your pocketbook as well as to your heart. Let your Dollars be messengers of mercy to the suffering little children of Ontario.

Please send your contribution to J. Ross Robertson, Chairman, or to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, The Hospital for Sick Children, College St., Toronto.

The Famous Rayo

Does Not Strain the Eyes

Don't use a small, concentrated light over one shoulder. It puts an unequal strain on your eyes. Use a diffused, soft, mellow light that cannot flicker, that equalizes the work of the eyes, such as the Rayo Lamp gives, and avoid eye strain.

The Rayo is designed to give the best light, and it does.

It has a strong, durable shade-holder that is held firm and true. A new burner gives added strength. Made of solid brass and finished in nickel. Easy to keep polished. The Rayo is low priced, but no other lamp gives a better light at any price.

CANNOT BE FOUND

Authorities Would Like to Know Where Larry Kiloran of Norwood is

The authorities are having a difficult time in their endeavors to find out the whereabouts of Larry Kiloran, of Norwood.

Magistrate Edmison recently made a conviction against him for the illegal selling of liquor and ordered his commitment to the county jail for a term of four months.

Then Kiloran could not be found, and up to the present has evaded arrest.

ADAPTABILITY

That's What Counts Greater Asset Than Merely An Engaging Personality

Grace Van Studdiford, the star of "A Bridal Trip," stated in an interview with the New York World, that it was adaptability rather than personality, that counted on the stage.

"A woman may have a strong personality in the drawing room or on the street and at the same time may not be versatile enough to succeed on the stage. The art of interpretation calls as much for the losing of personality in certaining characters as it does for the sustaining of personality in other characters. Vivacity, originality and energy count a great deal more than attractiveness of personality. And all these attributes are summed up in the one short, but very expressive word, "ability."

A WEDDING OF LOCAL INTEREST

Miss Lily Macklin, daughter of J. G. Macklin, C.E., formerly chief engineer of the Midland division of the Grand Trunk, was married recently to Mr. A. T. Bovey, son of Professor Bovey, formerly of McGill University, by Canon Hensley Henson, at Westminster Abbey, in the presence of four hundred guests. The ceremony was followed by dinner at the Savoy Hotel.

BIGGS—HENRY.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at 2.30 this afternoon at the rectory of Knox church, when Miss Mary Henry, 187 Bethune street, was united in marriage to Mr. George Biggs, also of this city.

Rev. H. J. Keith officiated. A few of the intimate friends of the young couple were present. Both were the recipients of many beautiful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Biggs will reside at 218 Park street.

NEW COACHES FOR THE FLYER

It is the intention of the Grand Trunk after the New Year to put on a couple of new coaches on the Toronto flyer which leaves here at 7.10 every morning.

A splendid up-to-date parlor coach similar to those in use on the main line will be added, also a baggage car. This train will now run to Toronto as formerly, and from there be taken to Brockville on the main line every day.

The coaches are described as being very luxurious and complete.

IMPORTANT TO HOUSEKEEPERS

The Peterborough Hardware Co. will have a demonstration at their store Friday and Saturday, and invite the attention of housekeepers. Chi-Namel, the most valuable preparation for the renewing of the finish of furniture, will be demonstrated. It is invaluable to housekeepers, and should have a place in every home.

Song Service at Crystal

The Crystal Theatre will be the scene of another bright song service on Sunday night. Last Sunday the theatre was well filled, and it is hoped that next Sunday night there will be a still larger crowd. The leader has introduced a brief Bible reading, not more than five minutes, but it's interesting. There will be a male solo by one of the city's good singers, and the quartette will sing "Remember Me" You can drop in at any time, and leave as it suits you.

Last night an orchestra was organized in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The officers will be, President, Mr. Mendel Green; vice-president, Mr. Brayshaw, and secretary-treasurer, Mr. C. Green The purpose is to make this organization a musical club, for the purpose of encouraging the study and practice of good music. The next meeting of the club will be held next Friday night at 8 o'clock sharp, when the executive committee will submit a constitution for the approval of the club.

The Sunday Morning Bible Study Club will meet as usual on Sunday morning at 9.30. The leader has been asked to change the hour of the club, but he believes that a man who cannot get up in time to attend a Bible class at that hour has very little possibilities in him, and a Bible class would only serve to make his responsibility the more keenly felt.

Is the Advice of Customer to Butcher — Objects to Aeroplane Glide of Meat Rates

"How is it," remarked a dis-gruntled reader to the Berkshire editor to-day, "that butchers buy dressed hogs for 9 cents a pound and sell them for 18 or 20 cents! When it comes to making over a hundred per cent. profit that's pretty good business, isn't it —from the butcher's standpoint.

"If they'd butcher the prices a little more the suffering public would feel immensely accommodated. And it's only fair that they should," he added.

THE FURORE OF THE CONTINENT

Is What Grace Van Studdiford is Starring in This Season

Another European success will be presented at the Grand, in "A Bridal Trip"; but better still this attraction will be the medium of reintroducing to our theatre goers, — Grace Van Studdiford. The splendid voice and magnetic personality of this leader among American prima donnas are well remembered in our city, from the time she first won the American public by her beautiful voice and brilliant acting. Her own best vocal accomplishments of the past are said to be eclipsed by her singing in this imported offering, which is to be taken to New York within a fortnight.

As for the comic opera itself, the story has to do with the subterfuges that a Turkish prince, enamored of a fascinating young widow, indulges in to win her for his bride. He has seen her but once prior to his departure from Turkey on a tour of the world. He has never forgotten her and immediately takes up her quest upon his return home. He finds her on the eve of her marriage to an Englishman who covets her dowry. The prince is in despair of persuading the widow to renounce her bethrothal when a gypsy girl announces her willingness to help him, because she herself wished to regain the love of the Englishman, who had promised to marry her. The wedding punch is drugged, and all the guests, including the widow, are conveyed to the palace of the prince. Upon awakening from their stupor, they are told that they have died and are in Paradise. The complication that follow are many and unusual, but, of course, in the end, the prince marries the widow.

It is predicted that this new comic opera will take our theatre-goers back to the good old days, when real singers had real songs to sing, and real comedians had real jokes to tell. An idea of the verity of this can be gained from the fact that an exceptionally capable company of principals has been engaged to support Miss Van Studdiford. Among them are Maude Odell, Harry MacDonough, Bernice Morshon, Robert Pitkin, George Leon Moroe, Florence Kolb, and H. David Todd. The chorus is one of the largest and best singing aggregations of pretty girls that have ever visited Canada. The regular House Orchestra will be considerably augmented for this engagement.

STAGE HANDS GOT A DECISION OVER JOHNSON

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Although it hurt him considerably to admit it, Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion of the world, had to confess that he was "licked" last night by half a dozen stage hands at the La Salle Theatre, when he tried to invade the stage "to see a friend."

Johnson created such a commotion outside the theatre in the lobby after he was thrown out, that 500 people gathered to watch the dispute. Madison street was blocked for 20 minutes by the crowd that wanted to see the heavyweight champion "get his."

Johnson, with his wife, occupied a stage box at the performance of "The Sweetest Girl in Paris." During one of the intermissions Johnson sent his card back to Alex. Carr, a member of the company, whom Johnson said was a "friend." Carr sent word back he was too busy to come to the Johnson box, whereupon the fighter decided to go to Carr's dressing-room, although not invited to do so.

When he reached the stage door Johnson was stopped by the door-tender, but forced his way on to the stage. There he was met by one of the managers, who asked him to withdraw. Johnson refused, and half a dozen stage hands threw him out into the alley behind the theatre. The fighter made his way to the front of the house, and demanded admission back to his box. This was refused and Johnson started a scene. His wife, who heard of the disturbance, joined him in the lobby, and finally induced him to enter his automobile and drive away.

THE CURLING SEASON WILL BE OPENED TO-MORROW

The curling season will, in all likelihood, commence to-morrow. The ice on the Charlotte street rink to-day is in almost perfect condition, and Mr. McIntosh, the caretaker, stated that it would be ready on Saturday. Four rinks will be available.

Regarding the enthusiasm which is being displayed in the game this year Mr. R. M. Waddell, an ardent curler, said that it was greater than ever. There is fully twenty per cent more members who have signified their intention of breaking into this popular pastime this year. The meeting last evening to arrange rinks and select skips, was largely attended.

There is in the neighborhood of one hundred and forty members for the season 1910-11.

The regular schedule of games will not commence until January 1st, the rink until then being used by the players in getting into shape for the usual schedule.

LINERS

Ty Cobb hit for an average of .556 against Russell-Ford of the Highlanders last season.

Catcher Bill Carrigan of the Boston Red Sox and formerly of Toronto, has gone into the cigar business in Lewiston, Me.

The St. Louis and New York pitchers were easy picking for both Lajoie and Cobb last season.

Addie Joss, of the Naps, is in a private hospital in Cleveland, recovering from an operation for varicose veins.

Charley Comiskey will back a hockey team in Chicago this winter. The team will be known as the White Sox.

Victor Saier, first baseman of the Lansing Southern Michigan League team, has signed with the Chicago Cubs.

According to Eddie Collins, of the Athletics, Ed. Walsh is the toughest pitcher in the game to steal a base on.

Ralph Glaze, the old Boston pitcher, has been sold by the Indianapolis club to Montreal, of the Eastern League.

Pitcher George McQuillen, recently traded to Cincinnati by Philadelphia, has started training for next season at Hot Springs, Ark.

John P. Harris, owner of the Boston Doves, has signed Christy Mathewson and "Chief" Myers—to do their vaudeville stunt in Pittsburg.

A story from South Bend, Ind., has it that Lee Tannehill, of the Chicago White Sox, is to buy the South Bend team and act as playing manager next season.

Heinie Peitz, Carl Lundgren, Jack Gleason, Jack Doyle and Fred. Tenney, five former big leaguers, have made applications for a try out as National League umpires.

YACHTING

There is a possibility that matters may be so arranged between the Rochester Yacht Club and the Royal Canadian Yacht Club that a race for the Canada Cup may be pulled off in 1912.

Owing to the fact that the Canadians demand that only boats regularly owned on fresh waters shall be allowed to compete in the races for the cup, and that the Rochester people insist that any boat complying with the building restrictions, whether a Great Lakes' boat or not, and sailing under the colors of the participating clubs is eligible, it has been impossible for the clubs to come together and arrange a race.

Neither side has shown the slightest inclination to give way.

At the annual meeting of the Yacht Racing Union of the Great Lakes, which body embraces the Lake Michigan, Interlake and Lake Yachting Associations, a plan was decided on for presenting the matter to the Rochester Club in a new light. Though there is no possibility of a race in 1911, as it is past the date at which a challenge may be sent, the Lake Union expect to see an international race in 1912.

Referee C. Nicholls.

The second game attacked the Maple Leafs against the Burglars and this game was a see-saw game, the score being no indication of the play, with but two minutes to play the score was 14 to 15, but the Burglars true to their name, stole over a few baskets and won the game. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

THE SOULLESS RELIGION

To the Editor of the Review:

Sir,—My letter on this subject, which appeared in your columns some two weeks ago, describing Anglicanism, through some inadvertance, was deprived of the sequel in which I set forth what, in my opinion, are the other two forms of belief that claim our acceptance at the present day. Puritanism or ultra-Protestantism and undenominationalism. The first of these originated with John Calvin, and the distinguishing tenets of this form of belief is, in several points, in flat contradiction to the teaching of the Anglican formalities especially to that of the baptismal services, and the church catechism. The communion and ordination services, as will be seen by reference to the passages from those parts of the formularies that I cited in my letter on Anglicanism.

Some of the ultra-Protestant disciples of John Calvin, calling themselves Puritans, came over to England on the accession of Queen Elizabeth, and were most unwisely admitted to places of power and influence in the church and became, as is stated in Hume & Smollet's History of England, "The Puritan Lurking Within the Church." All through the reigns of James I. and Charles I. these Puritan preachers, who only partially conformed to the Liturgy, as far as they were obliged, set the people against the Liturgy and Episcopacy the one was derided as an "ill-said mass" and prelacy, equally with Popery, was renounced with scorn and hatred by the Presbyterian Solemn League and covenant against Popery and Prelacy.

It was solely against the established form of liturgical worship, and the office and authority of the bishops that "the heathen so furiously raged together, and the people imagined a vain thing," and for fidelity to which Archbishop Laud was put to death by them after a mock trial. When the Puritan came into power under Cromwell the Episcopal clergy were driven from their parishes, and exiled to the number of 7,000, and their places filled by Puritan preachers, and the liturgy was forbidden to be used under penalty of fine and imprisonment. In the restoration of Charles II., these ministers were offered by the bishops reinstatement, subject to the condition that they should submit to episcopal ordination, and promise conformity to the liturgy. Now, these men who had all along denounced the liturgy as Popish and unscriptural, and persecuted those who believed otherwise, suddenly changed their minds, promised conformity, renounced their former ordination, and, kneeling before the bishop, submitted to ordination in the form of words that they had hitherto denounced as sacerdotalism and Popery, viz., "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," etc., and going back to their parishes only conformed as far as the lax rule of the bishops compelled them. These and their disciples continued, "The Puritan sect lurking within the church!" The church came to its lowest ebb when the Oxford revival began. This, of course, met with the most bitter opposition from these Puritans. The leaders of the movement were falsely accused of endeavoring to restore the papal supremacy, but their real object was to revive, not Popery, but loyalty to the doctrine, discipline and form of worship, as they are embodied in the formularies, from which the great mass of the people had been alienated by Puritan teaching. When we come down to our own time in Canada we find this puritanism existing in its most aggressive form, in the Diocese of Toronto, respecting which it will be sufficient here to quote the words of the late Bishop Bethune, in his last address to the Synod, in 1878. "How steady and persistent has been the effort to instil into the minds of our people that all who are termed 'high churchmen' are tinctured with the errors of Popery, and are in some subtle way undermining the principles of the reformation. We have it, too, imputed to men who are essentially, though it may not be professedly, men of evangelical opinion, that they are Sacramentalists, Sacerdotalists, etc. If Sacramentalists mean those who are supposed to rest for salvation upon the sacraments alone, I, for one, in a ministerial life of about 55 years, have never met with one who affirmed such a belief. If any one be called a Sacerdotalist, because he has reverence for the priestly office, as comprehending those who have authority to administer the divinely appointed and refreshing sacraments, he does not feel that he is contraverting, but obeying his Lord's will. And if he magnifies his office, because the transmission of that authority came from Christ and His apostles, and from them to whom it is imparted by their episcopal successors, he has satisfaction and thankfulness in the conviction that this is not a usurped authority, but one divinely communicated."

Puritanism logically and naturally leads what has been called undenominationalism, or modernism, because it is the characteristic form of the unbelief of the 20th century, that which rejects the supernatural, and is concerned solely with the material, that which we can see and handle, and comprehend with the intellect. Puritan leads a man to disbelieve in the supernatural grace imparted in the sacraments of Christ's own appointment, to true believers. Then, following the same line of thought, and claiming the same right of private judgment, in opposition to the authoritative teaching of the Catholic Church, he first doubts, then criticises, the Holy Scriptures as though they were human fallible writings, then, like the Puritan, interprets them according to his own private judgment, and finally repudiates all belief in their supernatural character, or the existence of any revelation from heaven. In fact becomes a rank agnostic. A Bengali gentleman, describing the disintegrating results of western civilization, says, "Hence it is that we have a generation of young men who have no land mark on earth, and no lode star in heaven. They begin to look upon religion as (what one of your clever writers called it the other day) a dream of hysterical women and half-starved men." An evangelical Anglican writes, "To undenominationalism I am opposed, root and branch. From every point of view this craze, now so fashionable, is to be deplored. It stands for a backboneless, believe-what-you-like system. It is largely responsible for the widespread dislike to a definite form of belief, now so prevalent, and that one form of worship or belief is as good as another. There is not the remotest chance of the Pope ever regaining supremacy in the English church, but there is a very real danger of the vast masses of our people forgetting God altogether, and putting Him completely out of their lives. This is the soulless religion. Puritanism has been on its trial before the world for over 300 years. It claims to be a purer form of religion than the reformed Catholic Church of England, and what has it accomplished? In Ireland 80 per cent. of the people are still Romanists, and have so much influence in the British Parliament that both political parties bid for their support. Under the name of Pilgrim Fathers they came over to this continent seeking for liberty of conscience for themselves, and denying it to others. And what are the results of their teaching here? Was there ever a time, was there ever a country, professing Christianity, when and where crime and immorality so largely prevailed unchecked. Suicides, murders, violation of the marriage bond, Sabbath breaking, this ghastly record of the daily papers is ever before our eyes. So far from repressing Romanism and extending what they call evangelical truth, the influence and power of the States and in Canada, is so great as to be a factor to be taken into account by politicians and statesmen. I could say very much on this subject, but I have already taken up too much space in your columns. I trust, however, at some future time you will allow me to resume the consideration of this matter, of the "un" "non" and "inter" denominationalism, the craze that now rages in the English Church "unity in perversity."

Yours truly,

E. SOWARD.

Peterborough, Dec 8, 1910.

THE QUESTION OF EXEMPTION

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—A certain portion of this community seem to be greatly exercised over the refusal of the council to extend the exempting of houses of entertainment, for "houses of entertainment" these in question certainly are. But the Council has no moral right, even if it had a legal right, to saddle the taxpayer with exemptions without their consent, nor the legislature either. Let the whole question, therefore, go to the taxpayers in January, worded say in this way: "Do you wish houses of entertainment, under private control, to be exempted from taxes?" If they say "No," then the whole question of the exemption of such houses in the past as well as in the present will be provided for, and the course of exemption will have to be retraced and cut out, instead of extended. As the matter stands at present, it is a crisis, not a settlement, but that settlement must be looked for without delay. Let enthusiasts for exemption remember that the taxpayers of this city are saying that this business has gone too far already. If the whole course, with regard to houses of entertainment is traced, and we are put back where we were at the beginning then we shall have peace, and the only peace possible, viz., peace with justice to all. Let there be no mistake made about this matter, purposely or otherwise. It is wholly a question of exemption. It may appear to be, and for the moment is, a question of discrimination. The good sense of the community may be thoroughly depended upon to settle the question of discrimination, but not until the question of saddling the unfortunate taxpayers with exemptions, is duly and properly settled.

Yours, etc.

A GREAT WOMAN

(CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR)

There is a saying by an American poet which at this hour speaks to the hearts of Christian Scientists the whole world over. It was cited in The Monitor on Saturday, Dec. 3 It is from Dr. Holmes:

'Love must be still our Master: till we learn
What he can teach us of a woman's heart
We know not His whose love embraces all."

Both as the loving woman heart and the noble leader, Mrs. Eddy stand in history where no woman ever stood before, and her Leadership has been conditioned by her love. She loved God enough to lay down all to follow his Christ; she loved her fellowman enough to suffer for them, to bear all and hope all for them. The record of her life shows the endurance and patience which Lowell names "all the passion of great hearts." She labored without rest [illegible] the help of humanity. That scorn, ridicule, misunderstanding, were often her portion but points the more clearly to her place among the few great leaderships of the world. For who has ever brought the gift of a great heart to sinning humanity to find its love wholly received? The greater the offering the more certain the cross and thorns.

Mrs. Eddy's love for her fellows is something which all who knew her personally speak of with reverent wonder. She knew God: she was like Abraham, a friend of God; and this kept the source of Love ever open for her. It was the greatest of all demonstrations — the multitudinous sweetness and tenderness of her thought for others, for those near and those afar. To see her was to see a face of exquisite purity, illuminated as by a light from within, which broke into a smile wherein love was like a visible emanation, touching the beholder to humility and wonder. But as she herself would have said this was not her own love, originating in a human heart. Rather it was a tide out of the infinite steps of Love divine in which the whole creation moves.

It was abiding in God which made Mrs. Eddy great. It was unswerving adherence to a high ideal. No material thing could hinder, no sorrow or disaster delay. She pressed toward the mark for the prize of her high calling and this prize was not so much a crown for herself as the healing of the heart of the world.

Christian Scientists feel that nothing which they can do is too much to prove their love and loyalty to one who gave them all she had. And so through this whole self-surrender she had indeed all to give them — the great All which the presence of the Divine Mind, of infinite Love, bestows upon His humblest child.

FOUND DEAD IN A LOT

Mr John Hunter, a well known resident of Madoc township, on Monday evening last attended a meeting at the Eldorado cheese factory near his place. After the meeting he started for home intending to reach it by going through a field, which was a shorter route than by road. He did not arrive home and next morning upon a search being instituted, his body was found in a lot. Heart trouble had caused his sudden demise.

OLD MISSIONARY FACED THE POLICE MAGISTRATE

George Buskin, Colporteur, Well Known Locally — Defendant's Lawyer Intimates That Wife's First Husband May be Alive—Non-Support the Charge.

The following is from the Toronto NNews concerning Mr. George Buskin who has frequently visited Peterborough in his capacity of colporteur:—

Thirty-five years a missionary in the wilds of Northern Ontario and for the same length of time a colporteur, Mr. George Buskin, was summoned to the police court this morning on a charge of non-support laid by his wife. His lawyer raised the question of the validity of her marriage and she explained that she had been married thirty-three years ago in the United States, but had divorced her husband for "incompatibility of temper," and since then he had died.

"Where did your husband die?" asked Mr. Buskin's counsel.

"In Burlington, Vermont."

"Are you sure—because I am told that he is still alive and that you have reason to believe he is dead. I am also informed that the divorce is not good."

He further alleged that Mrs. Buskin was of unsound mind and had been so described by several doctors, but would not consent to go to an asylum.

"I have worked for thirty-three doctors," said Mrs. Buskin, "and none of them have said I was insane, so I don't want to go to an asylum."

GLEN ALDA GLEANING'S

Wood bees are plentiful lately.

Mr. C. Doxsee, our teacher, is very busy training his pupils for the Christmas tree, which will be held on the 22nd inst., in aid of the Sunday school.

Mr. S. L. Purdy has a large gang of men at work cutting logs under the management of Robert McCaw.

I am afraid our tax collector this year will have to get a new set of whiskers. Taxes are 36 mills on the dollar.

As there haven't been many reports published about the hunting parties this season, I will give the report of the Glenalda hunting party. The season was very unfavorable. Deer are getting very scarce.

OUR HUNTING PARTY.

It was on the first day of November,
in the year 1910,
For our happy hunting ground our journey did begin.
We landed safe at the hunting ground,
We being five in number;
We built a hunting camp complete
Without either square or lumber.
Our captain informed us to hunt away
up the lake,
But to our sad misfortune, hunting
there proved a fake.
It was there we lost our collie dogs,
For them a reward we offered,
Or information of their whereabouts,
Of gold, silver or copper.
The one was black, with breast of white,
The other a dark snuff color,
They belong to two of our neighbor lads,
They were full brothers.
We then went down to Dady's hill,
Our luck it changed a trifle,
The hounds began and the deer they ran
To dad with the Enfield rifle.
We continued our hunt on Dady hill
Until we got our number,
Then we went home most merrily,
On the sixteenth of November.

Signed,
ONE OF THE BOYS.

THIRTY EIGHT HOURS WITHOUT ANY FOOD

Special to the Review.

Chatham Ont., Dec. 9.—Captain Tom Bennett and crew of six of the tug 'George Thompson' owned by R. H. Thompson, of Port Huron, reached Wallaceburg this morning more dead than alive, as a result of the terrible experiences they had undergone.

The tug 'George Thompson' which left Port Huron Tuesday for Chatham, went down in Lake St. Clair, in twenty feet of water, Wednesday after twenty-four hours battling with ice. The captain and crew escaped in the 'Yawl,' and by rowing and walking over the ice, made their way to Mitchell Bay, six miles distant.

The men, when they reached Wallaceburg this morning were all badly frozen and almost famished, having been thirty-eight hours without food.

HIS MEMORY WAS A BLANK; YOUTH LOST IN LONDON

Raymond F. Way of Tamworth Ont. Found Wandering in Streets of English Metropolis—Photo in Papers Furnished Means of Identity—Father Recognizes Cut

(Special To The Review.)

Montreal, Dec. 9th — The Canadian picked up by the London Police, wandering on the Thames embankment a few weeks ago with his memory completely blank, has been identified as Raymond F. Way, of Tamworth, Ont. The discovery was made through the publication of the man's photograph and description in the press.

Mr. Way's father who is in the Insurance business on seeing the photo recognized it as that of his son, who left home, February 25 last to go to California. The young man evidently has travelled a great deal since that time from the correspondence in his possession, but it is a mystery how he came to go to London.

ADDRESSED THE HEADS OF BOYS' ORGANIZATIONS

Federation of Organizations in Ontario and Quebec is Under Way—Thirty-five Delegates From Peterboro.'

Mr. F. H. Ritchie, boys' secretary of the Canadian section, International Committee of the Y.M.C.A., addressed the Sabbath school and day school sperintendents and teachers, and representatives of the several boys' brotherhoods of the city at a meeting in the Y.M.C.A. building last night in connection with the proposed conference to be held in Ottawa from Dec. 30th, 1910, to Jan. 2nd, 1911, inclusive.

Introducing Mr. Ritchie, Mr. Gilchrist, secretary of the local association, explained that the conference was for the purpose of federating the different boys organizations of Ontario and Quebec. He also emphasized the need of such affiliation to produce results in Christian work, manhood, citizenship and the conservation of the life of the community and laymen.

Mr. Ritchie then outlined the plan upon which it is intended to invite the Sunday School boys, High school boys, boy scouts, and Y.M.C.A. boys throughout the Province of Ontario and Quebec and stated that it was advisable to send one adult and two or three of the older boys of each local school, Sabbath school and boys' organization. A special train would run from Toronto on Dec. 30th, leaving the Queen City at 7 a.m. and arriving at Ottawa at 3.30 p.m.

Among the notable speakers for the conference are C. K. Calhoun, Field Secretary for Canada, Eugene C. Foster, of the Sunday School Times; R. A. Waight Hubert Carlton and others. The delegates to the conference would be entertained by the citizens of Ottawa and the only expense would be the $7 railroad fare and registration fee. Sir Wilfrid Laurier would receive and address the delegates at the Parliament Buildings and they would also be entertained to a sleigh ride, after which there would be a banquet, when the Mayor of Ottawa would address the conference. Messrs. Gilchrist, Hall and Dr. Middleton were appointed a committee to draft all sub committee to choose a delegation worthy of the city of Peterborough and the following were forthwith named for the purpose of appointing delegates from their respective organizations;

KNEW THE PREMISES AND THE REST WAS EASY

'Twas Easy to Lay Hands on a Quantity of Gin—Goes up for Trial.

Alfred Meakins goes up for trial before His Honor Judge Huycke.

In the charge of stealing six bottles of gin from the premises of Alex. Elliott, on October 24th, preferred against him, Mr. G. N. Gordon, his counsel, declined to elect or plead this morning, and the evidence of an accomplice was sufficient to the Magistrate's mind, to commit Meakins for trial.

County Crown Attorney Wood prosecuted.

Ernest Stephenson, an employee at Elliott's, said that he noticed that a case containing fifteen bottles of gin had been broken open and seven bottles taken. The case was in the storeroom, on the first floor. A stairs led up to the second flat, into which an entrance could be gained, by means of a window. Only the frames remained, the glass having been broken. The lower frame had been raised two feet. The window could be reached from a shed and fence in the yard of the Lock Company.

A PAL'S EVIDENCE.

The evidence of a youth who was with Meakins on the night of the theft stated that they had met on George street.

Meakins asked if he (witness) knew where they could go and steal something. The result was that both went into the yard from Hunter street, climbed on the fence, then to the shed and through the window, Meakins having raised it.

Witness knew the premises, having worked there. They gained the storeroom and took five bottles of gin from a case, drinking one of the two taken by witness, and also treating some other fellows on King street.

THERE BEFORE.

To Mr. Gordon witness admitted having entered the premises by the same route about six months ago, stealing one bottle of gin.

In this last affair he couldn't remember which suggested the visit to Elliott's.

Counsel submitted that the evidence of the accomplice was not sufficient to place Meakins on trial. It had not been corroborated. Such evidence was of the most dangerous kind.

UNIONISTS GAIN THREE SEATS AFTER TWO-THIRDS POLLING

Surprise is Sprung in British Elections With the Defeat of Tim Healy in Louth—Number of Votes Cast is Falling off as Enthusiasm Decreases.

London, Dec. 10.—Over two-thirds, or over 460 members of the new House of Commons, have been elected, and the political parties stand practically as they were at the dissolution of Parliament. The Unionists, who last week expected to gain at least twenty seats, thus far have actually gained but three. To date the changes of constituencies shows these votes cast so far:

Unionists	1,462,213
Liberal	1,320,308
Labor	248,774
Socialist	6,693
Nationalist	29,351
Independent Nationalist	13,987

The cause of woman's suffrage is making a pitiable showing in the elections. Thus far they have had but two candidates, and these have polled but 22 and 35 votes.

Outside the defeat of Timothy Healy, Nationalist, in his old constituency, Louth, which he has represented for 18 years, which is attributed to Cardinal Logue's prohibiting the priests to participate in the election, yesterday's results did not provide any surprise, unless it was in the failure of the Liberals to recapture Denbigh. The result in this Welsh borough is characteristic of the whole election. W. Ormsby-Gore won the seat last January by 8 votes and yesterday increased his majority by one vote, althought the polling on both sides fell off.

Mr. Frewen has offered his seat for Cork to Mr. Healy, but Healy has declined it, as he intends to try to upset the election at Louth of Richard Hazleton, Nationalist, alleging illegal practices on the part of his opponents.

The Redmondites brought all their forces to bear in turning out the man who may be said almost, to be a more bitter opponent of the Irish leader than O'Brien himself. Healey is known as the Ishmael of Nationalist politics and has followed an independent course since the downfall of Parnell, to which he largely contributed. The successful candidate, Hazelton, who Thursday also was returned unopposed for the north division of Galway, tried to send Healey into retirement in January, but failed by 90 votes. Exciting scenes marked the polling. Throughout the day there were free fights and incidentally considerable damage to property. Healey himself required police protection.

Riotous scenes are also taking place in many of the Irish towns. As the result of a riot at Thurles last night, John Dillon was unable to leave town and had to remain hidden, as a crowd waited in the road leading to the railroad station to waylay him. The trouble began at a meeting addressed by Mr. Dillon, which the O'Brienites tried to break up. The police had to make several charges to quell the fighting.

Other interesting developments last night was the capture of the only Nationalist seat in Belfast City (west) by Joseph Devlin, and the return of Sir Edward Grey, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, for the Berwick division of Northumberland by a majority of three more than he obtained in January.

Two members of the Cabinet, Premier Asquith and Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, were involved in yesterday's contest, but the outcome in Mr. Asquith's constituency will not be known until to-day. Mr. McKenna secured a re-election at Monmouthshire North.

The Liberal majorities in Lancashire continued to fall yesterday, without, however, any increase in the Unionist vote.

The most optimistic of the Unionists now have no hope of making serious inroads on the Government's majority. Their leaders persist, however, that the election was unnecessary, that the result practically amounts to a vote of lack of confidence, and that with the Nationalists and the Laborites exacting the fullest price for their support, it will be impossible for the Cabinet to remain in power.

The Unionists' successes in Lancashire caused great satisfaction to the Unionist weekly newspapers. They bemoan, however, lack of Unionist success in London. The Saturday Review says London City was carried by corruption. Such charges are seldom made concerning British elections.

Wales yesterday named its last candidates and England and Ireland will follow suit to-day, leaving but two Scottish districts, Wick and Orkney Shetland, to choose members. The polling to-day will be brief. Only 13 constituencies are to be called on to choose members and in only half of these will the result be known tonight.

Five Years For Juror.

New York, Dec. 10.—Not less than five years, nor more than eight years and six months, in Sing Sing State Prison was the sentence yesterday imposed by Justice Blanchard upon George W. Yeandle, the juror in the Rosenheimer case, who solicited a $500 bribe from James W. Osborne to queer the verdict.

Bold Burglars.

St. Thomas, Dec. 10.—Safeblowers got $180 from the safe of McPherson & Co., general merchants, at West Lorne Thursday night. The rear door was forced open and the robbers piled heaps of clothing and bolts of cloth around and on top of the safe to deaden the sound of the explosion.

KILLED FATHER THEN HIMSELF

Double Tragedy at Danville P.Q.—Father Murdered With Hammer and then Son Cuts His Own Throat

Special to the Review

Sherbrooke, Que., Dec. 10.—News of a dreadful tragedy reached here this morning from Danville—a man meeting his death at the hands of his son, who afterwards took his own life.

The men were James Houston sr, and James Houston, jr.

The former was found dead in the furnace room, where he had been working with his son, with evidences that he had been killed by a blow on the head with a hammer.

Investigation being made, the body of the son was found with his throat and body cut in a dreadful manner, the injuries being apparently self-inflicted.

The son, who returned from Victoria, B.C., only a short time ago, had been in poor health of late.

THE UNWRITTEN LAW FREES HIM

Vincennes, Ind., Dec. 10.—Menio E. Moore yesterday was acquitted of the murder of Charles E. Gibson, the millionaire oil operator. Moore shot Gibson at the Union Depot here on Oct. 3 last after Mrs. Moore had confessed. The "unwritten law" was the only plea entered in his defence. Mrs. Moore herself took the stand, and sobbingly swore that Gibson had long bothered her with his attentions, and that she had spurned him. Finally, she said, Gibson told her her husband was false, that he had an engagement that day with a woman in a house out in the country. She agreed to accompany Gibson to verify the story. They drove several miles. Then Gibson induced her to enter a barn, where she swore he assaulted her. After that she had been intimate for a long time with Gibson, under the threat to reveal her intimacy. She admitted that often she had taken trips to Cincinnati and Louisville with Gibson while her husband was away on business trips.

A note, unsigned, was finally sent to her husband, urging him to watch his wife more carefully. Moore charged his wife with her unfaithfulness, and she confessed to him. The day after he met Gibson in the railroad depot and shot him.

Carnegie Well Pleased.

Montreal, Dec. 10.—William Drysdale, who has just returned from New York, stated yesterday that he had an interview with Andrew Carnegie, who is very much pleased at the turn of affairs in connection with the sum which he devoted to aiding deserving Scotch students. Mr. Carnegie stipulated in the gift that if any of the young men succeeded in life and felt like returning the amount received, they were at liberty to do so. In fact, his agent in Scotland informs him that no less a sum than $60,000 have been returned so far by those who have been able to do so.

Mr. Carnegie is so well pleased with the thrift of these young men that he is preparing a letter to each one, expressing his great appreciation of their independence of character.

Heavy Fines.

Toronto, Dec. 10.—Hunting on Sunday is expensive. In the Parry Sound district, R. Barr, H. Richardson, A. Cotton and R. Standfield were all fined $5 and costs for so doing. Daniel Bottrelle, who killed two deer out of season, was assessed $40 and costs. Joseph Ellis, who hunted without a license, was fined $20 and costs. A. W. Doball was fined $170 and costs, Edward Taylor $71 and costs, and W. C. Goffatt of Orillia $140 and costs, for having mink, beaver and muskrat skins during the close season.

RAILWAY BOARD ADJOURNS HEARING IN CAR CASE

P-A-Y-E System Protest Is Not Very Successful After First Hearing, Although One or Two Minor Points Are Granted to the Citizens—Evidence of Citizens Not Considered Important.

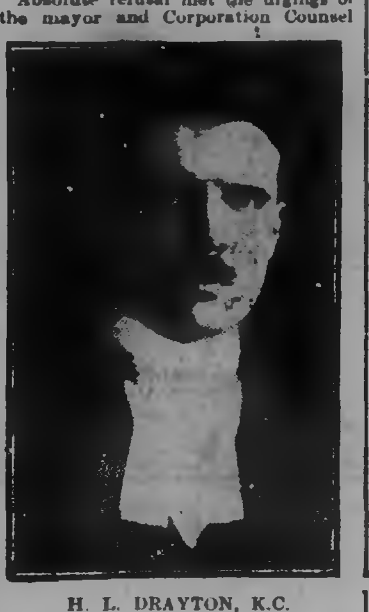
Toronto, Dec. 10.—The Ontario Railway and Municipal Board yesterday adjourned the city's application for a discontinuance of the P-A-Y-E system until Monday, Dec. 19.

One point gained by the city is that exit by the front doors of trailers will be permitted, but no ingress. H. S. Osler, for the company, proposed this, and a bylaw was enacted on the spot.

It was also announced that instructions had been given by the company to conductors to permit passengers to leave by the rear door of trolley cars if not interfering with persons boarding the car.

Remarks made by Chairman Leitch and A. B. Ingram indicated that they have not changed their views, but, on Mr. Ingram's suggestion, the board asked the railway to furnish statistics showing why the change was desired.

Absolute refusal met the urgings of the mayor and Corporation Counsel Drayton that the new system be suspended pending the further investigation.



H. L. DRAYTON, K.C.

Commissioner Ingram declared that no meeting of any kind would influence his decisions, and that he would absolutely rely on expert evidence.

Mr. Osler charged that the disorders of Wednesday night were directly attributable to inflammatory speeches at the Massey Hall meeting.

Indications were not lacking that the indignation meeting in Massey Hall on Wednesday night was not a sedative in effect on the board, and curt was the reception given the mayor's pleadings that the regulations be suspended. His worship's attitude was most conciliatory and he ended by throwing himself upon the generosity of the board, but only to meet with persistent rebuff.

The commissioners were candid in their statements that they attached little weight to the evidence of W. K. McNaught, M.P.P., W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., John Shaw, M.P.P., and others who spoke as citizens. "Common chatter of the streets" was Commissioner Ingram's characterization of such testimony.

Interest in the proceedings was shown in the crowded court-room during the entire session, which lasted from 2.30 p.m. until nearly 6 p.m.

Congratulations were freely extended Corporation Counsel Drayton, whose handling of the city's case was strikingly effective. Mr. Osler for the company made a strong presentment of its side and, incidentally, scored the mayor and council severely for alleged inciting of the public to lawlessness.

Manager Fleming was one of those present, but was not called upon.

Didn't Buy Revolver.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 10.—The Leblanc murder trial yesterday was a long-distance duel by legal methods between the youthful defendant, Hattie Leblanc, and Mrs. Lillian Glover, the widow of the Waltham laundryman.

Nearly a dozen men and women who knew the Glovers and Hattie more or less intimately, occupied the witness stand yesterday. Their testimony tended to show that Glover was persistent in his attentions to women, that his wife became so angry on many occasions that she was heard to say more than once that she would like to kill him and that she had applied indecent epithets to him.

Thomas J. Coffey, a clerk in a Boston sporting goods house who sold the revolver that was used in the shooting, said that a woman bought it, but when Hattie Leblanc was led past him, he declared that she was not the woman.

Bedouins Massacred Villagers.

Constantinople, Dec. 10.—A telegram from Jerusalem yesterday states that Bedouins have massacred the Turkish garrison at Keark, a town in the Turkish vilayet of Syria, and killed more than one hundred Christian inhabitants of the place, in revenge for the execution of a Bedouin chief.

The Bedouins, the despatch adds, now holds the fortress, in the vicinity of which there has been desultory fighting between the tribesmen and the Government troops for the past year and a half.

Christmas at The Shelter

The annual Christmas Tree for the children at the Shelter will be held again this year, and a generous response is hoped for from the citizens.

It will be the first probably for some of the children, as many of them come from homes where Santa Claus never visited, and where Christmas time has been to them as any other part of the year—nothing but hard knocks, crusts, and, in many cases, a curse.

Long Terms For Burglary.

Montreal, Dec. 10.—William Wistaff, and his son William, found guilty of burglary, were each sentenced to four years in the penitentiary, while two other members of the gang received four and three years. The quartette buried their loot in a cave.

Bible Voided Ballots.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 10.—Because the "drys" of Powell County, Ky., used the Bible as an emblem on their ballots in a recent local option election and carried the county, the State Court of Appeal has declared the election void.

PREMIERS IN SESSION

Quebec Alone Opposes More Members From Maritime Provinces.

Ottawa, Dec. 10.—The conference of provincial Premiers, or their representatives, to consider primarily the question of representation in the Federal House, met yesterday, when it was unanimously decided to postpone further consideration.

The conference resolved itself into Quebec against the rest of the provinces, except Saskatchewan, Premier Scott being on the fence. Manitoba was expected to be against the contention of the Maritime Provinces, but supported them.

Sir James Whitney was elected chairman yesterday morning, and others present were: Sir Lomer Gouin and Hon. Messrs. Taschereau and Mackenzie, representing Quebec; Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General of Ontario; Premier Hazen and Hon. Mr. Fleming, representing New Brunswick; Hon. A. K. McLean, Attorney-General and acting Premier of Nova Scotia; Premier Haszard of P.E.I.; Hon. Robert Rogers and Hon. Colin Campbell of Manitoba, and Hon. Walter Scott, representing Saskatchewan, and incidentally Alberta.

The Maritime Provinces desire to protect themselves in the matter of Federal representation, and if this is to be done action must be taken before the next census is taken and the redistribution, based thereon, adopted by Parliament. The representatives of these provinces would be pleased with an agreement which would restore to them the number of members they had at Confederation, but failing that, would be content with no further reduction.

GOT CAUGHT IN BELT AND WAS KILLED

Special to the Review.

Belleville, Ont., Dec. 10.—Greviu Cherictu, a Servian, employed at the Lehigh Cement Works, was killed last evening. The victim, who was an oiler, was caught in a belt and whirled to death. He was twenty years of age and unmarried.

German Army to Be Enlarged.

Berlin, Dec. 10.—In the Reichstag yesterday Gen. Von Heeringen, Prussian Minister of War, described the Government's plan of enlarging the army.

Some of the Prussian and Bavarian divisions, he said, did not have full quotas of artillery and these gaps must be filled, "in view of the thorough re-organization and increase in the artillery of our western neighbor."

The Minister added: "Modern coast defences require specially trained artillerymen. Heavy guns also must be added to the field artillery. Foot artillery must be increased by five battalions.

"The organization of an automobile battalion is required. The modern army cannot be led and supported without automobiles. The progress of aerial navigation demands the organization of three aeronautical battalions of two companies each."

Met Death While at His Work.

Midland, Dec. 10.—Angus Crossan was suffocated by gas while engaged in preventing the clogging of the ore and coke in the cupola at the blast furnace, leaving a widow and three children. An Italian helper was revived in time. A coroner's jury exonerated the Canada Iron Corporation from responsibility.

DEPUTY MINISTER OF JUSTICE SERVING TWO MASTERS

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth Defends His Subordinate For Acting as Counsel for Concerns Other Than the Government—Pugsley Brought to Time.

Ottawa, Dec. 10.—In the Commons yesterday a discussion was begun by Maj. S. Sharpe regarding the right of the Deputy Minister of Justice to take outside legal practice.

Hon. A. B Aylesworth said he had not made it his business to enquire, but he had noticed only two or three instances since he became Minister that Mr. Newcombe took outside cases. These were before the Supreme Court, and had not in the least interfered with his official duties.

Maj. Sharpe replied Mr. Newcombe was frequently called upon to make reports on cases in which the Government was concerned. It was obviously improper if the Deputy Minister had previously acted as counsel for a man who later on had a dispute with the Government, that he should be called upon to pass upon the claim for the Government.

Mr. Aylesworth was certain, however, that his deputy had so delicate a sense of honor that if there was the remotest chance of a clash with public interests, the private brief would go.

Whereupon Major Sharpe pointed out that Mr. Newcombe last summer had acted for the Bank of Montreal before the Privy Council. The Bank of Montreal had large transactions with the Government, and might easily have large disputes.

Mr. Aylesworth said this was a dispute between the Bank of Montreal and the liquidators of the Ontario Bank. The Government was not concerned.

Hon. Mr. Foster argued that no man could serve two masters. If one deputy could do this, all the deputies would have the same right.

In this connection Sir Frederick Borden was asked if the Deputy Minister of Militia would have the right to accept fees from the Ross rifle people.

"Certainly not," was the reply.

E. N. Lewis objected to the regulations of the Militia Department that no one can enter the Department unless provided with a pass. It was an effort to copy the militarism of older countries which would not be approved of here. Sir Frederick Borden defended the regulation as designed to promote the efficiency of the staff. A great deal of time was wasted by canvassers and loafers. There would be no desire to inconvenience any one who had legitimate business.

Col. Hughes, however, seemed to think that it was undignified for a member of Parliament to have to produce a pass, and Hon. H. R. Emerson objected to one or two of the Deparements being hedged around with a sort of divinity which made them not approachable. Some other method should be devised.

After spending two hours discussing comparatively unimportant matters, the House of Commons went into committee of supply, for the first time this sesion, and voted a large portion of the estimates for civil government before adjournment.

E. N. Lewis (West Huron) introduced a bill providing that a man, while hunting, who shoots another in mistake for a deer or the like, is guilty of manslaughter. Another seeks to have all vessels on the great lakes over a certain tonnage equipped with wireless telegraphy.

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) called attention to the fact that Hon. Wm. Pugsley had stated that he had not attended a meeting of the public accounts committee in 1908, when a row had occurred over sub-target gun accounts. He read from reports to show that the Minister had been there and had obstructed proceedings. Mr. Pugsley replied that when he made the statement, he believed it to be true, because he never attended the committee except when matters affecting his own Department were being discussed. In this case the committee had met to consider dredging affairs, and he had forgotten the circumstances. He denied obstruction.

Selling Liquor Illegally.

Brampton, Dec. 10.—At Streetsville Magistrate Taylor found James Farrell guilty of having liquor on his premises and of selling it, and sentenced him to six months in the county jail. He has been found guilty of several infractions before.

At Prescott—J. Knight, proprietor of St. Lawrence Hall, was fined $100 and costs for selling without a license.

At Midland—Inspector Ayearst and Inspector Fisher have been making enquiries and several charges of illegal liquor selling will likely be laid.

Jury Said It's a Lottery.

Hamilton, Dec. 10.—The jury in session yesterday afternoon returned a verdict of guilty against Miss Annie Langmuir on the charge of conducting a lottery in connection with the People's Furniture Co., and Judge Snyder imposed a fine of $200. His honor, however, granted a stated case on the question of what a lottery was, at the request of T. C. Robinette, K.C., of Toronto, who will appeal. The judge, with the consent of Crown Attorney Washington, threw out the charge of violating the Trading Stamp Act by issuing coupons.

Train Sideswiped Station.

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 10.—Two persons were seriously hurt and several others slightly injured when the rear car of a fast passenger train, eastbound on the Norfolk & Western Railway left the rails and "sideswiped" the depot at Batavia, Ohio, 18 miles east of this city yesterday.

The side of the car was torn out, the building wrecked and the track torn up for many rods.

WHAT ALDERMEN SAY AS TO CANDIDATURE FOR 1911

So far there is no suggestion of anyone opposing Mayor Morrow for the Chief Magistrate's chair.

When asked by the Review to-day if he was thinking of giving his services to the city for 1911, Mayor Morrow intimated that he would act as mayor again if this was the ratepayers' pleasure.

Some of the aldermen will not commit themselves as to what course they will pursue at the coming nominations and election for the year 1911.

Ald Batten will not be a candidate. To the Review he stated that as he had seen six years' service in the Council he had decided to not be in the field again.

"Yes, I'll be there and it's number One Ward for me," was Ald. Buller's answer to the query of what steps he would take. Ald. Buller replied in a manner, that bespoke of confidence, in the event of a fight.

"I am undecided, but you can say that if I take the field again it will be for the same ward," replied Ald. Bradburn.

Ald. Duffus.—"My position is that I am going into business for myself. If I go into the Council again I want to do my share in every line. I have always endeavored to do this, but the question which now affronts me is, "will I sacrifice my business for the Council or the Council for my business." Ald. Duffus intimated that the future and the electors must decide.

Aldermen Hicks, Metheral, Phelan and Gillespie had no definite statement to make. Ald. Turner is at present on a trip to western parts of the Dominion.

Ald. Morgan—If it is the wish of the electors of my ward I will be a candidate again. In the past I have given my best services and am prepared to accept nomination again if the electors see fit to confer that honor on me.

Aldermen Duncan and Graham could not be interviewed on the matter, hence no authoritative statements can be given.

A NIGHT WITH THE BELMONTS

A Show Everybody is Talking About—Two Performances at the Grand

Everybody is talking about the Belmont Minstrels, billed to give two performances at the Grand Opera House next week.

The Belmonts have a reputation of doing things up right, and with Holly Shephard in command, are confident, and justly so, that an entertainment of high merit will be given. The fact of such well known talent as Messrs. Davidson, McIlroy, Clarke, Turner and Wesley, and many others, taking part, means mucht owards the merit of the show. Rehearsals are being held every night, and details are being looked after by Mr. Shephard, who has lived in the minstrel world for a large number of years.

L. J. Keating, a C.P.R. telegraph operator, had his feet frozen while hunting and they were both amputated at Fort William.

Among seventy French Legion of Honor decorations conferred yesterday nine were given to women.

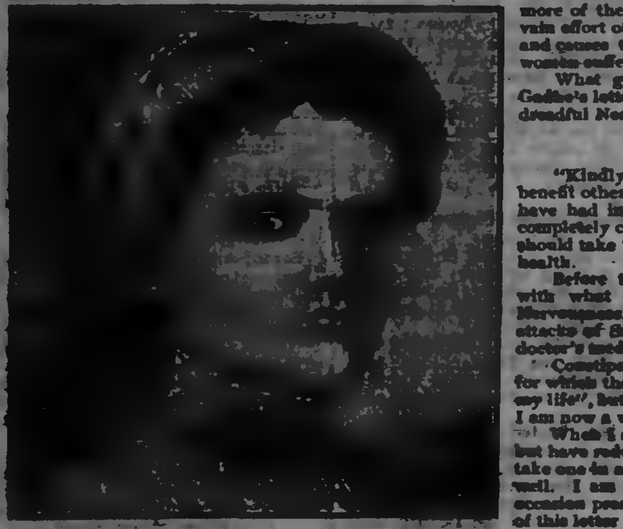
Reached an Agreement.

Guelph, Dec. 10.—At a conference with the officials of the G.T.R., the long standing dispute between the corporation and the city over the erection of a new station and the price for the Jubilee Park site were settled. The price for the park immediately to the west of the present depot, is $9,000, the company to construct a foot passage way under the tracks at Neeve street. The city wanted $15,000,



TERRIBLE NERVOUSNESS AND SICK HEADACHES

DOCTORS TREATED HER FOR YEARS

And Pronounced Her Case Incurable

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" RESTORED HER TO PERFECT HEALTH

The human body is the most wonderful machine in the realms of created things. Every part is related to every other part, all bound together by the marvellous Nervous System, which connects every organ to the brain. When anything goes wrong with any part of the body, the nerves carry the message of trouble and what we call "pain" is the result. Nervousness is not a disease in itself, but is the result of one or more of the really vital organs becoming diseased. It is the vain effort of the nerves, signalling for help, that weakens them and causes the excessive nervous attacks with which so many women suffer.

What glad news it will be to such women to read Mrs. Gadke's letter and learn that they can cure themselves of the dreadful Nervousness and Sick Headaches.

LAKELET, ONTARIO, MAY 16th, 1910.

"Kindly publish this letter of mine if you think it will benefit other women who might be afflicted with the diseases I have had in the past, but am now, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives", completely cured of. It is my firm belief that every woman should take "Fruit-a-tives" if she wants to keep herself in good health.

Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I was constantly troubled with what is commonly known as "Nerves", or severe Nervousness, and this Nervousness brought on the most violent attacks of Sick Headache, for which I was constantly taking doctor's medicines without any permanent relief.

Constipation was also a source of great trouble to me and for which the Doctors said "I would have to take medicine all my life", but "Fruit-a-tives" has banished all these troubles and I am now a well woman.

When I started taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took four at a time, but have reduced the dose so that it is only necessary for me to take one in a week, and that one dose every week keeps me well. I am glad to recommend "Fruit-a-tives" whenever the occasion presents itself and cheerfully authorise the publication of this letter as well as my photo". MRS. FRED GADKE.

MRS. FRED GADKE.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the ideal medicine for women's use. Being made of pure fruit juices, the action is mild and the taste extremely pleasant. "Fruit-a-tives" not only regulates the bowels, tones up the stomach and purifies the blood—but also acts as a splendid tonic for both the nerves and the general system.

50c a box—6 for $2.50—trial size, 25c. If your dealer cannot supply you with "Fruit-a-tives", send regular retail price to Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

SATURDAY, DEC. 10, 1910.

TORONTO'S RIOT

A number of persons injured and two hundred and sixty street cars with windows smashed and otherwise damaged is a bad record for riotous conduct [illegible] Toronto. The mob held possession [illegible] important street intersections for hours and the authorities were for a considerable time helpless. That the riot was entirely unexpected accounts largely for the inadequate police control, and it may be that inexperience in dealing with disorder in such large proportions may have had something to do with the inability of the police to cope more quickly with the situation. This experience, however, should teach the lesson that it is well to be prepared for any emergency that may arise, and that even in Toronto mobs may gather and become riotous. Canada's reputation for orderliness is good, and so is that of Toronto. This reputation the city will lose by one riot, even of the proportions of this one, but such scenes should not be repeated and the authorities should see that whatever regulations are needed to provide for a sufficient mobilization of the police force should be made.

Newspapers that take a course calculated to stir up violent popular feeling are apt to cause other things besides their papers to circulate. Violent talk is likely to lead to violent action, not by the thoughtful, but in all cities there are those who will take advantage of an opportunity to cause injury and destruction. Mob rule must not be allowed in any Canadian city, nor should violence be permitted on the streets. A repetition of such scenes would injure Toronto, and that city may be depended upon not to allow a repetition.

THE BRITISH ELECTIONS

For some days voting will continue in Britain, but the result will probably leave the situation very much as it was with the Unionists having a slight majority over the Liberals, but the Government, by retaining the support of the Laborites, Socialists and Nationalists, commanding a majority in the House. Only by the moderation of both parties can a serious crisis be averted, and the tone of the election speeches, especially those of Mr. Lloyd-George and Mr. Churchill, does not indicate any tendency towards moderation.

One bone of contention in the Lloyd-George budget is out of the way, but the abolition of the veto of the House of Lords may cause a more serious crisis. In the budget the Lords were asked to pass financial legislation—methods of raising money—that they disapproved of, but when the Government's legislation regarding their House comes before them they will be invited to take part in their own political extinction. The House of Lords would remain, but it would be Samson shorn of his locks, for they would have so little power left that they could not stand in the way of any legislation which the House of Commons demanded. The Liberals ask, "Why should they stand in the way of such legislation?" The answer depends upon whether a second chamber is necessary in a Legislature of the great importance of the British Parliament. The Unionists believe that it would be unwise and unsafe to leave practically all power in the hands of one chamber, which would be subject to the control of sudden impulses of popular feeling, and that while the well considered and calmly expressed will of the electorate must prevail, a second chamber is needed to protect the nation from hasty and ill-considered acts. They have recognized the progress of democracy in power and intelligence to such an extent as to call for a remodelling of the House of Lords, and the abolition of the hereditary principle in the composition of the House, and the proposals of Lord Rosebery, a Liberal and a former Liberal leader, to abolish that principle, and to provide for a House of Lords constituted of the ablest and most experienced men was adopted by the whole House. But when the question is the practical extinction of the power of the ancient second chamber, will the Lords acquiesce? If they do not, the Liberals propose to ask the King to create enough peers entertaining their views, to give them a majority over the lords who object to committing political suicide. Then will the King consent to the creation of several hundred lords at one stroke? If he does consent the creation of such a number of lords—whether barons, viscounts or earls—will be one of the greatest farces in history. If he does not, there will be a constitutional crisis, the outcome of which it would be difficult to foresee. An attack upon King George would undoubtedly follow, for the Radicals, and the Radicals are the moving force in the Liberal party, would not hesitate to take that course, much as it would be to be deplored. The King would have to find advisers who would take the responsibility for his action, and in the electoral contest that would follow the Radical attack should be directed against them, but it is doubtful if this constitutional course would be adhered to [illegible]

Britain has weathered during its history a great political storms and crisis, and it may sail safely through this one in a channel that is not now visible in the political fog.

THE GARBAGE QUESTION

That all-important garbage by-law has been one of the most persistently shelved measures of the year in the City Council. Months ago the Property Committee was instructed to take up the question of garbage disposal. Several times inquiries were made as to what had been done, but the same answer from the committee of not having time enough, or something to that effect, was always the one given. At the last meeting of the council nothing had been done in the matter by the Property Committee. Such negligence is gross and inexcusable. An important duty has been sidestepped and the most vital municipal question of the year is left unanswered.

EDITORIAL NOTES

One of the most disgraceful things in connection with Toronto's street car riot is the Globe's attempt to make political capital out of it.

Alberta is in a peck of trouble over its collapsed Great Waterways railway deal. The $7,400,000 raised on bonds guaranteed by the Province, is in the banks, and is costing the Government at the rate of $185,000 a year. The Government wishes to divert it to other uses, the railway promoters say it cannot be done, and legal tangles and expenses loom up. It costs to have a Liberal Government of the choosing of the bosses at Ottawa.

Lord Strathcona at a recent dinner in London referred to the time when the Canadian west did not raise a bushel of grain where now 100 million bushels is grown and British Columbia was called a sea of mountains. Was it not Edward Blake who applied this term to the Pacific Province at the time when the Liberals were protesting that the Canadian Pacific railway would not make enough to pay for axle grease?

If Canada does business at all on a reciprocity basis, the conditions must be the maintenance of the integrity of the British preference, and the protection of Canadian industrial and agricultural interests.—Peterborough Examiner, Dec. 8th.

This showed that under the Free Trade fiscal system Great Britain is doing remarkably well.—Peterborough Examiner, Dec. 8th.

Extradition Granted.

Washington, Dec. 10.—United States Secretary of State Knox yesterday granted the request of Italy for the surrender of Porter Charlton, charged with the murder of his wife at Lake Como, Italy. The Secretary holds that the fact that Italy refuses to surrender her citizens to the United States for trial does not relieve this country from the obligation of the extradition treaty to surrender to Italy fugitives from justice from that country.

The question of the insanity of Charlton, it is suggested, is one for the courts, and not for the department to determine.

North Bay's Hospital.

North Bay, Dec. 10.—The formal opening of the enlarged Victorian Order Hospital here yesterday was marked by the presence of Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands and Mines; Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and J. L. Englehart, chairman of the Government Railway Commission; George Graham, M.P. for Nipissing, and H. Morel, M.P.P., all of whom delivered addresses. The improvements cost $18,000.

Sues to Recover $8,000,000.

Brussels, Dec. 10.—Attorneys for Princess Louise of Belgium yesterday entered a formal suit for the recovery of $8,000,000 which had belonged to her father, the late King Leopold, and is now held by the Neider Fullbach foundation. The Belgium Government also claims the money on the ground that it came from the Belgian Congo and belongs to the state.

Bribed Witness to Stay Away.

Brantford, Dec. 10—Harry Gourjian, an Armenian interpreter, was fined $30 here yesterday by Judge Hardy on the charge of bribing a police court witness to stay away from court.

Matthew Jones, contractor, with a traction engine and two horses, went through the bridge on the Burford road at Daubigny Creek Thursday night. The horses were badly injured.

Cuban Congressmen in Duel.

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 10.—Severo Moleon and Gen. Sanches Figuera, both members of the House of Representatives and the latter a negro, had an impromptu duel with revolvers yesterday in a crowded street in the rear of the palace.

Moleon received a bullet in the neck and died shortly afterwards in an hospital, while Figuera was wounded in the stomach, probably fatally. Two passers-by were struck with bullets.

Moleon had just left the palace, where he had been in conference with President Gomez, and, meeting Figuera, immediately opened fire. A long-standing political feud was the cause of the duel.

By Stewart Edward White

Finally he pulled up opposite the Orde house, sprang up the walk and into the front door.

"Hello, sweetheart!" he called cheerily.

The echoes alone answered him. He cried again and yet again, with a growing feeling of disappointment that Carroll should happen to be from home. A moment later Mary, the Irish servant girl, came through the dining room, caught sight of Orde, threw her apron over her head and burst into extravagant demonstrations of grief.

"What is it, Mary?" he asked very quietly.

But the girl only wept the louder. Orde sprang forward to shower her with questions. These elicited nothing but broken and incoherent fragments concerning "the missus," "oh, the sad day!" At this moment Bobby appeared from the direction of the kitchen. Orde, frantic with alarm, fell upon his son. Bobby could only mumble something about "smallpox" and "took mamma away with doctor."

"Where, where?" cried Orde.

At this moment a calm, dry voice broke through the turmoil. Orde looked up to see Dr. McMullen standing in the doorway.

"It's all right," said the doctor. "Your wife was exposed to smallpox and is at my house to avoid the danger of spreading contagion. She is not ill."

"Where was she exposed?"

"Down at Heinzman's. You know—or perhaps you don't—that old Heinzman is the worst sort of anti-vaccination crank. Well, he's reaped the reward."

"Has he smallpox?" asked Orde.

"No; his daughter Mina. Lord knows where she got it. Mrs. Orde happened to be with her when she was taken with the symptoms that begin the disease. As a neighborly deed she remained with the girl. Of course no one could tell it was smallpox at that time. Next day, however, the characteristic rash appeared on the thighs and armpits. I telegraphed to Redding for a nurse. Until she came Mrs. Orde stayed by like a brick. Don't know what I should have done without her."

"When was this?" asked Orde.

"Seven days ago."

"How is Mina getting on?"

"She'll get well. I suppose I'll have old Heinzman on my hands, though. Emotional old fool. Rushed right in when he heard his daughter was sick. Couldn't keep him out. And he's been with her or near her ever since."

"I'm going to step up to your house and see Mrs. Orde."

"You can telephone her," said the doctor.

He called up Dr. McMullen's house on the telephone.

"You're a dear, brave girl, and I'm proud of you," said Orde.

"Nonsense! There was no danger at all. I'd been vaccinated recently. And somebody had to take care of poor Mina until we could get help. How's Bobby?"

After lunch Orde went downtown to his office. Newmark came in. "Hello, Joe!" said Orde, with a slight constraint. "Too bad you got sick just at that time. We needed you."

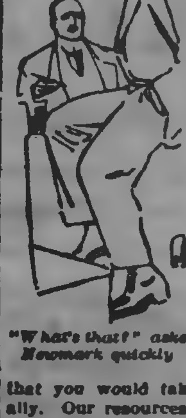
"You know I'd have been there if possible."

"Well, we had a lively time, you bet, all right, and got through about by the skin of our teeth." He arose and walked over to Newmark's desk, on the edge of which he perched. "It's cost us considerable. I'll have to get an extension on those notes."

"What's that?" asked Newmark quickly.

"I don't believe I'll be able to meet those notes. So many things have happened"—

"But," broke in Newmark, "the firm certainly cannot do so. I've been relying on your assurance that you would take them up personally. Our resources are all tied up."



"What's that?" asked Newmark quickly

"Can't we raise anything more on the nothern peninsula timber?" asked Orde.

"You ought to know we can't!" cried Newmark, with an appearance of growing excitement. "The last seventy-five thousand we borrowed for me finishes that."

"Can't you take up part of your note?"

"My note comes due in 1898," rejoined Newmark, with cold disgust. "I expect to take it up then. But I can't until then. I hadn't expected anything like this."

"Well, don't get hot," said Orde vaguely. "I only thought that northern peninsula stuff might be worth saving any way we could figure it."

"Worth saving!" snorted Newmark.

"Well, keep your hair on," said Orde, on whom Newmark's manner was beginning to have its effect, as Newmark intended it should. "You have my Boom company stock as security."

"Pretty security for the loss of a tract like the upper peninsula timber! I thought you'd surely be able to pay it," retorted Newmark, now secure in the position of putting Orde entirely in the wrong.

"Well, I expected to pay it, and I'll pay it yet," rejoined Orde. "I think Heinzman will renew the notes."

He seized his hat and departed. Once in the street, however, his irritation passed. As was the habit of the man, he began more clearly to see Newmark's side and so more emphatically to blame himself. After all, when he got right down to the essentials he could not but acknowledge that Newmark's anger was justified.

"Mr. Heinzman?" he asked briefly of the first clerk.

"He is at home ill."

"Already?" said Orde. He drummed on the rail thoughtfully. The notes came due in ten days.

"Well, who's in charge?"

"Mr. Lambert."

Orde passed through the grill into the inner room.

"Hello, Lambert," he addressed the individual seated at Heinzman's desk. "So you're the boss, eh?"

"Yes, I'm the boss," said he noncommittally.

"Heinzman holds some notes due against our people in ten days," said Orde. "I came in to see about their renewal."

Lambert struck a bell, and to the bookkeeper who answered he said, "John, bring me those Newmark & Orde papers."

The clerk returned and handed to Lambert a long manila envelope. Lambert spread its contents on his knee.

"Note for $75,000 with interest at 10 per cent. Interest paid to Jan. 10. Mortgage deed on certain lands described herein."

"I want to renew the note for another year," Orde explained.

"Can't do it," replied Lambert. "Mr. Heinzman gave me especial instructions in regard to this matter just before his daughter was taken sick."

"But I'll give him 12 per cent for another year."

"He said not to renew even if you offered higher interest."

"What does he intend about this mortgage?"

"To foreclose."

"Where's your telephone?" Orde asked.

He tried in vain to get Heinzman at his house. The bell had been removed. Orde left the office at a loss how to proceed next.

"There's the year of redemption on that mortgage," he reminded himself. "We may be able to do something in that time. I don't know just what," he added whimsically, with a laugh at himself. He became grave. "Poor Joe," he said. "This is pretty tough on him. I'll have to make it up to him somehow. I can let him in on that California deal when the titles are straightened out."

Chapter 35

ORDE did not return to the office. He felt unwilling to face Newmark until he had a little more thoroughly digested the situation. He spent the rest of the afternoon about the place playing with Bobby. Three or four times he called up Carroll by telephone. After dinner they sat on the porch until Bobby's bedtime. Orde put his small son to bed and sat talking with the youngster as long as his conscience would permit. Then he retired to the library.

Suddenly Orde leaned forward, his senses at the keenest attention. After a moment he arose and quietly walked toward the open window. Just as he reached the casement and looked out a man looked in. The two stared at each other not two feet apart.

"Good Lord, Heinzman!" cried Orde. "What are you doing here?" he demanded.

"Dake me somewheres," he whispered hoarsely. "I haf broke quarantine, and dey vill be after me."

"What do you mean by coming here and exposing my house to infection?"

Heinzman began to blubber and cried aloud in greatest agony:

"I haf somedings to say to you." He grasped Orde by the arm. "Dey are dere mit shotguns to kill me if I broke quarantine. And I haf left my daughter, my daughter Mina, all alone to come and tell you. And now you don't listen."

"Come with me," said Orde briefly.

He led the way around the house to the tool shed and lit a lantern.

Heinzman sat down on a nail keg.

Orde looked at him curiously. He was half dressed, without a collar, his thin hair unkempt. His eyes burned bright as though from some internal fire.

"What is it?" asked Orde.

Quaint Horoscopes of King George and Queen Mary.

The stars are favorable to a glorious reign by King George and Queen Mary. At least, that is the conclusion come to by the editor of "Modern Astrology," who has been casting the horoscopes of their Majesties. Apparently King George has one defect, however. This is his lack of diplomacy.

"He loves the straight and direct road," says the astrological expert, "and can rely sufficiently upon his own judgment, but this necessary quality of diplomacy will need to be supplied by his admirable wife, whose gift in this direction is shown by the moon in conjunction with Jupiter at her birth. He will suffer from severe headaches at times, also stomachic troubles, but have no real organic disease. He loves temperance, is passionately fond of his children, and firmly believes in spiritual things."

Queen Mary will make an ideal queen. Here is her character and future as indicated by the stars: "The Queen has a strong will and decided opinions, with a quiet, firm, and determined nature. In disposition she is open, frank, truthful, and self-contained. She is very faithful in all her friendships, constant in her attachments, a shrewd judge of human nature, and rarely deceived in her estimate of the character of others. The poor and all who suffer will be glad to know that Queen Mary's chief concern will be the welfare of her people. A good nurse and an excellent mother, she is sympathetic towards the sorrows of others.

"Queen Mary will in many respects be a remarkable Queen, and the nation is fortunate in having one so capable and competent to help the King through his great responsibilities."

Regarding the young Prince of Wales, it is prophesied that his marriage will take place in his twenty-third year. "He will thus marry under the most favorable auspices," says the same authority, "and will be blessed with a beautiful and good wife. The horoscope denotes exceptional ability, and the mind being so very intuitive and receptive he will absorb knowledge quickly, turning his attention to original and unconventional thought, and cultivating a love of music and the fine arts, also metaphysics and mysticism."

[illegible] money.

In days long ago pins were so expensive that husbands gave their wives certain allowances just for the purpose of the costly luxury; hence we call the money given to a woman for her own special use "pin money." Five centuries after pins were invented the peddlers sung the following rhyme as they went through the streets in London:

Ten rows a penny, O!
Isn't that a many, O!
Silver heads, golden points,
Ten rows a penny, O!

FOUND QUICK CURE AFTER EIGHT YEARS

Dodd's Kidney Pills Triumph Where Belts and Plasters Fail

Moses Sherwood, a long sufferer from Backache, found permanent relief in one box of the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills

Poodiac, King's Co., N.B. Dec. 9.—(Special).—After suffering for eight years, while all the time the remedy was right at hand, Mr. Moses Sherwood, a well-known farmer living near here, tried Dodd's Kidney Pills and is now as well as ever he was in his life.

Mr. Sherwood's experience is similar to that of thousands of other natives of New Brunswick. "About eight years ago I hurt my back from lifting," he states. "I used liniments and plasters and wore a wide belt, but in two years my trouble had developed into Kidney disease.

"My back was so sore I could not lift any weight, when reading a Dodd's Almanac led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before the first box was finished my backache was gone and I have never been troubled with it since."

Belts and plasters may give temporary relief in cases of Backache or Rheumatism, but the only way to cure them is to go to the seat of the trouble. Cure the Kidneys and the Backache or Rheumatism will disappear. Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure the Kidneys.

NEW ONTARIO AS FARMING LAND

Sixteen Million of Virgin Soil Await the Farmer With His Plow and Reaper

The Daily Nugget, published at Cobalt, Ont., has just gotten out an eight-page illustrated edition dealing with the farm lands in the great clay belt of New Ontario. The mass of information contained in this edition will be an eye-opener to thousands of people who have not been aware of the farming possibilities of the northwestern section of the Province.

There are 16,000,000 acres of the finest possible farm land awaiting the settler and much of this land can be secured at the rate of 50 cents an acre while considerable is available free on homestead entries.

The many excellent illustrations in this edition indicate the productiveness of the New Ontario soil. Wheat oats hay and vegetable fields are shown in various stages of development and it is hard to believe that the pictures were not taken in the most advanced portion of Old Ontario. They demonstrate that the new country is being settled very rapidly by progressive farmers.

The edition shows that the Ontario Government has a very promising model farm at Monteith in the clay belt and that much will be done experimentally there in the interests of the North Ontario farmer.

Above all the edition brings out that a new empire is being built up in this great North country and that between the farming the mining and the lumbering a country will be developed that the eastern manufacturer will be glad to make an entry into with his wares.

As this edition was not published as a money-making scheme it has no advertising at all, but simply to give the facts regarding the great farming possibilities of the country copies will be furnished by the Daily Nugget free upon application until the edition is exhausted.

LAME BACK

Cured by Booth's Kidney Pills

If you suffer from backache like Mr. W. M. Ferguson, of Indian Head, Sask., don't wait until you are laid off work before you give the matter attention. He says: "I was compelled to quit work six months ago on account of a lame, sore back, which had become so weak that I could scarcely get around. My limbs and feet were very much swollen, and I also had severe headaches occasionally. On learning of Booth's Kidney Pills I procured a box and found them a fine remedy. The pains and aches have left my back, and it has been greatly strengthened. The swelling in my limbs and feet have also disappeared, and I have not had a headache since. I am very much pleased to recommend this remedy."

Booth's Kidney Pills are nature's specific for lame back, rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, diabetes, and all kidney and bladder trouble. Sold by all druggists on the guarantee that if they do not relieve your money will be refunded. Postpaid from the R. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. Sold and guaranteed by Wm. Madill, druggist.

QUARTETTE TO SING AT MEETING

At Crystal Theatre Sunday Evening—Y.M.C.A. Invitation

The Imperial Male Quartette, that splendid organization which was heard with such delight at the Conservatory of Music on Friday night, will be heard at the Crystal Theatre on Sunday evening, after the church services are over. Those who have not heard this quartette will do well to take advantage of the opportunity which is thus presented by the Y.M.C.A. The quartette will sing two selections "Remember Now Thy Creator," and "Mother is Praying for You." There will, of course, be a big crowd, so come early and get a good seat. The singing will be more than usually good, for the large crowd makes good singing possible. You will enjoy it if you come. This meeting is for men, but the ladies may come if they bring a man with them.

Men are cordially invited to join the Sunday Morning Bible Study Club. The lesson is studied by the whole class, led by the general secretary.

The Mechanical Drawing Class will meet to-night at 8 o'clock. The attendance at this class is splendid.

ITS COLD

14 below

Another cold wave has been passing over us, and the end, apparently, is not yet in sight. Yesterday evening the weather turned decidedly cold, and the thermometer went down to 12 degrees below zero. It remained at that figure all night. Later this forenoon it negotiated another two degrees, making it 14 below.

BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS SOUVENIR

The latest from Montreal confirms the opinion that the Christmas Number of the Montreal Standard will be a great triumph in the way of artistic productions. The illustrations are superb, while the colored supplements are far and away ahead of any of the British or French souvenir numbers. The pictures of Canadian scenery will be a revelation to people in all lands. The Christmas number of The Standard will find its way to all corners of the earth. Dealers are clamoring for supplies, and it is abundantly evident that the publishers will be utterly unable to supply all comers, although they have thirty presses at work upon it. The Christmas Standard is only 50c. It has five beautiful supplements.

AFTER SUFFERING YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

[redacted]

Fox Creek, N.B.—"I have always had pains in the loins and a weakness there, and often after my meals my food would distress me and cause soreness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better, and I can walk with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it, as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers." — Mrs. WILLIAM BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N.B., Canada.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Suggested in a Brightly Dressed Window at Local Hardware Store

The Peterborough correspondent of Hardware and Metal wrote this week as follows:—

With Christmas but four weeks away, the hardware stores of this city are beginning to assume a "Present Suggestion" appearance.

The Peterborough Hardware Co. has an excellent window of present suggestions, composed of razors, safety and otherwise, together with the various articles that go with that necessary item of a man's belongings. The window shows much originality on the part of the dresser, Mr. McGibbon, as well as good taste in the color scheme. The color base is a very pale blue mercerised sateen, admirably lends itself to a display of plated articles, cutlery, etc.) which has been arranged here and there into mounds and hollows, these mounds increasing in height towards the rear and side of the window the articles placed on the mounds or elevations in an artistic manner, at once catching the eye of the passing pedestrian. One weakness, however, is the non-pricing of the various articles.

The above firm has been busy this week moving their wholesale department into their large new warehouse near the C.P.R. station.

Macpherson & Co. report a very busy stove season, having to reorder a carload of stoves that had practically been sold before arrival, this arising from a practical demonstration they have been carrying on in their store.

They will bing both morning and evening. Miss Gott, of Toronto, vocalist, will also be present and render some selections. On Monday evening a sacred concert will be held when Miss Grace Merry, of Toronto, one of Canada's gifted reciters, will be present. There will be an abundance of music. MANY MANUFACTURERS WILL EXHIBIT AT PETERBOROUGH

All the Booths in the Armories Selected for Hardware Convention—An Effort Being Made to Secure Special Railway Rates From the Western Provinces—The List of Exhibitors.

Hardware and Metal.

The executive committee of the Ontario Retail Hardware and Stove Dealers' Association are confronted with the pleasing but embarrassing position of having sold all the space available in the big armories at Peterborough three months before the date of holding the convention. The armories are 80x178 feet in size, and judging by past experience it was decided that about 60 firms might desire to make displays at the Peterborough Exhibition. Consequently the floor space was divided up into 52 booths 12x10 feet in size, equalling 120 square feet, whereas the booths at London last February contained only 68 square feet. Special spaces were also laid out at the ends.

In August the first announcement of the exhibition was sent out and on Nov. 22 the last space was allotted. Since which time applications have been made for space by two vacuum cleaner manufacturers, one saw manufacturer, one varnish company and one sharpening stone manufacturer. An effort will be made to arrange special space for these and other late arrivals.

As exhibitors have been asked to make their booths places where visiting retailers can receive selling pointers about the goods and to pay more attention to the educational feature rather than to the distribution of souvenirs, it can be taken for granted that the exhibitoin will repay any merchant for the time and expense entailed in visiting the convention and exhibition. While business will not be pushed for by the exhibitors, orders will be taken by many to be shipped direct or through the jobber handling the goods. One Northern Ontario retail firm it said to have purchased $3,000 worth of goods at the London exhibition.

The expense in connection with the convention and exhibition will be very heavy both for exhibitors and the Retail Hardware Association, the latter having contracted with Peterboro firms to erect the booths in the convention hall, decorate them with bunting, and place a large sign on each booth. A band has also been engaged for two nights and an orchestra and professional entertainer for the third evening.

SPECIAL RAILWAY RATES

The big attendance assured, however, necessitates making the arrangements upon an elaborate scale besides making it possible to guarantee a single fare rate (on the certificate plan) to all visitors from points between Fort William and Halifax. This special rate is available to any person attending the convention or exhibition, whether they be manufacturers, jobbers, travelers, retailers, or clerks. The wives or children of any visitors are also able to travel on the convention certificates.

An application has been made to secure reduced rates from points in Canada west of Fort William.

TRAVELLERS ARE BOOSTING

Quite a number of new members have been enrolled into the Ontario Association during the past month, many of these being sent in by travelers who are associate members of the Association.

The new gold-plated membership buttons will be ready for distribution before Christmas.

IMPERIAL MALE QUARTETTE GAVE SPLENDID CONCERT

Numbers Were All Highly Appreciated—Other Selections Equally Enjoyed—Successful Event at Conservatory Hall

A well pleased audience heard the concert in the Conservatory of Music Hall last evening given under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias. The attendance was not large, but those present were highly appreciative which they showed by the heart applause accorded every number.

The talent was the Imperial Male Quartette late of London, formerly of the Chicago Lyceum Bureau, assisted by Miss Julia Choate, Mr. F. Clarke, banjo soloist, and the Conservatory orchestra.

To make distinctions in the work of the various artists would be extremely difficult. Suffice to say that each number was given in a very pleasing and accurate manner, the work of the Quartette being in a class by itself. The voices of the singers blend perfectly, and they sing in perfect harmony and with great feeling and expression. Mr. C. J. Pink, the tenor, has his voice under remarkable control, taking his highest notes with seemingly the greatest ease.

The Conservatory of Music Orchestra as usual played in their customary finished manner, their first number being the ever popular Spanish march, "Rapes."

Both Miss Choate's violin number and Mr. Clarke's banjo selection were greatly enjoyed by the audience.

As an encore to the beautifully sung "Crossing the Bar," the quartette gave "Anita" as an encore, in a manner that won great favor, and this number was probably the most heartily applauded selection of the evening.

The following was the programme:–

LOCAL ICE RACES

Will be Held Here on January 17th and 18th—The Question of Handing Over Turf Club Charter a Topic of Much Discussion—Four Events, With $200.00 for Each Event.

If the committee in charge of the ice races, which will be held here on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 17th and 18th, hold them under the charter of the Peterborough Turf Club they will be allowed to have bookmakers on the grounds. If they don't they won't, and as a result will be minus about $150 or $200 bookmaking privileges money for the two days on which the races will be held.

Under law, the Peterborough Industrial Fair cannot hold races. The gentlemen on the committee in charge of the races are members of the board of the fair committee, but it is only as individuals they will conduct the races. As the fair association rents the grounds and track by the year there are no restrictions to prevent the racing committee from using them for the races.

A joint meeting of the Turf Club directors and the racing committee was held last night in the City Council chamber for the purpose of discussing the handing over of the charter to the racing committee, in order that they might have bookmaking rights at the races. In reciprocation of this members of the committee were to take stock in the Turf Club (which would entitle them to membership in that body) and as they have access to the track at any time the charter and track privileges would go hand in hand.

But while this was the ideal generally in mind, if the reporter caught the sense of the meeting right, there were other considerations that proved an obstacle to the quick and harmonious consummation of that ideal.

Three years ago or thereabouts, Dr Johnston became president of the Turf Club and was handed the charter and the books. At the meetings called by him he didn't inform all the shareholders, thinking some had dropped out. The stock wasn't a paying proposition and only a certain number of the directors took an actual interest in racing.

So meetings were called and officers elected and expenses incurred and paid by the active section. At last night's meeting, however, the other members claimed that the election of officers and rulings at the meetings were not legal, as they weren't notified of the meetings that had been held and should have been there to take part in the transaction of business, as they were entitled to by virtue of their being stockholders.

These latter stockholders had taken the initiative in calling last night's meeting, and in making the proposition that the charter be handed over to the ice racing committee with the suggestion that they subscribe for some stock. No definite conclusion was reached last night, and a full meeting of the shareholders to arrange matters will likely be held shortly.

The ice racing committee decided upon the following program of races:

Tuesday, Jan. [illegible]
2 35 class, purse [illegible]
2 22 class, purse $200.
Wednesday, Jan. 18—
2 22 class, purse $200.
Free-for-all, purse $200.

A meeting of the racing committee will be held at the Munro House on Monday to settle details.

JUNIORS CALL AND MEET THE MANAGER

Youngsters Turn Out in Good Number to Have a Talk

It's a long way to that brand new John Ross Robertson mug, but the local juniors look good to make a good start from the pole and be around for the finish.

Last night a goodly number called at the rink and met the manager and there was an all round introduction. Dr. Wightman too found time to be on hand.

"They look good to me," was the managerial comment, "and that cup is worth trying for."

The prospects are good for a practice Monday night and if arrangements can be made, the youngsters can take to the ice and shake themselves for a short session.

Those out last night were:—Art Hall, Frank Heffernan, John Coughlin, Jimmie McMartin, Grant Latimer, D. Anderson, Rollie Weir, Art. Reynolds, Bill Pratt and Allan Wade.

There are half as many again, who will no doubt be out for the first practice.

PREACHERS WERE BRIBED

In Order to Court Their Good Will Says August Belmont, the Celebrated Turfman—Evidence Before the Legislative Graft Commission.

New York, Dec. 8 — August Belmont, chairman of the New York Jockey Club, lost his temper before the Legislative Graft Investigating Committee yesterday afternoon and refused to answer some questions concerning the distribution of funds raised by turfmen for "legal expenses and publicity" when legislation inimical to racing was pending at Albany. Before this climax was reached, Belmont had given part of the inside history concerning an effort of the racing Associations to save racing interests when the Hart Agnew bill and other measures menaced them.

CLERGYMEN GOT THEIRS

He told how money was spent to encourage friendly feeling for racing among clergymen. Money was not paid to ministers themselves. It went to Amasa Thornton, lawyer, who informed him that quite a number of clergymen who believed that racing was being conducted as it should be, could be persuaded to help in the fight against anti-race track gambling measures.

CHIEF GOT HIS

Fifteen hundred dollars was paid to Charles H. Betts, chief of revision room of the Assembly, and State Committeemen. Much large sums were paid to other publicity men in the employ of the Racetrack Associations. Another surprise came with the announcement that the ledger of the Mutual Bank containing the account of the Metropolitan Turf Association, between Feb. 17, 1908, and June 11 of that year, had mysteriously disappeared from the bank. The cashier testified that he believed it had been carried off with waste paper and lost. It was from this ledger that the Graft Committee hoped to learn that proportion of the $500,000 fund was raised by the bookmakers' organizations.

FRANK GOTCH'S CASE

Despite Retirement Reports of Continued Activity Are Rampant—Champion Has Tobacco Habit Now and Never Chewed or Smoked While Wrestling.

Despite the continued reiteration of the report that Frank Gotch has permanently retired, rumors to the contrary continue rampant. When Emil Klank, Gotch's last manager, was in Buffalo the other day he said he hoped to get Frank to accept a stage engagement of $25,000 for ten week's work and said he should be happy if Frank would decide to come out and wrestle matches again. He was skeptical of his success in getting the champion to do however. Other reports from the west speak of the continued urging to resume defense of his title, to which the champion is being subjected, in a tone to indicate that there is a prospect that Gotch will resume.

This, however, is not the view of the matter taken in the following article, published in the Chicago Daily News:

Frank Gotch, the retired champion wrestler of the world, will not engage in another mat battle as long as he lives, according to a friend who visited him in his Iowa home this week. The friend sounded the former title-holder on the subject and the pastmaster at the palaestrian art answered that he was through with the game for all time.

Many wrestling fans were under the impression from recent interviews that Gotch was training faithfully for a hard match with the winner of the contemplated elimination matches for the world's title. They thought Gotch like another athlete who won the highest laurels in his line, had heard the clarion voice of the fans speaking in eloquent tones for him to come forth as the white man's hope and save the race. Gotch, according to his friend, hears no such voice, and if he does, would in all probability turn a deaf ear to such senseless attraction. Gotch's intimate friends in Iowa believe the big grappler has retired for keeps and that he is deadly in earnest. They know Gotch through and through, for they have been with him as neighbors from his boyhood to the present time. Furthermore, these neighbors know better than anyone else just how much kale the big fellow has stored away for a rainy day.

This particular friend of Gotch who visited him recently had this to say about his purported to clean up the field of foreign wrestlers clamoring for bouts:

"Has Frank Gotch really quit the wrestling game? Well, the strongest evidence that he has quit is given by Gotch himself, for the world's heavyweight wrestling champion has fallen a victim to the tobacco habit. He both smokes and chews things he never indulged in when he was wrestling. Since Gotch announced his retirement, he has been busy at two things — the improvement of 1,010 acres of as fertile land as there is in Iowa and the enjoyment of his well earned leisure. Gotch is reputed to have made more money than any other wrestler in the history of the game, and much of his mat earnings has gone for real estate near Humboldt, a small town, twenty miles north of Dodge City, Iowa. This land he has been improving steadily.

"When Gotch is not busy with his farm management he is riding over the country in his $3,000 motor car he bought last summer. He is never alone on his rides, but generally has every seat in the big machine occupied by his friends. Gotch holds the speed record for the twenty miles between his home town and Fort Dodge, having made the distance in something more than twenty-five minutes.

"Why did I quit the wrestling game?" asked Gotch in reply to the same query. 'Why, it gets so monotonous this training for matches. The machine-like regularity with which I must do certain things palls, and I have wanted to get away from it. I have money enough, 1,000 acres of good Iowa land, plenty of friends — so why should I work?"

Whatever Gotch does he does well, whether it is wrestling or farming. His management of his big farm has earned the title of the champion farmer of Humboldt county. His corn will yield close 70 bushels to the acre when husking is completed. His oats yield was unsurpassed in the county.

"Even though Gotch has retired from the game, easy money still flows in. A motion-picture company recently offered the champion $2,500 if he would pose for the camera. Gotch pitched hay, ran a grain binder and did other farm jobs for a day or so, followed by the camera man, and then pocketed the money.

RUNNING

New York, Dec. 9 — The latest English sporting papers contain an account of the death of Jack White, the greatest professional runner of his day, and some of whose records still remain untouched despite the alleged improvement in this branch of outdoor sport. Though his age was not mentioned, he must have been over 70 years of age, for it is nearly fifty years since he was in his prime. White came here as the London A. C. team in 1896 and about that time he also had the job of training the Cambridge University athletes. He was a quiet, inoffensive man, and never spoke about himself, and for these qualities he was liked by the athletes.

In the early 60's when Bill Lang and Deerfoot, the American Indians, flourished, White was at his best. On May 11, 1863, in the old grounds at Lillie Bridge, London, he defeated Deerfoot in a special race of ten miles, and the Englishman made a string of records from four miles upward, two of which have outlived all the efforts of the best men, both professional and amateur. White's time for six miles was 29 minutes 50 seconds, and the nearest approach to this was Shrubb's 29 minutes 59 2-5 seconds. White's time for seven miles was 34 minutes 45 seconds, and this record is a notable one, for he was the only man to come inside the even 35 minutes for the distance. W. G. George did 35.37 and years afterwards Shrubb did 35.4 3-5, which is to-day the world's amateur record, and so far ahead of what can be hung up by any amateur in any country that there is no comparison.

SPORT TALK

Bruce Ridpath is an honorary coach of the Toronto Canoe Club Hockey Club.

The latest claimant for indoor professional running honors, is Jas. Stanley, a Dane. He wants to meet the big ones.

Ad. Wolgast was recently married to Miss Mildred Engan. The marriage was a secret one.

The special correspondent of the Yorkshire Post tells a good story of Mr. W. Macneill, who rode Foolhardy in the Grand Sefton Steeplechase at Liverpool. Mr. McNeill had never ridden over the Liverpool fence before. He was offered a bet of £1000 to £10 that he did not complete the course. He took no risks. He pulled his horse back fifty yards behind the other when the flag fell, so that no horse falling in front of him should bring Foolhardy down, and for the same reason he ran wide on the outside the whole of the way round. The terms of the wager decreed no time limit. All Mr. Macneill had to do to win his £1,000 was to jump the fences. Mr. Macneill's pleasure may, therefore, be imagined when he not only won his wager, but actually finished fifth.

London View of the American Football Game

London Daily Express:—Take two parts Graeco-Roman wrestling, one part "catch-as-catch-can," season with a little French boxing, add a ball, and serve hot. That is the receipt for the American game of football, as played at the Crystal Palace yesterday by teams from the United States battleships Idaho and Vermont.

It is the fiercest thing in games. A bull-fight is as a kindergarten party compared to it. Short of biting each other, the two teams did all the harm they could do each other.

There was, incidentally, a ball in the game, but the onlooker seldom saw it. It was more often buried beneath a tangle of a dozen men, all legs and arms.

There was an umpire, a referee, and a field judge. The referee had a 60 h.p. motor-horn. And there was a pail-man, a sand-man, and scores of men with flags, who yelled and danced and urged on their fellow-sailors to more desperate deeds.

The pail-man carried a pail of water, and in the water was a sponge. The sponge served many purposes. At quarter-time—there are three intervals during the American game—the men clustered round the pail-man and sucked the sponge, five or six at a time, as a man sucks an orange, and sluiced the mud out of their eyes.

The sand-man gave them sand to rub on their hands to make them nice and gritty—and then the play began again.

Fourteen men, similarly armoured, sat on chairs ready to take the place of the vanquished. They were hoping every moment that they would have a chance to play.

There seemed to be no fouls claimed. They butted one another in the stomach; they caught each other by the throat; they danced on any chest that happened to be handy; they pulled one anothers' legs, and fell over each other; they sat on heads; they trod on an eye if it chanced to be in the way; they knotted themselves together in fancy designs like the jig-saw puzzles.

There are a great many places and occasions when the possibility of getting extra heat immediately effects an economy by decreasing the discomfort of the worker. In the office, in the early morning or late at night, before or after the steamheat is on, it is of importance to have extra heat. In the builder's outside office, in the shipping room, in the checker's shack, on exposed lofts, in railroad stations, in studios, the

SMOKELESS
OIL HEATER
Absolutely smokeless and odorless

is often a necessity. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. Apply a match, and it gives heat quickly. With four quarts of oil it burns nine hours. Has automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

It has a cool handle and a damper top. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking.

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel. It is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

BOY SAYS FAGAN MADE HIM STEAL

Arrested Youth Confesses and Implicates Teacher in Crime

Chicago, Dec. 7 — Rivalling dramatic chapters in Dickens' 'Oliver Twist' the story of how he became a burglar was told by James Hanry, 18 years old, at the Fillmore street police station.

Hanry, is one of five boys, all under 20 years, who are under arrest on charges of burglary. Hanry accused Hyman Weinstein, a clothing merchant at 1220 South Jefferson street, of acting the part of Dickens' Fagin. Weinstein was arrested and charged with receiving stolen property. He is now free on bonds of $5,000.

According to the story told by Hanry and substantiated by confession secured from the other boys under arrest Weinstein selected places for the boys to break into and then paid them for the booty secured in their raids.

"I met Weinstein for the first time a month ago, at Throop and Twelfth Streets," said Hanry. "It was an accidental meeting. Three of the boys under arrest were with me at the time. A teamster dropped his coat from the seat of his wagon. It was frayed and worn, perhaps worth 10 cents.

"We picked it up, and I was carrying it when Weinstein came up to me and offered me $1 for it. I sold it to him, and then he asked me to come around and see him again. He said he had a 'stunt' he wanted us boys to pull off for him, and asked me to come around to his place of business the next day. I did.

"He then told me about a tailor shop he wanted us to break into and rob. 'I'll pay you well and furnish you with a horse and wagon to carry the stuff off with,' he said.

"We didn't want to run the risk, but he insisted there was no danger.

"After we thought about it awhile we concluded that we would do as he said. The place he showed us was Nat Mosse's tailor shop at 2741 West Madison Street.

"'He had a fine stock of goods,' Weinstein said. We secured the horse and wagon from Weinstein and at midnight drove to the rear of the tailor shop. We broke into the place through one of the rear windows and were loading the goods on to the wagon when people living over the tailor shop gave the alarm. We had all the stuff in the place ready to load on to the wagon but got away with only part of the booty.

"After leaving the shop, we drove to a vacant barn at Hastings and Throop streets, tied the horse in the alley and hid the stuff in the barn. We slept there all night and the next morning Weinstein took the stuff away. He paid us $80 for the job.

"The boys who were with me were: James Ryan, Tom. Williams, and Tom. Powers. We split the money and had a good time for a week.

"Weinstein kept us in drink and cigarettes until we got ready to do the second job at 3223 Twelfth St., a ladies' tailoring shop run by C. H. Horberg. There was a watchman at this place, but he went out and played pool for an hour, during which time we cleaned out the place.

"The next morning Weinstein gave us $200. The goods were taken away by an express man. Weinstein was better satisfied this time and told us that he would have other places for us to rob. We had an extra man with us on the second trip. William Wright.

For dressy costumes the three-quarter length sleeve is fashionable.

The short skirt dominates even the most elaborate evening gowns.

The speckled plumes are new. They resemble great, fluffy squirrel tails.

Silk and net ruffles, cut circular, are used as a finish to the mohair skirts.

Table sets in black glass with silver trimmings are among the latest novelties.

Tailored stocks are of foulard, figured with plain linen or lace turnover collars.

Among novelties in buttons, pendants in imitation of jewels and small black and red buttons are offered.

SLANDERING FAIR CANADA

(Montreal Star.)

The campaign of slander and iniquity which has been waged unceasingly for the past year or more against Canada by certain classes of the population of the Western United States has cropped up again—this time in Los Angeles, California.

A Los Angeles paper prints an interview with a gentleman who has interviewed a party of western Canadian farmers from Calgary who, it is asserted, have been visiting California with a view to changing their residence. Dry, frosty summers and arctic winters are given as their reasons for desiring to make the change.

Can you beat it? Some winters, it is all Calgary can do to raise a frost, to say nothing of her summers. Last year several star hockey players, imported from the east at great expense jumped their contracts in Calgary and fled to Edmonton because they found Jack Frost too slow in coming around with the ice.

The Los Angeles paper also says that hundreds of dissatisfied settlers in British Columbia are going to California and Oregon and that a regular stampede south is on.

In this statement the Los Angeles gentleman is no doubt right. The settlers of British Columbia have made so much money in the past few years that they can well afford to go south—for a change of air.

They will be back in the spring all right to pick the strawberries and bite the bloom off the peaches.

HARRY HARD HIT

Wall Street, December 7.—Will wonders never cease? It will be hard for you to believe it, but it is true.

Harry Lauder, the greatest exponent of simon pure thrift Broadway ever knew, the man who never let a guilty penny escape, has fallen by the wayside. He has been "separated," disentangled, as it were, and as a result he is out just $25,000.

Robert E. Davie, formerly of Boston, and arrested here, turned the trick. And all the frugal Scott received in return were two full meals and a lot of copper stock of no value. Apropos of the marvellous feat, the following might help a little:

He loved the dollar,
The bonnie U.S. dollar,
And he clung to each dollar that he got,
But a Hub schemer fed him,
And for a big roll bled him,
Harry, the frugal Scot!

Davie, whose age is but 24, is reported to have cleaned up between $250,000 and $300,000 in crooked stock deals in Boston. This alone doesn't warrant his being called "a remarkable" young man," as he has been referred to, but getting $25,000 from Lauder brands him as a youth deserving of the title, "Napoleon of Finance."

MAN'S REDEMPTION

The following is from "Man's Redemption of Man," a notable article in the American Magazine, by Dr. Wm. Osler:—

Tuberculosis is one of the great infections of the world, and it has been one of the triumphs of our generation to determine its cause. With the improvement of sanitation there has been a reduction in its mortality, amounting since 1850 to above 40 per cent. But it still remains the most formidable single foe, killing a larger number of people than any other disease—some 60,000 in Great Britain and Ireland in 1906, and 589 in London alone. Practically between 10 and 11 per cent. of all the deaths are due to it.

A PLAIN PROPOSITION.

"A plain proposition is before the people. We know the disease, how it is caused, how it is spread, how it should be prevented, how, in suitable cases it may be cured. How to make this knowledge effective is the prime thing. It is a campaign for the public; past history shows that it is a campaign of hope. The measures for its stamping out, though simple on paper, present difficulties interwoven with the very fabric of society, but they are not insuperable, and are gradually disappearing. Only prolonged and united efforts carried through several generations can place the disease in the same category with typhus fever, typhoid and smallpox.

"In the comedies and tragedies of life, our immutable human nature reacts very much as in the dawn of science, and yet with a widening of knowledge the lights and shadows of the landscape have shifted, and the picture is brighter. Much has been taken—nothing can bring back the hour when sin and disease were correlated as surely as night and day; but there has been an enormous gain in a new outlook of the value of life.

"There are tones in human sentiment to-day which the ancients never heard; which, indeed, our fathers heard but faintly, and did not recognize their significance. The human heart by which we live has been touched as with the wand of Prospero. What has availed the sceptered race, what the glory that was Greeece, or the grandeur that was Rome, of what avail even has been the message of the Gospel, while the people at large were haunted by fear and care, stricken by the pestilence of the darkness and the sickness of the noonday.

"The new socialism of science with a definite mission to the individual man cares not a rap for the theories of Karl Marx or Ferdinand Lassalle, or of Henry Goerge; still less for the dreams of Plato or of Sir Thomas Moore."

BETHUNE STREET LADY HAD ANKLE BROKEN

Mrs John Tetro, who resides at 505 Bethune Street, while walking west on Brock Street near the G. T. R. Track, yesterday evening, was struck by a coaster, and when Dr. McNulty made an examination it was found that her ankle was broken.

This is the second accident due to coasting, reported by the Review. Mrs. Tetro's case is the more serious one.

A sleigh pulled by a youth, who was running swiftly behind Mrs. Tetro, struck her right foot, knocking her off the sidewalk and causing the injury.

NOT HIS MASTERS VOICE THIS TIME, BUT HIS OWN VOICE

His Master's Too for That Matter if He Happens to be a the Other End of the Line—The Telegraphone Records Telephone Conversation With Flawless Accuracy—Manager of Firm is in Town.

The air is conquered. Caruso sings a thousand miles away from New York through the agency of the graphaphone. The wireless flashes its message across the sea. You know and accept all this.

But its somewhat of a mild surprise isn't it, to hear your own voice and that of a friend as recorded from a telephone conversation. This is accomplished by a recent and remarkable invention—the telegraphone. Mr C. K. Fankhauser, the general manager of the Canadian telegraphones, Ltd., Montreal, is demonstrating the telegraphone at the city clerk's office to-day and this morning a couple of reporters from local papers were initiated into the mysteries of the process Perhaps the word mysterious is misapplied, for the apparatus is simple and the results are certain.

To quote from the company's prospectus:

The telegraphone is a little instrument which easily records and most perfectly reproduces the human voice from the faintest whisper or mere respiration to the highest notes, and with equal faithfulness the finest strains of the violin or the full tones of an entire orchestra. And the record is not made in a mechanical way on a wax cylinder or wax disc, but magnetically on a fine steel wire or thin steel disc.

The reproduction of the record is not an imperfect imitation of the voice or musical notes, but a perfect reproduction of it—no tone, no inflection, no modulation is lost or distorted. And this record can be made and reproduced with the machine near the operator or far away. The machine may be in one Province and the operator in another and still make the record easily and perfectly—using the ordinary telephone line to talk over.

Thus you may carry on a telephone conversation with some one a thousand miles away and record not only what you yourself say, but what the other party says, and do it easily and perfectly. This record is so clear and natural that on hearing it from the machine, one easily recognizes the voices, for the reproduction is perfect.

This record may be preserved indefinitely or repeated any number of times and does not lose its clearness or quality by time or repetition. Or it may be erased from the wire or disc as easily as chalk marks from the blackboard. In fact, it automatically disappears if you use the same wire or disc again—which one naturally does from day to day if the record is not of sufficient importance to keep for a longer period of time, and this is generally unnecessary after the stenographer has same transcribed.

ENGLISHMAN QUICKLY PLACED WITH FARMER

A tall and able bodied Englishman sauntered into the immigration office this morning looking for a berth for the winter, and five minutes later Mr. Thomas Armstrong, who resides about eight miles from the city, called in search of a man, and a deal in which both were satisfied was quickly consummated.

The Englishman's horde of wealth did not permit of his purchasing a pair of mitts, and a small satchel, containing some of his goods, was tied with a leather shoe string to a button on the front of his overcoat.

This bright idea allowed him to put his hands in his pockets. He came here in May and was placed with J. S. Armstrong, of Millbrook. After his time was up he worked for some time with a farmer, John George by name. He finished his term there and came to Mr Howson looking for a job for the winter on a farm, as he did not wish to go to the woods.

LOCAL REQUESTS.

"I have many local requests for a job on the farm for the winter months," said Mr. Howson to the Review this morning. "The majority of them I have no trouble in placing."

FAMILY OF THREE.

A man with his wife and daughter will arrive here this afternoon. They are all experienced in farm work and will have a home to go to immediately.

LARGE MARKET ATTENDANCE; A SURPLUS OF BEEF AND PORK

For the season of the year the market attendance this morning was large. Both the square and the Market Hall, were well filled, the numbers inside being as large as any this year.

The usual produce was for sale with the exception of potatoes, the cold weather being responsible for their absence. One man ventured to trust some to the cold weather and was asking seventy-five cents a bag for them. The market however was surfeited with pork and beef. Fowl of all kinds were as usual in abundance, the supply of turkeys being remarkably large.

One man has about as fine a bunch for sale as has perhaps ever been seen on the market. The price of them varied considerably. Eggs have not risen since last Saturday, and butter also has remained stationary.

Several loads of wood consisting of tamarac and hardwood were on the square to-day, also considerable hay.

The following prices reigned:

Pork — 11 and 12 cts.
Beef — 7 1-2 and 8 1-2.
Potatoes — 75 cents.
Apples — $5 a barrel.
Eggs — 35cts.
Butter — 25 cts.
Geese — $1.25 a piece.
Chickens — 75 cts.
Turkeys — $1.50 to $3.60.
Hardwood — $5.50 a load.
Tamarac — $6.00.
Hay — $10.
Pressed Hay — 85 cts. per cwt.

ANNIVERSARY OF DOUBLE HANGING

Belleville Ontario:—Forty-eight years ago this morning, Dec. 8th, 1862, Richard and Mary Alward were publicly hanged in the presence of about 8,000 people from all over the country, in Belleville, then a town, for the murder of William Monroe in Monteagle township. For many years subsequent to the public execution, the anniversary was known locally as St. Aylward's Day. It was, in fact, the first observance of the immaculate conception.

VON BETHMANNE HOLLWEG BLAMES THE SOCIALISTS

German Chancellor Says He Will Hold Social Democrats Responsible for Recent Rioting in Germany—England Never Made Definite Proposals Regarding Disarment.

Berlin, Dec. 12.—Discussing international politics in the Reichstag Saturday, Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, gravely warned the more radical exponents of Socialism that they would be held to account for excesses resulting from their teachings.

The Chancellor said: "The revolutionary character of social democracy is finding more and more brutal expression. Dr. Carl Liebnieck, a Prussian Socialist member, speaking recently in the United States, said matters in Germany were developing in such a way that the German crown might soon be swept away in a night, as was the case in Portugal. Our people must have a clear answer to these views. The Socialists and whoever teaches the masses of the people that they can prosper only after the existing order is overthrown, are responsible when the masses draw practical conclusions from this doctrine.

"Therefore, I hold social democracy responsible for the great excesses recently committed during the strikes at Moabit and elsewhere. Who sows the wind reaps the whirlwind."

In a second speech Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg made this declaration: "As regards our relations with England, and the alleged negotiations with that country on the subject, I wish first of all to point out that the British Government has repeatedly advanced the idea that an arrangement regulating the strength of the navies of the several powers would contribute essentially towards consolidating international relations.

"England, as you know, has already expressed the idea at The Hague conference. Since then England has referred repeatedly to the idea, without, however, making propositions which could have been either positively accepted or rejected. We, likewise, concur with the desire, chorused by England of avoiding rivalry in armaments, but from the informal pourparlors, conducted in a friendly spirit, we have always laid away as a fundamental idea, that an open and confident exchange of views, followed by an understanding on the mutual economical and political interests of the two countries, would be the best means of removing any distrust arising from the comparative strength of their armies and navies.

"The very continuance of such an exchange of views gives evidence of the friendly intentions prevailing on either side, and it may gradually remove the distrust which is felt, not between the two Governments, but unhappily often in public opinions."

THREATENS TO REVOLT

Montreal, Dec. 12.—"If Prince Edward Island does not get back her original six members in the Canadian Parliament, the bargain by which we were induced to come into the Confederation was an infernal swindle, and there will be an insurrection down there, if justice is not done." was the very energetic way the interprovincial situation was summed up yesterday by the Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island, Hon. F. L. Haszard, who took the noon train for home.

He had been attending the conference at Ottawa, but, as several of the western provinces had not been heard from, and as the Premiers present had to count with their own executives, they adjourned, awaiting the good-will of the Premiers of Ontario and Quebec. All present, however, added Mr. Haszard, appeared to be well disposed, and, in fact, he said some of the western men had their own axes to grind, and whatever new amendment to the British North America Act is secured will quite probably include a change in the senatorial representation, giving more members to the west.

Premier Haszard appeared quite satisfied, however, that some relief will be given to the lower provinces. It must be brought about, he said, in conclusion, adding that maritime union was out of the question, and would not be considered.

Wanted For Infanticide.

Rochester, Dec. 12.—The police of Rochester on Saturday started a widespread search for a pretty nineteen-year-old girl, who says she is Gertrude Enright of Kingston, Ont., who is said by the police to have dismembered the body of a baby, stuffing some of the parts in a drain pipe and burning others.

The crime was discovered on Friday in the rooming-house conducted by Mrs. Van Duren at 90 Broadway. An investigation to find what was clogging the drain pipe disclosed the arms, legs and trunk of the infant.

The police allege that the girl probably carried the dead body of the infant into the house, dismembering it with a razor. They declare that the head was burned and the trunk and legs and arms were stuffed into the bathroom drain pipe in the Van Duren house.

The tiny little undergarments of the child, soaked in blood, were found in a suit case which the authorities say belonged to the girl.

The Enright girl broke down and confessed as soon as the discovery was made, the police charge, although she disappeared before she could be taken into custody. The Kingston police were asked to watch for her.

Pair Are Reprieved.

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—The death sentences on Thomas McNulty and Mary Dolan, who were convicted of infanticide, and are now confined in Barrie Jail awaiting execution, have been commuted to life imprisonment in each case.

In the case of Weidmark of Perth, who is under sentence to hang for the murder of his wife, the law will have to take its course. A Hungarian, who was convicted of murder at Lethbridge, will have to suffer the death penalty.

No reasons are as yet assigned in the Ontario cases, but it is understood that the extraordinary nature of the evidence adduced at the trial has influenced the Minister of Justice to advise His Excellency to commute the capital sentences to life imprisonment.

Shot by His Own Gun

Kingston, Dec. 12.—Albert Fuller, aged 27, who kept a hotel in the village of Collins' Bay for some time, was accidentally shot there Saturday. While getting into a boat on a hunting trip his gun was discharged and the bullet went through his lung. Death was instantaneous.

Deceased, who came from England ten years ago, was formerly a wine clerk at the British American Hotel here.

ABSORBS BIG PLANT

Toronto, Dec. 12.—A press despatch from Batavia, N.Y., thirty-six miles from Buffalo, yesterday reported the purchase of the Johnston Harvester Co. of that city by the Massey-Harris Co. of Toronto. Hon. L. Melvin-Jones, president and general manager, confirmed the report, stating that, as definitely as he could say at present, the purchase involved between two and three million dollars., The following statement was given out:

"The Johnston Harvester Co. is one of the oldest and best known companies in the United States manufacturing harvesting implements. About half their business is in the United States; the balance is in foreign countries."

"Are the works now being operated?"

"Oh, yes, very decidedly so. We take it over as a going concern. There are at present 1,200 employes. This number might be increased within the present plant to say 1,500, but it lends itself to enlargement to accommodate a considerably greater number of workmen, as the ground area is at least double that of our Toronto works."

Entertained Americans.

London, Dec. 12.—Rear Admiral Vreeland and Rear Admiral Howard and thirty other officers of the second and fourth divisions of the United States Atlantic fleet, were the guests of the Government at luncheon in the House of Commons yesterday. Lord Beauchamp, the head of the Board of Works, presided, and Lord Chancellor Loreburn made a welcoming speech, during the course of which he read a message of welcome from King George and Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Poison In the Beer.

Vancouver, Dec. 12.—Three persons were poisoned, one fatally, while partaking of a meal at an early hour yesterday morning. George E. Black, a tea and coffee merchant in this city for the past year, dying within an hour after the meal. He dropped to the floor in the presence of the other two, Mr. Wolton, proprietor of a poolroom, and Miss Birdie Gordon, who is in the employ of the latter. They sank to the flood while about to summon medical aid for Black. He died before the physician arrived. The others are now out of danger. The poison is supposed to have been in the beer.

Stuck In the Ice.

Amherstburg, Dec. 12.—The U. S. Crocus, lighthouse tender, arrived here last evening after having been stuck in the ice for three days between Marblehead and the Detroit River light.

The tug Jean, owned by William Menzies of Amherstburg, burned to the water's edge Saturday night, while laying in her winter quarters. The cause is unknown.

Steamer Olympia Aground.

Cordova, Alaska, Dec. 12.—The Alaska Steamship Co.'s steamer Olympia, with 108 passengers aboard, is ashore on Sea Island, Prince William Sound. A furious storm is raging. No word has been received from the wireless operator on the Olympia since nine a.m., and grave fears are entertained for the safety of those on the wrecked vessel.

Ten Years For Assault.

Quebec, Dec. 9.—Mr. Justice Cimon, presiding in the court at Fraserville Wednesday, condemned Joseph Langlois to a term of ten years in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary for rape and violence. The evidence in the case was so convincing that the hearing of the case was short, and after retiring for fifteen minutes, the jury returned to the court and rendered a verdict of guilty. Before passing sentence, Judge Cimon severely lectured the prisoner, reminding him that liquor was no excuse for his inhuman crime.

LIBERAL GAIN THREE SEATS AND PARTIES BREAK EVEN

Nearly all Constituencies in British Elections Have Now Been Heard From and Parties Stand Just as They Did Before Goverment Went to Country.

London, Dec. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—With nearly all the constituencies heard from, the polling on Saturday shows three turnovers in favor of the Liberals.

In the Saffron seat of Essex, the Unionist majority of 272 was turned over to the Liberals by 40 majority. The seat was Liberal previous to the January election.

In Lowestoft, the Unionist majority of 236 was turned to a Liberal majority of 265.

The Lord Advocate for Scotland, Hon. Alex. Ure, was returned in Linlithgow.

Premier Asquith's majority in Fife East was reduced from 2,069 to 1,799.

The Unionists are shaking hands with themselves over the results of the elections in Scotland. Although no Radical seats have been won, no Unionist has lost, but the Radical majorities of last January have been cut down and the Unionist majorities increased.

Liberal organizers confidently anticipated recapturing some county seats lost in January, and are greatly chagrined at their failure. But with Liberal and Labor members in the majority of English borough, the Liberals are hoping that their predominance will be maintained, and with a fair amount of good fortune they are looking forward to a clear majority on the whole representation of England and Wales. Yesterday's returns already show two Liberal gains.

Business men, both Tories and Liberals, are vigorously kicking against the long-drawn out battle. They complain of too many rounds, considering that a decision might be arrived at in one or at most two rounds.

This elections is probably the last that will be prolonged over three weeks. Changes that will be proposed are that borough elections be one week after the issue of writs, and the county in a fortnight.

Lord Milner, speaking at Bodmin, said he was prepared to stake a good deal that tariff reform would be the policy of the nation before a decade.

Balfour at Hyde complained of Asquith's silence as to details of the home rule bill. All desired to see purely local affairs locally managed. His personal conviction was that the Government meant to do as little for home rule as they found they could without quarreling with Redmond.

Bonar Law, at Radcliffe, said if the final result showed the Government had lost ground, he did not think even Asquith or any member of the Government could go to the sovereign and ask him to upset the constitution of the country.

Riotous scenes are taking place in many of the Irish towns, As the result of a riot at Thurles Saturday night, John Dillon was unable to leave town, and had to remain hidden as a crowd waited in the road leading to the railway station to waylay him. The trouble began at a meeting addressed by Mr. Dillon, which the O'Brienites tried to break up. The police had to make several charges to quell the fighting.

The Times declares a "scratch" coalition majority could have no moral authority to fundamentally change the constitution.

Only One Issue.

London, Dec. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—John Redmond, speaking yesterday at Tyrone, said that the only issue in the election was "the people against the Lords." It was the gravest question they had ever faced as Irish people. Compared to it, even that of Catholic emancipation faded into significance, for it was the question of the emancipation of the whole nation.

Killed In Attack on Jail.

Columbus, Ga., Dec. 12.—Irvin Kent, a young cotton mill operative, died yesterday of a wound received about one o'clock yesterday morning, when a mob of 200 men stormed the county jail here in an effort to secure a negro, charged with attempted assault on a white woman. Kent is said to have been one of the attacking party. Jailer Phelts addressed the rioters as they neared the jali, warning them that he would shoot the first man to attempt to enter. When the attack began he fired a number of shots, wounding two men. He successfully resisted the attack until after more than a hundred shots had been fired. Police and militia dispersed the rabble.

The jailer was seriously wounded in the breast, but will recover. Seven arrests of the mob were made.

Almost Asphyxiated.

Hamilton, Dec. 12.—As a result of sleeping near a natural gas stove, from which the gas was escaping, Luigi Violni and Bremo Violni are lying in St. Joseph's Hospital in a dangerous condition from partial suffocation. The two men, the former of whom is the father of the latter, were found insensible at their boarding house, 23 East Barton street, yesterday morning. Luigi recovered consciousness during the day, but the son was still unconscious to-day. It is thought that the father will get better, though only slight hopes are held for Bremo's recovery.

Cholera In Madeira.

ELEVEN MINERS KILLED

Fernie, B.C., Dec. 12.—Eleven men are believed to have lost their lives in a mine explosion at Bellevue, near Fernie, on Friday night.

J. W. Powell, superintendent, reported that there were forty men in the mine at the time of the accident, and seven dead bodies have been recovered. Four more men are missing, and it is believed they are dead. The remainder were rescued, some of them with difficulty.

Fred. Aulderson, a volunteer rescuer from the Hosmer mine, where he is employed as fire boss, lost his life while trying to save others. His wife and four children reside in England. Several widows and many orphans are left at Bellevue, as a large number of the victims were men of families.

A special train left Fernie at 11.30 Saturday night picking up the emergency apparatus at Hosmer, and Manager James Ashworth of the Crows' Nest Pass Coal Co., who was at Michel, along with many others picked up at other points, arrived at the scene of the disaster at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. The rescue work brought out the heroism which lies hidden in those who carry their lives in their hands as they daily enter these mines, and many acts of bravery and some of reckless disregard for life were performed during the night and early day.

The bodies of the four missing men are supposed to be behind heavy rock falls, and it may take some time to reach them, but relief parties will keep up the search until they are found.

The cause of the explosion is unknown, and it may be difficult to determine its origin. The mine has not been wrecked to a great extent, and can be rehabilitated in a short time, though it is not known what action will be taken in that direction at present.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Harold Hutton, aged 15 years, was killed at a crossing at Welland.

The Nobel prize ($40,000) has been awarded to the International Permanent Peace Bureau at Berne.

Robert Long, confectioner of Woodstock, died suddenly. His son, a Rhodes' scholar, has just sailed from England to spend Christmas at home.

The insurrection in Mexico is confined to the district of Chihuahua, where a battle between the Federal troops and the insurgents is imminent.

After saturating her clothes with kerosene, Mrs. Eugene Knapp walked into a big open fireplace in her home at New Iberia, La., and was burned to death.

The lives of 200 guests were endangered Sunday morning, when fire practically destroyed the Brunswick Hotel in Minneapolis, the oldest of the large hotels of that city, at a loss of about $100,000.

An outbreaks of mumps has caused the Macdonald Hall at Guelph to be closed, and the students of the Agricultural College will be dismissed for the Christmas holidays a week earlier than was intended.

A young man named Lambert, aged 16 years, was run down and instantly killed by a wood train at Breakeyville, Levis, Que., shortly after five o'clock on Saturday afternoon. He was playing with his dog and did not notice the approaching train.

A Louisville and Nashville passenger train struck and killed a cow near Kirkland, Alabama, late Saturday. The cow, hurled to one side, struck a negro watching the train go by. The negro was knocked into a puddle of water and killed. In falling he struck a dog and crushed it to death.

1911 Year of Mourning.

Rome, Dec. 12.—Pope Pius has declined to receive the usual annual deputation of the German Catholic Workmen's Association on Jan. 6, saying that in view of the fact that the Italians are arranging for 1911 celebrations of the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the kingdom, the declaration of Rome as the capital, and the cessation of the papal temporal power, the Vatican will observe 1911 as a year of mourning. The festive ceremonials at the Vatican will therefore be reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

Greater Vancouver.

Vancouver, Dec. 12.—By its vote on Saturday the Township of Hastings, on the eastern border of Vancouver, joins Greater Vancouver, adding four thousand to the city's population of approximately 120,000, not including the city of North Vancouver. This is the second district which has joined the city within the past six months.

South Vancouver, with a population of twenty thousand, will vote on annexation in January, which, with other likely districts, will, it is expected, bring the city's population to over the 150,000 mark.

Shot Dead By Small Boy.

St. Thomas, Dec. 10.—At Beech Lane, Norfolk County, James Pickensgill, aged 16 years, was instantly killed by being shot through the neck by a child four years of age. He was shot at the home of William Williamson, a friend, when the latter's baby brother took a gun from the corner and pointed it at Pickensgill.

BRAZILIAN MARINES TRY TO REPEAT RECENT MUTINY

Uprising on the Island of Combra, Near Rio Janeiro, is Quelled by Warships After Several Hours of Murderous Cannonade.

Rio Janeiro, Dec. 12.—The naval battalion in the barracks on Combra Island, situation in the bay a short distance from this city, mutinied on Friday night.

After a severe artillery engagement, however, which lasted throughout the entire day, Saturday, the mutinous naval battalion on Combra Island surrendered at 11 o'clock Saturday night.

The rebels were almost annihilated by the fire from the land batteries and two Brasilian warships, losing more than 200 killed and wounded.

The seditious movement, it is believed, has now been completely throttled, but the Senate, in spite of the opposition of Ruy Barbosa, the former president of that body, voted to declare a state of siege for thirty days.

The revolt broke out Friday night, when the mutinous marines, quartered in the fortress on Combra Island, captured their officers and sent them to the mainland.

The mutineers were supported by the scout ship Rio Grande de Sul, which took part in the naval revolt of last month.

For a time there was intense excitement in the city, and the Government officials hurriedly met and decided on prompt and energetic methods to suppress the outbreak.

The shore batteries and the loyal warships in the harbor were ordered to fire upon the rebels.

At five o'clock Saturday morning guns were turned upon Combra Island and a furious cannonading continued for several hours.

At 11 o'clock the white flag appeared over the barracks, and the bombardment ceased. It was reported that the revolters then made a formal offer to surrender.

The bombardment of Combra Island was resumed shortly after 11 o'clock, the rebels not having surrendered.

Two land batteries and two loyal warships took part in the bombardment, and the artillery duel continued with great violence until 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon. The island replied with a vigorous fire, employing considerable shrapnel. A number of people were killed along the shore and in adjoining streets.

The Government notified the leaders of the rising that the island would be taken by assault if they did not surrender. In the meantime President Fonseca sent a message on the situation to the Senate. While this was being discussed by the Senate, the Chamber assembled to consider the situation, and to await the action of the Senate. Then came the surrender of the fortress.

Over and Back In Twelve Days.

Liverpool, Dec. 12.—The Mauretania left here Saturday evening in an attempt to make a record voyage to New York and back in twelve days. It will be necessary for her to average twenty-six knots an hour in order to make the trip. She carries over 1,100 passengers, mostly Americans, who are returning home for Christmas, but not a few propose coming back on the same vessel after a few hours' stay in New York.

There is considerable betting among the passengers as to whether or not the Mauretania will accomplish the task set for her. The odds are 5 to 2 that the ship will berth in Liverpool on her return trip before Christmas Eve.

Mount Sinai Found.

Vienna, Dec. 12.—Dr. Alois Musil, who, with a scientific party, left Vienna in April to explore Northern Arabia, has made a thorough examination of the little-known area from Maan southward to El Gaw and the Red Sea, and eastward to Jeima and the Warli Sishim. Besides the collections he has made, he has gathered much linguistic, ethnological and geological material.

He believes he has identified the famous Biblical Mount Sinai, regarding the precise situation of which a great controversy has been raging for some time.

Will Hold Court at House.

St. Catharines, Dec. 9.—Police Magistrate Campbell yesterday afternoon accepted the evidence of William Shoulter, that N. P. Saunders had told him that William Meadows had received from him $18, for which receipt had been given, in payment of a bill owing Lowry, Vivian and Shoulter, grocers, at St. David's by whom Meadows was formerly employed. The prisoner denied all knowledge of the receipt, claiming he never saw Saunders, who is paralyzed and unable to leave his house. The case will go to County Judge Carman, who will hold a session of the court at the home of Saunders.

Two adjoining dwellings were also burned.

TRAINMEN KILLED IN COLLISION

Montreal, Dec. 12.—At 5.30 Saturday evening a light G.T.R. engine with Engineer R. Jamison, Fireman Dionres and Conductor C. Briggs (G.T.R.), on board, running from Sherbrooke, collided head-on with an Intercolonial passenger train at St. Hyacinthe. The three men were killed instantly, also Engineer W. Walker of the passenger engine and the fireman on the latter was taken from the wreck with his legs badly smashed.

J. Champeoux of Nicolet was the only passenger on the I.C.R. train seriously injured, he having had his elbow bone fractured.

The conductor of the light engine was evidently trying to jump out of the cab window, when he was caught and crushed to death, his limp body hung from the window, a ghastly sight. The bodies of the other three victims were concealed in the wreckage of the two engines.

Strange to say the two engines remained on the track, the two smokestacks being in close contact, so great was the impact, the tender of the light engine slid forward six feet against the passenger engine, the jam causing the death of the three men on their engine.

The cause of the accident is not clear. The light engine came up the track on its way to St. Hyacinthe at terrific speed, passing Windsor Mills station at probably forty miles an hour. At St. Rosalie, two miles beyond St. Hyacinthe, the switch must have been turned off the main line, as at this point the engine took to the left track and for nearly two miles ripped along at apparently unreduced speed, meeting an outbound passenger train, which left Montreal at 4.15 o'clock.

The terrific crash reduced the fronts of the engines to debris, the baggage car party telescoping the passenger tender, the express car in turn partly telescoping the baggage car.

The passengers were hurled from their seats in all directions and, though many were bruised, it is not thought that any were seriously injured. So well did the wrecked engines keep to the track, that the main line next to it was not blocked, the Portland train for Montreal, passing at that time, being delayed but a short time.

Railway men cannot understand how it was that the crew on the light engine did not notice, immediately after passing St. Rosalie, that they were on the wrong track. An auxiliary was sent for, and the crew is now at work removing the bodies.

Delegates of Trainmen at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Dec. 12.—There arrived in Ottawa yesterday a delegation of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, headed by Messrs. Berry and Murdock. To-day they will interview Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Graham on the subject of the reinstatement of the striking trainmen. At present 285 of the strikers are still out of employment.

It will be remembered that when at the end of July, the strikers demurred at the elastic nature of the Grand Trunk authorities' promise to replace them "as fast as possible." Mr. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor, told them that he had received an assurance that it meant within 90 days. It now is four months, instead of three, and these 285 men are still out of work.

The matter is serious for Mr. Graham, in whose home town of Brockville some 30 or 35 men are still on the company's black list. The rest of the railway men sympathize with these men, and the matter is of electoral importance to the Minister of Railways. It is asserted that he has informed the Grand Trunk authorities that he will not put through the G.T.P. estimates till they have settled [illegible]

A PITIABLE PICTURE

In a report of a recent address Mr. Kelso, Provincial Superintendent of Neglected Children, this paragraph appears:—

"Pictures were thrown on the screen of boys of seven, eight, nine, ten and eleven years of age, who had been sent to the reformatory as criminals, in two cases the little lads were taken away handcuffed."

Some valiant administrators of the law would make the ancient saying read, "suffer little children." Imagine one of these kiddies with handcuffs! The officers who put them on should have been disciplined.

Fortunately a different spirit prevails with most constables and magistrates, and the law provides that children must not be familiarized with cells or police courts.

Children's Aid Societies are doing much to protect unfortunate children, for children of the years referred to by Mr. Kelso are more unfortunate than criminal when they get into trouble. With separate courts to hear their cases, and these Societies to aid the courts, children are being better looked after.

CANADA'S DUTY

Speaking for the Nationalists, one of their leaders stated, in the House, that they did not object to Canada looking after her own defence on land, and also on sea, as far as possible. The Liberal Association of Quebec summarized the reasons for supporting the Government's naval policy as follows—

> Whereas, on March 29, 1909, the House of Commons unanimously endorsed the principles of a navy.
>
> Whereas, the Government, in deciding on the construction of a fleet, has only executed the mandate which was given to it by the representatives of the people.
>
> Whereas, the policy of the party is in the best interests of the country.
>
> Whereas, the naval service will be voluntary.
>
> Whereas, our autonomy is safeguarded.
>
> Whereas, the navy bill will be essentially Canadian.
>
> Whereas, all the vessels will be constructed in this country and their crews will be Canadian.
>
> Whereas, the construction and the maintenance of our navy will not necessitate any additional taxation.
>
> Whereas, it will protect our coasts and our commerce.
>
> Whereas, it is opportune for us to prove our loyalty to the Crown.
>
> Whereas, Canada has become a nation.

The Ottawa Liberal organ says this resolution, which closed by commending the Government's course, should be adopted by every Liberal Club in Canada.

But will the navy which the Government has made a beginning in establishing protect our coasts and commerce? They will be sufficient, so long as no protection is needed, but if no protection is needed, why incur this large expense? Sir Wilfrid Laurier the other day said that provision for protection was needed on our Pacific coast. In so speaking he must have had Russia, China or Japan in view. If the country should be assailed by Japan how long would the Niobe or the Rainbow keep at a distance the fleet that sank the Russian gunboats? It is folly to talk of Canada providing her own maritime protection in a war with any of the powers. We would depend for our protection on other parts of the Empire, and rely on the British men of war.

When this is the case, why talk of providing our own protection, and what is the use of the foolish pretense that the immature navy we will have under the Laurier policy will make us secure?

The security of every part of the Empire will be provided for by each doing its share and all co-operating for mutual protection. To accomplish that, each of the Dominions must unite in plans that, should a crisis arise, will lead to immediate and concerted action. With a series of disunited navies, each under separate control, and operating on "its own hook," in accordance with the Nationalist idea or the Liberal programme, there would be weakness where there should be strength. It is Canada's duty to do as much as it can for its own protection and to be ready to give such assistance as it can when needed to the other parts of the Empire which it would look to for aid if it were needed here.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Rabies has died out in Western Ontario and the muzzles may be taken off the dogs. Could they not be transferred to some of the rabid Liberal politicians at Ottawa?

The Marquis San Guiliano, Italy's minister of foreign affairs, says his country's policy aims at the maintenance of peace, that its armaments are intended to preserve peace, and that its relations with the great European powers are satisfactory and promising of peace. So say they all of them, but they go on increasing their armaments— in the interests of peace.

"Although we have our troubles and our combats, we are absolutely free, and let us pray to Almighty God that we may long be allowed to live beneath the glorious folds of the British flag." These words were used by Archbishop Bruchesi in an address delivered in Montreal, and they express a sentiment that all should echo. British citizenship carried with it duties, but advantages that are much more than compensating.

PLAY ON NAMES OF WESTERN TOWNS

There has been a good deal of talk about changing the names of certain western towns. Just as a sort of take off and to reveal some peculiar names in this province we publish the story of an imaginary jaunt around Alberta. We show no regard for geographical location but simply give you the story in order to show up some odd names of cities towns villages and postoffices in Alberta the name of each being capitalized. The story goes like this:

Seven persons set out for Medicine Hat to hear Midnapore tell of the great advantages of that district. Seeing a real stunning woman at the Hat the boys wanted to know of her identity and finally decided to draw lots to see who would Asker. She said her name was Hazel Bluffs and after sizing up rats waves, puffs, etc., the fellows concluded that she does. Questioned as to her occupation she claimed to be a culinary artist, having been engaged at Half Way House, situated on Conjuring Creek, a tributary stream to Cooking Lake in the Hairy Hills district. The boys chucked Hazel's Chin, told her she was the right sort and that her name ought to be Castor as she certainly knew how to roll out the con talk. A pal of Hazel's called Lille, joined the party at the Hat, from which point the whole works set out for Jumping Pond. From Jumping Pond it was decide to call upon the Monarch of New Norway, followed by a friendly trip to New Lunnon. A little hunting expedition after Red Deer, the most noted of big game, was then planned. A Scotch guide was picked up and the journey progressed as far as Soda Lake where Sandy camped for the night. Being short of funds the party broke camp and headed for Springbank. After completing financial arrangements the party again took the trail for the Sunnyslope of Three Hills. Lille proved very restless and a great Tees, so just to humor her that place was made the next stopping point. Here another individual joined the party in the person of Tommy La Pelee, who being arrayed in a handsome blanket of Vermillion, made a great hit with both Hazel and Lille. Finally the girls got into a scrap over Tommy, resulting in Lille saying, "You Villeneuve got an idea you're the 'Whole It,' but I know better and he does George Robinson." Things looked bad for awhile until they reached Warner, where Lille met up with a Viking named Warwick, after which Lille and Hazel declared a truce. It was not long, however, until a third party named Winnifred came to the front and with her winsome, winning ways won Warwick. Warwick proved fickle, however, and soon began to shine up to Oko, until it is tipped off that Okotoks too much after which discovery he decided to tie up with Ray, whom he met at Ponoka. The entire party were so pleased that they settled down at Ponoka, where they lived happily every after.—Lethbridge Saturday Courier.

THE BASKET CRAZE

A Fad For Them In Every Form and Size.

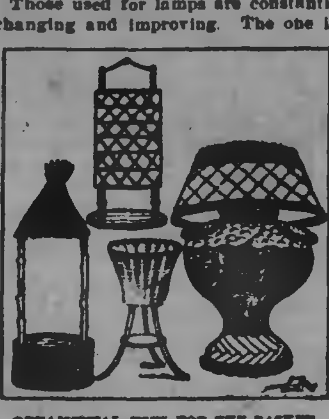
ATTRACTIVE LAMP SHADES.

The Popular Basket of the Hour Is Japanese Split Bamboo—Indian, Malay and Mexican Effects Second Favorites.

Dainty little twigs all the way from the Black forest and made to reproduce old German wells are the little ferneries being shown just now. The color is a rich glossy brown. The twigs are put together much as the ladybird builds her nest.

Seemingly there is no end to the craze for baskets and no end to the uses to which they are put. The split bamboo just at present is the special vogue. Not that it is new by any means, but there is every little while some charming new shape evolved which is irresistible.

Those used for lamps are constantly changing and improving. The one illustrated is particularly handsome and may be surmounted by a shade of the same material woven with very open spaces which show the light through the silk lining.



ORNAMENTAL USES FOR THE BASKET.

A new candle shade effect is picturesque. It is the basket type with lining of yellow silk. An incandescent dropped inside makes it a soft, pretty light, and it is decorative for a table in a living room.

Every nation seems at some time or other to have expressed itself in a basket of distinctive pattern. People of semibarbaric history seem to excel in the art.

Indian baskets made of the sweet grass in a variety of shapes and sizes are much sought and difficult to get in certain forms. There are those of the tiniest dimensions, just the size to hold a thimble and in the shape of an acorn, and again this same basket is big enough to hold a piece of pick up fancy work.

Possibly the most unique of the baskets shown are those of Malay make. They are very intricate in design, too much so to show the detail in a drawing.

All of them are a deep cream or tan. The largest size is called a rhombong. This is a sort of carryall with square corners like a telescope. The women pack all their belongings about with them in this case.

Mexican baskets with their brilliant yellows, reds and greens are very gay and extremely durable.

The grass is twisted very tightly and closely, and the fiber is too tough to break easily. It is really the most ornamental and taking of all the baskets one finds now and makes the most attractive of receptacles for sweets or gifts of any kind.

Salt as a Cleanser.

Every housewife should realise the possibilities of salt as a cleanser. Indeed, salt and kerosene should be in the cleansing outfit of every household, for together they form a combination which eradicates almost any dirt.

For polishing mirrors nothing can exceed the merit of salt. When applying it the glass must be wet with clear water, then the salt rubbed on with a damp newspaper. The final rubbing may be done with dry newspapers or with a chamois skin.

A tablespoonful of coarse salt, a teaspoonful of ammonia and a pint of hot water mixed and kept for rinsing decanters and carafes will make them as bright as new.

Silver discolored either by egg or other use will respond at once to a vigorous rubbing of damp salt.

Salt and vinegar combined will usually restore polish to brass and copper, and salt is a wonderful renovator of polished wood surfaces that have been dulled with hot dishes. To brighten such spots cover the gray portions with salt, which is then wet with olive oil, all of the latter being poured on that the salt will absorb. This should stand for twenty-four hours, when it should be removed and the surface rubbed with a soft cloth. If all grayness has not disappeared repeat the salt and oil bath.

For removing discolorations of fruit from teeth or hands salt is excellent.

To Avoid Blisters.

No blister will form if white of egg and olive oil are mixed quickly in equal portions and applied to a burn. The place should be covered with a piece of soft linen. Bicarbonate of soda is more quickly obtained and is quite as good. It should be used dry, covered with a cloth and kept wet with cold water. A bad blister was covered with a piece of linen wet in a 1 per cent solution of carbolic acid, kept wet for a day or two, and no scar resulted, and there was little pain.

Mrs. Coste died suddenly last March in Atlantic City. Dunelm in Bad Shape.

Port Arthur, Dec. 12.—Word was brought here yesterday by the Bowman that the steamer Dunelm is in very bad shape and the weather is now so bad that work has had to be suspended. Should the weather get suitable, it is believed she could be released in twelve hours. However, if the present weather continues, it is feared that the boat will shift from her position and go to the bottom of the lake, 500 feet. The Canadian Towing & Dredging Co. have lightered the Dunelm of 15,000 bushels of grain.

Dedication of New Church.

Peterboro, Dec. 12.—The opening and dedication of the new Knox Church, one of the finest houses of worship in the city, took place yesterday. The dedicatory services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Marsh of Springville. Rev. Dr. Johnston, pastor of the American Presbyterian Church, Montreal, was the special preacher at the regular services. Knox Church has made magnificent progress under the well-directed and energetic pastorship of Rev. H. J. Keith.

"Ach, Orde," cried the German, "I am tortured mit hollenqualle—what you call?—hell's fire. You, whose wife comes in and saves my Mina when the others runs away—you, my best friends! It is schrecklich! She vas the noblest, the best! She might take the disease; she might die. It vas noble." He shuddered. "My Mina left to die all alone!"

Orde rose to his feet.

"That is all right," said he. "Now let me get you home."

"No!" cried Heinzman. "Listen to me! I haf your note for sefenty-five t'ousand dollars. No?"

Orde nodded.

"Dot money I never lent you. No! I'm not crazy. Sit still! I know my name is on dot note, but the money came from your partner, Newmark."

"What?" Orde asked in bewilderment.

"Den ven you could not pay the note I vas to foreclose and hand over dot northern peninsula land to Joseph Newmark, your partner."

"Impossible!" cried Orde.

"I vas to get a share. It vas a trick."

"Why do you come to tell me now?"

"Because for more than one year now I say to mineself: 'Carl Heinsman, you vas one dirty scoundrel. You vas a thief. It iss all righdt to be smart, but to be a thief!'"

"It iss all righdt to be smart, but to be a thief!"

"Why didn't you pull out?" asked Orde.

"I couldn't!" cried Heinzman piteously. "He haf me cold. I paid Stanford $500 for his vote on the charter, and Newmark he know dot. He can prove it. He tell me if I don't do what he say he put me in jail."

"Well, he can still put you in prison," said Orde.

"Vot I care?" cried Heinzman, throwing up both his arms. "You and your wife are my friends. She save my Mina. Du lieber Gott! If my daughter had died, vot good iss friends and money, vot good iss anything? I don't vant to live! And ven I sit dere by her always something ask me, 'Vy you do dot to the peoples dot safe your Mina?' "

His excitement died.

"Have you that note?" asked Orde.

"It is at my office for the foreclosure. I vill not foreclose. He can send me to the penitentiary."

"Telephone Lambert in the morning to give it to me. No—here. Write an order in this notebook."

Heinzman wrote the required order.

"I go," said he, suddenly weary.

Orde accompanied him down the street and succeeded in slipping him through the improvised quarantine.

Morning found Orde still seated in the library chair. His head was sunk forward on his chest; his hands were extended, listless, palms up, along the arms of the chair; his eyes were vacant and troubled.

When the full sun shone into the library he aroused himself to change his clothes. Then, carrying those he had just discarded, he slipped out of the house and down the street. He paused only long enough to telephone from the office telling Carroll he would be out of town all day. Then he set out at a long swinging gait over the hills, miles from the village and in the high beech woods. There he sat down, his back to a monster tree. All day long he gazed steadily on the shifting shadows and splotches of sunlight; on the patches of blue sky, the dazzling white clouds that sailed across them; on the waving, whispering frond that overarched him and the deep cool shadows beneath.

At evening Orde shook himself and arose.

He reached home a little before 6 o'clock. He found Taylor awaiting him.

"I have things pretty well in shape," the lawyer said.

"Then the trouble is over?" asked Orde.

"I wouldn't say that," replied Taylor, "but you can rest easy as to the title to your lands. The investigation had no real basis to it. There may have been some small individual cases of false entry, but nothing on which to ground a real attack."

"When can I borrow on it?"

"Not for a year or two, I should say. There's an awful lot of red tape to unwind."

"Oh," said Orde in some disappointment.

Taylor hesitated.

"I have something more to tell you—something that will be painful," said he.

Orde looked up quickly.

"Well, what is it?"

"The general cussedness of all this investigation business had me puzzled until at last I made up my mind to do a little investigating on my own account. There was one man behind all this. He was"—

"Joe Newmark," said Orde quietly.

"How did you know that?"

"I just guessed."

"Well, it was Newmark. He tied up the land in this trumped up investigation so you could not borrow on it."

"How did he find out I owned any land?" asked Orde.

"That I couldn't tell you. Must have been a leak somewhere."

Orde did not wish to return to the office until he had worked his problem out, so to lend his absence the color of naturalness he drove back next morning to the booms.

In the evening he went direct to Newmark's.

"Mr. Newmark is out, sir," said Mallock and started to close the door.

But Orde thrust his foot and knee in the opening.

"I'll come in and wait," said he quietly.

"Yes, sir; this way, sir," said Mallock, trying to indicate the dining room.

Orde caught the aroma of tobacco. He turned the knob of the door and entered the library.

There he found Newmark in evening dress, seated in a low easy chair beneath a lamp, smoking and reading a magazine. At Orde's appearance in the doorway he looked up calmly, his paper knife poised, keeping the place.

Orde entered the room and mechanically sat down.

"Newmark," Orde began abruptly, "I know all about this arrangement you made with Heinsman."

"I borrowed some money from Heinzman for the firm."

"Yes, and you supplied that money yourself."

Newmark's eyes narrowed.

"Well, what of it?"

"If you had the money to lend why didn't you lend it direct?"

"Because it looks better to mortgage to an outside holder."

"That was not the reason," went on Orde. "You agreed with Heinzman to divide when you succeeded in foreclosing me out of the timberlands given as security. Furthermore, you instructed Floyd to go out on the eve of that blow in spite of his warnings, and you contracted with McLeod for the new vessels, and you've tied us up right and left for the sole purpose of pinching us down where we couldn't meet those notes. That's the only reason you borrowed the seventy-five thousand on your own account—so we couldn't borrow it to save ourselves."

"It strikes me you are interesting, but inconclusive," said Newmark as Orde paused again.

"That sort of thing is somewhat of a facer," went on Orde without the slightest attention to the interjection. "It took me some days to work it out in all its details, but I believe I understand it all now. I don't quite understand how you discovered about my California timber. That 'investigation' was a very pretty move."

"How the devil did you get on to that?"

"How the devil did you get on to that?" cried Newmark, startled.

"Then you acknowledge it?"

"Why shouldn't I?" Newmark laughed. "Of course Heinsman blabbed."

Orde half sat on the arm of his chair.

"Now, I'll tell you what we will do in this matter," said he crisply.

"We'll follow," said Newmark, "the original program, as laid down by myself. I'm tired of dealing with blundering fools. Heinsman's mortgage will be foreclosed, and you will hand over as per the agreement your Boom company stock."

Orde stared at him in amazement.

"I must say you have good nerve," he said. "You don't seem to realise that you are pretty well tangled up. I don't know what they call it—criminal conspiracy or something of that sort I suppose. So far from handing over to you the bulk of my property I can send you to the penitentiary."

WHERE THE WHEAT GOES

ELABORATE MACHINERY THT RECEIVES IT AT LONDON.

Strange Barge Interviews the Wheat Laden Vessels on Their Arrival and by Means of Ingenious Devices Relieves Them of Their Burden—All the Old System of Lightening Is Done Away With.

Grain flows in a vast storm from Canada to London.

How is it handled on its arrival there?

Five years ago there was towed across the Thames from Milwall to the Surrey Commercial Docks a curious vessel, rather larger than a Thames sailing-barge; the hull low in the water, a great square iron tank at both ends; above her iron decks were no masts and spars, neither had she at all the appearance of an ordinary steamship. But instead two enormous towers and three funnels or chimneys reared themselves high into the air.

All other craft drew aside, as slowly and making heavy weather of the running tide, this strangest of all vessels passed from bank to bank and made its first and only voyage in safety.

This was the new pneumatic elevator for grain built by the East Ferry Engineering Works. Arrived in the Surrey Docks, she caused a feeling almost of consternation and alarm, so peculiar was her appearance.

Captains of liners, masters of sailing ships, mates who had visited every clime—none in any port had seen a vessel such as this, even the fo'c'stle wit for once was silenced. Foreign sailors were given to understand this was the latest torpedo-boat, for, as the engineer said, "You can see all the tubes!"

But very soon speculations were set at rest, as the leviathan was towed alongside one of the grain steamers in dock. Somewhere from the upper part of each tower four six-inch tubes of metal or armadillo hose-pipe were let down into the grain in the steamer's hold, barges were brought up to each side of the elevator at the base of each tower—some with sacks are standing little groups of men assembled on platforms expectant just under the six shoots projecting overhead—smoke was seen to be issuing from the taller and blacker of the three chimneys; and then, a low, deep, regular sound was heard—"Heujh! heujh! heujh!"—like the panting of some enormous animal. With each breath from the top of the other two chimneys came filmly rings, much as rings of smoke are blown by a cigarette-smoker—the four great air-suction cylinders in the hold of the elevator had been set at work. A few seconds later, through one of the six shoots over the heads of the little group of dockers, swish! came the grain, 248lb., equivalent to a sack of four bushels of wheat, weighed and checked automatically up in the tower. "Swish! swish!" as one shot after another delivered the grain, either to be shot in bulk into the barge below or put into a sack and then tumbled overboard.

The elevator was designed to deal with 150 tons of grain an hour, but, on her trial, 211 tons of grain passed through the weighing-machines in one hour. Yet still another surprise was in store. Two tanks, traveling on rails, had lately been put on a gallery high up on the face of an adjacent warehouse, fifty or sixty feet above the ground. None of the onlookers quite knew what these tanks had been placed there for, or why the little gallery with its railway had been built. These tanks were connected by two stouter tubes to points just under the centres of each tower.

No men clustered on the little platforms and the cornshoots were unhooked. No barges moored themselves against the elevator's sides. The steam in the boilers down in the hold of the elevator was under full pressure, two small wheels on the exhaust-pipe of the air-cylinders were turned and the machine for suction again set in motion. No filmy rings now appeared at the top of the two chimneys—what was happening?

The grain, sucked up out of the ship, was being blown, by the exhaust air from the cylinders, up the two pipes into the receiving tanks and shot into the warehouse—this at the rate of 160 tons an hour. So fast did the elevators blow the grain that it was found impossible to deal with it in any ordinary warehouse.

The cost of such an elevator is about $115,000, and a crew of twelve men is required. The hull, towers, and vessel generally are made of steel plates, and the following are the principal measurements: Length of hull, 122 feet; breadth, 27 feet; depth, 14 feet 6 inches; draught, 11 feet; height above water-line, 62 feet; displacement, 1,000 tons. The suction power is 5lb. to the inch, and the blowing power 10lb.

Below deck are four air-cylinders, worked by a cross compound surface condensing steam-engine, working up to 600 h.p.; 360 h.p. is sufficient for suction only.

The air-cylinders exhaust the air from the canisters. Air then strives to rush up these pipes, whose ends are down in the hold of the vessel—this, in order to fill the vacuum caused in the canisters. But as the ends of the tubes are in the grain, that grain also gets drawn up with the air.

Arrived in the canisters, the grain is shot downwards by means of half-slieves placed over the entrances of the tubes inside the canisters, while the air, is now free of the grain, rushes out through the pipe at the top of each canister, down through the cylinder and out at the exhausts. The grain meanwhile passes through the air-locks, which are simply air-tight turnstiles revolving at a maximum rate of twenty-two revolutions per minute.

KIPLING SUPREME

As International Author of Standing Since Death of Tolstoi

(From the New York Times Review of Books.)

The death of Tolstoi, following hard upon that of Mark Twain, has left the world with only one author whose name is a household word in the four quarters of the globe. Not many years ago there were four such heirs to fame, but Zola's death, not long after his action in the Dreyfus matter, had virtually doubled his renown, reduced the "partie carree" to a trio. There were then three members of this little group—if for a moment men so dissimilar and dwelling so many thousands of miles apart may be brought together for our purpose. The present year has carried off two of them at a good old age, leaving Rudyard Kipling in a class by himself, so far as fame is concerned, for Mr. Roosevelt is celebrated only secondarily as an author. Tolstoi and Zola were little traveled, but Kipling and Mark Twain owe some of their renown to the fact that they have visited the remoter corners of the earth, the former having actually lived in India, England, the United States and South Africa. The writer who bids fairest to vie with Mr. Kipling in world-wide distinction is Maurice Maeterlinck, though his genius is so much less robust than the Englishman's, and his interest in world politics apparently so much slighter, that it can hardly be expected he will ever attain quite the position as an international figure that Kipling attained almost in his youth.

To the pastor and congregation of Knox Presbyterian church, yesterday brought an event, that occasioned feelings of thankfulness and rejoicing.

The new church, a handsome one splendidly equipped, was dedicated, and the opening services held — an event that has been awaited with deep interest.

And with that dedication, the duty of Knox church congregation became a larger one. Splendid work has been done in the past, but now with their greater opportunities, they can go on into the future, prepared to do this greater work in the Master's Vineyard.

Rev. Dr. Marsh, moderator of the Presbytery, presided in the dedication service, which commenced at ten o'clock, with a large attendance of members and friends of the church. After devotional exercises, Rev. H. J. Keith gave to Rev. Dr. Marsh the key of the building as a token that it had been given over to the Presbyterian church.

Rev. Dr. Marsh complimented the congregation on their new church, and trusted, he said, that God's blessing would rest upon and abide with them. "The building was to be dedicated and set apart for a sacred use—the service of God. "I declare this church dedicated to the service of God."

"The Conquering Gospel," was the subject taken by Rev. Dr. Johnston, for the first sermon to be preached in the new church. His text, was, "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believeth," Romans I. chapter, 16 verse.

Rev. Dr. Johnston is the pastor of the American Presbyterian church, Montreal, and has visited in the city on other occasions. He is a speaker, who delivers a message that is convincing and leaves an impression on his hearers.

The pastor and congregation must have been greatly benefitted, by his message yesterday. It was the gospel plain and simple—the same gospel, which has accomplished so much for Knox church in the past history and will continue to prosper it in the future.

Throughout the discourse Rev. Mr. Johnston brought before his auditors the veteran Apostle Paul, as he was writing to the people of Corinth, a farewell epistle ere he started for Rome to spread the gospel there.

He was looking out of the window of his host's house and wondering what weapon he would take for his warfare in that great city of wickedness.

It was to Rome that he looked forward to the fiercest antagonist of the Gospel. Paul had had experience with philosophies old and new. he had met the great men of learning, but it was with none of their teachings, he was armouring himself for his visit to the haughty Romans.

It was the gospel that had converted him from Saul, the persecutor and had been ever present with him in his work with his people.

The preacher dealt with three thoughts.

1—What was that gospel in which he had such unwavering and unfailing confidence?

2—What grounds did he have for such?

3—What was the work?

Paul regarded the gospel as God's method of reconciling men to himself—one of absolute and simple grace.

The religion of Jesus Christ differs from all others. Canvass them all, and it is to be found, that they teach that man must with strife and struggle, make his way back to the God from whom he got away. With the religion of Jesus Christ, it isn't a matter of how to get back to God, but the Hand is reached down, and lifts, bringing the man back.

And the key word is Grace.

Paul's message was full of this grace and he knew it. He had the experience himself. And this grace was for all—not for any particular people. It was hard for Paul to get away from his Jewish traditions—that the gospel was for the Jews only.

And we to-day must feel that a Chinaman is just as dear to Jesus Christ as the Anglo-Saxon. His grace is not limited in its application. Let us remember that it is for all men.

Paul had good grounds for preaching this Gospel of grace. He believed it because he had personally experienced its power. It had saved him. It had changed his life from Saul the persecutor, to Paul, the most patient of all men. That the experience that gives a man confidence in the Gospel, and we must know in ourselves, that power if we want to win men and women for the Kingdom. And Paul had investigated. He had examined all others. He had been in the Universities and with the sages of the day at Jerusalem. But he was not satisfied and after his conversion went into the wilderness to investigate, coming out and going forth convinced that Christ was the Messiah of God and that it was for the salvation of mankind.

To those who would say that the world needs a new message to-day, we have a right to ask for the same kind of an investigation as Paul's, ere they ask us to abandon the Gospel to accept another.

Paul had witnessed the power and triumphs of his Gospel among all classes of men. He had seen it convert Sadducees and Pharisees and make them followers of the Christ of Galilee. He had witnessed its power to subdue men. Corinth was the very type of a commercial city of the present day. He had seen its people change, from the sinfulness and become meek and lowly followers of the man of Galilee.

Had Paul been told he needed another Gospel he would have laughed at the advice. So would it be with John Paton of the Hebrides and others.

And with such a weapon Paul intended to go to Rome, a city ripening for ruin. Rome, where Nero, the most depraved of rulers, sat in command—Rome, where new ideas in wickedness brought promotion from Nero.

And as for to-day, never has there been in the world's history, such conditions. New philosophies are arising, nations are armed to the teeth ready to spring at each other, and there is a great restlessness amongst the masses. We wonder if the Kingdom of Christ is advancing. Paul faced conditions such as we face to-day. If he were standing in our midst, and we were asked his counsel he would tell us of the same gospel and of its effectiveness in bringing about the salvation of men.

In closing Rev. Mr. Johnston commended for the new church the gospel preached by Paul, that it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

At the evening service many found it impossible to get a seat so large was the attendance.

The music by the large choir was very much enjoyed, and the opening services will be remembered as of particular interest and benefit.

Market Hall in Gala Garb for St. Joseph's Bazaar—Well Stocked Booths and Enterprising Workers Make an Irresistible Combination—Band Program this Evening

The interior of the Market Hall has undergone a complete transformation and is suggestive of fairyland, containing everything imaginable in the way of articles, both useful and ornamental. The members and co-workers of Mt. St. Joseph Convent, are responsible for the altered appearance, and the presence of the articles, for under their auspices, a grand bazaar will be held during the present week.

Twelve gaily-adorned booths of fancy wares, clothing, stationery, etc., are stocked with goods. Everything from a cigar to a night-robe is offered.

Each booth is draped in different color combinations, and the effect while pretty in the day-time will be even more striking at night, when illuminated by electricity. The booths are arranged in various shapes, the Doll booth being shaped like a triangle, the stationery booth in the shape of an N, and there are numerous other formations.

To attempt to describe each booth would require a very facile pen. Suffice to say that for artisticness and beauty, the general appearance would be difficult to excell, and the best argument to satisfy all as to its attractiveness, is for them to drop in and see for themselves. One look will justify the praise given.

The following is a list of the booths with the names of those in charge.

Rev. Mother Superior—President.

Mrs. Justice Dunn—Secretary.

Mrs. N. De Leplant—Treasurer.

SENT TO CENTRAL FOR SIX MONTHS

Daniel Augustus Salmenage Stole an Overcoat, a Pin and $4.00 From Roommate and Also Neglected to Pay His Board.

Daniel Agustus Salmenage.
Charged with theft.
Pleaded guilty.
Six months in Central.

The above is a synopsis of a session of the police court Saturday afternoon. County Crown Attorney Wood prosecuted.

Daniel Agustus was arrested Friday night, and justly so. He had purloined other people's property, and, not being greedy, decided that he had enough. His evident intention was to make his exit from the city.

It is said he inquired as to the price of a railway ticket to Oshawa.

Besides leaving a board bill account of $2.50 at the Foster Temperance House, Salmenage stole an overcoat, a tie pin, and four dollars from a fellow roomer, Nafters by name, and the date on the charge read Friday.

He is a Finlander, has been in this country five months, and says he came to this vicinity from Chicago. The police say he was in Frankfort, and that wherever Daniel appeared articles not his own disappeared. He has been working at Wm. Hamilton's for about a week.

When arrested $5.50 was found on him, and $4.00 was returned to Nafters, after the case was concluded. The coat was also returned to its owner, and a grip borrowed by Agustus from another man was restored, thanks to the quick work of the police.

His Worship, after a vain endeavor to explain to the prisoner that he had the choice of a summary trial or one at the quarter sessions, and that he must elect, was finally rewarded with the statement from Daniel that he didn't want to be tried at all.

This was followed, strange though it may seem, by a plea of guilty.

The complainant was called and explained the theft. When he identified the pin, Magistrate Dumble remarked that it was a cheap thing. Nafters said it was a gift, and he had been told part of it was gold.

It was thoroughly inspected. The chief thought it pretty heavy. His Worship said something that sounded like "brass washer."

This pin was discovered under the lapel of a pocket of Daniel's coat during a search.

"Well, what am I to do with the man?" mused the magistrate. "If the Russians want him we won't make any fuss about it. We don't want him here."

"How long has he been in this country?" the chief asked, and Agustus answered "five months."

"Well, you'll put the next six months in the Central Prison at Toronto. You will be housed for the winter," was what the prisoner heard.

HAMLET IN POLICE COURT SAID HE WAS ASSAULTED

Edward Rickaby astounded the police court gathering this morning. He orated like Hamlet.

He had the "ha, ha, fair lady" dope down to perfection, and his delivery manner would gain him a B.H. ticket anywhere.

He was truly majestic.

Rickaby charged Mr. W. A. Edwards, of the Crystal, with assault.

"He caught me by the throat and choked me," said Edward. "I was hired to ride a horse for the Buffalo Bill show, but the charger didn't show up, and I waited around from eleven o'clock till two, for my money. When I asked Mr. Edwards for my money he caught me by the throat."

His account was, so he said, from $1.50 to $2.00.

The evidence of defence witnesses was to the effect that Rickaby had toyed with the amber fluid. He was not assaulted, but just asked to leave the theatre. He refused, and was put out.

While a lady employee of the theatre was in the witness box Edward became very much annoyed at her statements about his behavior.

"Ha, ha, my dear girl," said he, "you are perjuring yourself. I am the stranger in the case."

"Discharged," quote the magistrate.

PLAINTIFF AWARDED JUDGMENT FOR $3.00

Magistrate Dumble awarded Ernest Williams, judgment of $3.00 against the Canadian General Electric Company, at the police court this morning.

The plaintiff asked for a settlement for 59 1-2 hours at 15c per per hour.

Mr. L. M. Hayes, K. C., acted for the defendants.

Williams' statement was to the effect that he was transferred from the machine shop to the transformer department, last September. On November 24, he was off work on account the sickness of his child, and also to himself. The next morning, another employee had his job and he was asked to take another. He refused and went out. Coming in at the gate next day he was told he would have to apply for work. He was told that he would receive his pay, but finally was informed that his work was "unfinished" and there was nothing coming to him.

He had been engaged in winding coils.

The defence was that Williams had been paid at day rate for two days, while being instructed as to how the coils should be wound. He was afterwards given six coils to wind. An automatic counter, was used to tell the proper number of turns. A test showed that Williams' work was defective, there being the wrong number of turns, and the result was that in the unwinding and rewinding, by another man, and the loss to the Company of the wire, the amount due Williams for his time in the initial winding, was swallowed up.

ANNIVERSARY SUNDAY WAS HEARTILY OBSERVED

By Congregation of George Street Methodist Church—Two Inspiring Sermons by the Pastor, Rev. J. Couch—Special Music.

The members of the George Street Methodist church celebrated their annual anniversary services yesterday in a manner which must have proved gratifying and helpful to the pastor, Rev. J. Couch, and to all concerned.

The large congregations which were in attendance at both services, morning and evening, and at the afternoon Sunday school, were privileged to hear splendid discourses delivered by the pastor, and also some of the most beautiful sacred musical numbers sung in a local church for some time. The famous Imperial Male Quartette, of London, were responsible ofr the latter, and their liberal and effective singing was enjoyed heartily by all present.

At the opening of the morning service "Lead Kindly Light" was given much telling effect by the quartette.

Mr. C. J. Pink, first tenor of the quartette, was given an excellent opportunity to display his perfect vocal control in "The Ninety and Nine." It made a deep impression on the congregation.

Miss Gott, a soprano soloist of much ability, also sang with much feeling "There is a Green Hill Far Away."

The scriptural text for the pastor's morning discourse was found in Samuel 30; 24 which reads, "For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff; they shall part alike."

In his explanation of the passage the pastor endeavored to show that we all have a destined part to fill in life's great coil. Every man whom God has brought into the world has been brought in for a definite purpose, and God expects every man and woman to do his or her duty in whatever position occupied by them in life. But He does not expect all of us to do the same work. The text precludes that idea.

Every man has his own work and duty, and if we neglect that duty, then shall we assuredly be called to strict account.

There are two distinct varieties of work. There are those who stay at home, who "tarry by the stuff," and those who march forth amid glory and admiration. We sometimes complain at our narrow field.

The business man who goes to his office, year in and year out, chafes because this work seems inconsequental. Alas, he does not think that he is placed in a field of opportunity of doing work for God, which a minister of the gospel might covet.

Then there is the invalid on the hospital bed, complaining because she is barred from mingling with other church-going people. She is missing an opportunity of exhibiting the patience which cometh from God.

Look at the mother in the home, bound by the silken chains of love to her little ones. Oftentimes she is troubled because her influence is too narrow, thereby temporarily forgetting that God has given her a position which the angels might covet.

If you are in a position you do not like, make the very best of it.

There are those who say that if they were in a larger sphere they could do better, but it is a fact that the reason people often are not called into larger circles is that they are not ready for it. You must overfill the position you now occupy.

So, then, the man who in God's service does the very best he can has put his foot on God's ladder leading up to heaven.

Often, too, sorrow comes to us, but often the pastor continued, one of the best things that can help us is sorrow. There is little good in all things being shaped for man, for often, under the burden of sorrow and the burning tears of anguish, our souls and hearts come out pure and refined, to be used by God's hands. You may have often wondered at the power of Moody or Spurgeon, and others, but the power was not so particularly in the message as in the messenger. So, then, if we are bound to the common things of life, instead of searching after pleasure and empty, fleeting bubbles, from which God alone can set us free, we should be contented and happy, indeed.

Those sorrows that may have come upon you, those afflictions that may have fallen upon you, may be those things with which God intended to inspire you.

Remember, if you are true God will free you from your bondage. Then, if you are discouraged, wait until your reward comes. If there is a mother who feels discouraged about her boys let her trust in Him and believe, and her reward will come. When John and Charles Wesley come before the judgment seat with other millions to be judged great will be the reward of Susannah Wesley, the faithful mother of those two boys.

The circuit preacher, who converted Robert Moffatt, little thought that in his convert he had found a man who would evangelize a kingdom. Oh, yes, there are great are great rewards for the faithful who serve Him.

Give the cup of cold water to the thirsty one, the bunch of flowers to the sick one, for it is these things that the kingdom of heaven on earth is found. 'For inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these little ones, ye have done it unto me.'

VALUE OF SYMPATHY.

At the evening devotions the Imperial Male Quartette, by special request, sang Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar," with great expression. They also contributed "Your Mother is Praying for You" in an impressive manner.

Miss Gott, who sang at the morning service, also sang in splendid voice, and Mr. Webster, basso of the quartette, contributed a very difficult solo in a voice of great depth and power.

The pastor's remarks at the evening worship were based on the text found in Mark 4;36, "And when they had sent away the multitude they took Him even as He was in the ship. And there were also with Him other little ships."

"Wonderful is the ministry of unseen sympathy," said the speaker, "and we should day by day hold up the light of it to others in distress."

When some great suffering comes across the soul, when those sorrows which at some time enter every life assail, we should then practice the grace of sympathy. It is the sense of lonliness that drives so many people desperate and causes them to lead reckless lives.

Out on the ocean of life, there are others going through the same struggles as you are, facing the same difficulties. If they could only realise that the calm will come, what a blessing it would prove. Wonderful is the power of sympathy.

As it is with sorrow, so it is with temptation. There is a lonliness in every temptation and often a man's struggles against a sin darken his years with sorrow, which he dare not unburden to a friend. He dare not tell the secret story of his life. While he may go out and face the world with a smile, it will never dawn upon you the temptation with which he is every hour contending, and which cross his path.

There is no temptation sent that will be too strong if you have faith in God. Never lose faith or stumble in the dark, for the Pilot is always near to guide you.

Then again, the world is full of unappreciated blessings. You possess what you have to-day because others at some time shared your life. You have had a praying father and mother maybe.

Many other utterances of a helpful and inspiring nature were made by the speaker, which space bars from reporting.

In concluding, he urged people to cultivate to the full those feelings of friendship and sympathy which are in every nature. There is a mighty influence in example, and your decision for Christ might lead some other man who is outside of Christ, to seek His saving grace.

Special collections were taken at both services.

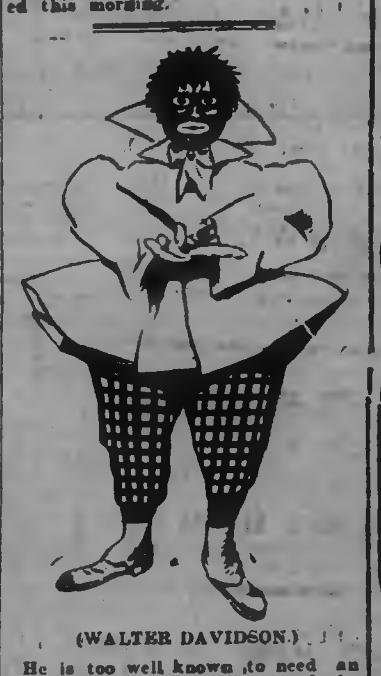
THE PINNACLE OF HER SUCCESS

This Is What Grace Van Studdiford Attains in "A Bridal Tour"

Manager Daniel V. Arthur, who will present Miss Grace Van Studdiford in the European comic opera "A Bridal Trip," at the Grand on Wednesday next, Dec. 14th, candidly admits that he devoted the most of his time and thought to giving his star the most sumptuous production of her career. He was confident that Miss Van Studdiford could be relied upon to delight and thrill her audience with a voice that has no rival in light opera; but he wanted to contribute his share towards the success of the venture. And it is said that Manager Arthur has done so. "A Bridal Trip" is acknowledged to be one of the most beautifully staged and costumed productions in years. The seat sale opened this morning.



(WALTER DAVIDSON.)

He is too well known to need an introduction. On account of the "highness" of lawyers' fees it seems quite appropriate that he should be chosen to deliver the monologue, "Up in an Aeroplane."

THE SHOE AT A WEDDING

(London Globe.)

The old-fashioned notion that a shoe should bring luck at a wedding is a superstition curious to explain. It was in the sense of confirming a sale or exchange that the Jews understood the removal and giving of a shoe or sandal. When the kinsman of Boaz consented to waive his claim upon the parcel of land which Naomi would sell in favor of Boaz, he drew off his shoe, for this was a testimony in Israel. In a different sense the removal of a shoe marks the winding up of negotiations among the laws and ordinances given in the book of Deuteronomy. When the Emperor Vladimer proposed marriage to the daughter of Reginald, she refused him with the words, "I will not take off my shoe to the son of a slave." In Anglo-Saxon marriages the bride's father delivered her shoe to the bridegroom, who touched her on the head with it in token of his authority.

SALE OPENS LIKE A RUSH ON A KLONDYKE BONANZA

(But There Are Many Good Claims Left)

If the advanced sale this morning is a criterion of public interest the Belmont Minstrels will play to capacity business at the Grand Opera House on Thursday and Friday. Of course this is only the first day of the sale and there are lots of desirable seats left in spite of the encouragingly big rush.

The Belmonts will put on a real show, it is absolutely safe to predict and one that will win the solid approval of Peterborough theatre goers.

They make no claim for support on the grounds of being amateurs, but simply look for patronage on the strength of the merit of the performance.

Mr. Holly Shepard, the director, has press notices from other cities of such an exceedingly flattering nature that they are real tributes to the excellence of the offerings he invariably presents.

The jokes will be fresh as eggs in Junetime, the costumes will be new and glittering and the ink has not dried on some of the fast moving and infectious numbers that will be put over by clever soloists and a large and well trained chorus.

The settings for the first part will be original and pretentious.

RURAL POLICE

Much Work for Them

Some comment has been evoked by the suggestion which was recently made by the president of a New Jersey board of agriculture, that the rural regions of that state should be provided with a police force, an armed patrol, or some efficient guardianship, to protect the farms, gardens or herds, henroosts and other possessions from depredation. It is usually easy to perceive a humorous phase to most anything, and bucolics have long been reckoned legitimate for joke hunters; but the fact is that this is a really serious matter worthy of practical consideration, not only in New Jersey, but elsewhere, and particularly in agricultural and horticultural regions adjacent to large cities.

The grounds of the farmers' complaints are real and substantial and they are varied. A large amount of what we may call sporadic thieving and despoiling is done in summer and fall by people from the city, some well meaning but thoughtless, and some mischievious, and more or less criminal, who go into the country for a day's outing, and who break down fences and raid orchards and gardens at will. The farmer is helpless when his place is invaded by a gang of a dozen lusty hooligans, who help themselves before his eyes, jeer defiantly at him, and then board the next trolley car and whisk out of sight.

There are also more permanent and systematic plunderers, who get permission to put up a tent or a shed in somebody's woodland, or put it up without permission, and camp there for a few weeks, "living off the land." And then there are the local law-breakers who are found in every community, who supply their wants from their neighbors' fields, barns and woodpiles. The aggrieved farmer hesitates to proceed against the campers, lest their resentment should become so hot as to endanger his barns and hayricks, or against the village pilferers, lest he be condemned for lack of neighborliness.—New York Tribune.

THE DIFFERENCE

Between English and American Judges — English Judges Higher Salaried

The difference between U. S. and English criminal courts is mainly a difference in judges. The American judge is a politician, chosen for party loyalty as much as—or more than—for legal acumen. The English judge is appointed for life, and if he behaves himself even moderately well, is practically irremovable. The judge of a U. S. court corresponding in importance to the English tribunal which tried Dr. Crippen receives a salary of from $2,000 to $6,000 yearly — for a limited number of years. The English Judge is paid $25,000 yearly for life. If, after 15 years service, he wishes to retire, he is pensioned off with an annual income of $17,500. An American judge takes little part in the conduct of a trial. He is rather a referee. He determines points of law. He interprets law. Is a question relevant? The judge decides. He weighs precedents. Except when he is doing these things he is dumb—a sphynx of judicial wisdom. Lawyers argue and question witnesses. The witnesses answer and are cross-examined. The lawyers argue again All this time the judge was silent. But at the end he instructs the jury—on the law, the strict letter of the law. He explains the meaning of a "reasonable doubt." The American system may be good or bad. It gives the accused the benefit of every technicality in his favor. But it lets rascals escape on trivialities.

The English judge is "in the game" every minute. He keeps both sides in order. In a criminal case he has special power, which he exercises to the full. If, in His Lordship's opinion, the prosecutor is not outlining his case as clearly and vigorously as he should, His Lordship helps him. But the prosecutor must show neither venom, spite nor undue vehemence in his treatment of the prisoner, the prisoner's counsel or the prisoner's witnesses. If he does, he is sharply rebuked. The prosecutor must be unimpassioned, logical, cold, concerned only in the exact performance of his duty. A kindly disposed judge may, and often does, save the day for an inexperienced young barrister opposed to a trial-wise crown prosecutor. If the counsel for the defence fails to draw from a witness the whole story the latter is trying to tell, it is perfectly permissible for the judge to take the witness in hand. "What you mean is thus-and-so," he says. And the very statement that the witness has been trying to make, that the young barrister has been wishing to make, and that the prosecutor has been hoping he will not make, is made and has its effect on the jury. In the selection of American juries the whole effort on both sides is to pack the jury box, not necessarily with crooked jurors, but with men who by reason of temperament or belief would naturally be disposed to treat the accused harshly or leniently. For instance, the American lawyer would not be worth his retainer if, in drawing a jury in a liquor prosecution case, he failed to challenge a teetotaler. The English system of jury-drawing is the acme of simplicity. Jurors are drawn from an alphabetical list of householders. They serve in alphabetical order. Jurors are very rarely challenged and then only for the best of reasons. If a judge thinks a witness is lying he says so. If the cross-examination has failed to make the witness' subterfuges sufficiently apparent the judge helps matters along with a few searching questions and perhaps with a snort of disbelief.

MODIFICATIONS TO ASSESSMENT ACT

Are Being Considered by Provincial Secretary Hanna

A change in the Assessment Act that would result in a large increase in the amount of exempted property is, it is understood, receiving favorable consideration from the Provincial Secretary, Hon. W. J. Hanna, who was the chairman of the Special Assessment Committee at the last session of the Legislature.

A proposal along this line was brought before the Minister by a deputation from the City Council of Kingston, headed by the local member, Mr. W. F. Nickle, K.C. This was that all property held by charitable and benevolent institutions should be subject to taxation if it was rented to other parties and used in competion with other property. In other words that all property owned by such institutions should be exempt only if it was being used for charitable or benevolent purposes. This would apply to property owned by religious institutions as well.—Toronto News.

BEHIND the SCENES WITH THE BABY BEARS

Five Little Brains Whose Amusing Ways Win Them Many Friends.

"Jack," the Bull Terrier, Is the Faithful Friend of the Cubs.

Almost Full.

FAR away in the State of Maine, in the midst of the great forest, five little bear cubs awoke one morning to find themselves in strange quarters. Their eyes were not yet opened, but they knew by their never failing animal instinct that they were no longer in the warm old cave under the big rocks which had been their home since their birth. It was a strange world into which they had been brought while they were sleeping, and naturally they did not like it, so they lifted up their voices in a queer whine that was something like the cry of a human baby and something like a bear cub's infant growl.

Then a voice spoke to them—it was a kind voice, the voice of a person who likes baby bears; but it frightened the little strangers still more, for it was the first time they had ever heard a human being speak.

"What shall we give them to eat?" said the strange voice.

"Let's try them on bread and milk," replied another person.

The little bears listened with all their ears, but the human language meant nothing to them, and when their heads were thrust into bowls filled with good bread and milk, with which any baby, bear or human, should have been delighted, instead of being grateful the five little chaps flew into a perfect rage and fought and spluttered and struck out with their tiny claws in a way that was so ridiculous that it set the men who were trying to feed them into roars of laughter.

Such fighters as they were! Although they were not yet two weeks old, and not much larger than kittens, they never stopped tussling with their keepers for a single minute. They didn't want to be washed or combed; they didn't want to be put to sleep in their comfortable beds; they didn't want to be taken up in the keepers' arms.

But their not knowing how to eat was the worst part. That was dangerous, and it didn't seem possible to teach them ordinary table manners either. They would put their heads down into the pans of bread and milk, when they were not too cross to submit to being held for a little while; but instead of eating they would nose around in a puzzled way and then sigh and draw away from the food in disgust.

"We'll have to try another way," said the bear's nurse. He got a baby's bottle, filled it with milk and offered it to the biggest bear cub.

"Ah, now, that is something like," the bear seemed to say in his cub language, and he took a good strong hold of the rubber nipple and never stopped pulling until the bottle was completely drained. All his brothers and sisters took to this method of feeding quite as readily as he did, and the cubs looked so funny and so like real babies when they were feeding that Mr. and Mrs. Spellman, who had bought them from their captors, decided that it would be interesting to have a troupe of baby bears who would go around the country showing other children how very nicely well bred little cubs can do tricks and what charming table manners they may have.

So the baby bear troupe started out on the road with the rest of the circus performers who go around from town to town giving shows. When they were two weeks old their eyes opened and they stopped fighting everybody who tried to feed them or pet them and began to love their nurse and Mr. and Mrs. Spellman and to be more tractable.

Just as soon as their eyes were opened and they had ceased to be so terribly cross the baby bears were christened. The smallest one was named Lulu, the largest one Flip, and the three others Buster, Teddy and Kitty. That was about five months ago, and since then each of the bear cubs has developed strong individual characteristics. If you happen to be out among the spectators when the baby bears are performing you may think that they are all very much alike, but when you know them as do their nurse and owners you will find that they are as different from each other as brothers and sisters in any family of human children are apt to be.

Lulu, the very smallest of the bears, is also the cleverest; she learns very rapidly and is very affectionate and docile. Flip is the most affectionate and covers his nurse with kisses when he is being washed and combed, but he is also very naughty at times and is believed to be at the bottom of a good deal of the mischief that the baby bears are responsible for. Kitty is a good little thing, not as clever as Lulu or as affectionate as Flip, but much more obedient than some of the others. Buster is another of the cubs who love kisses, and if his nurse caresses him sufficiently while his toilet for the day is being made he goes through the operation very nicely, but if the nurse is in a hurry and does not want to stop to be hugged and kissed the affectionate Buster begins a frightful squealing and clawing that interferes very much with his proper grooming. Teddy, who is one of the largest and strongest of the little bears, very much dislikes being waked up in the morning and when the nurse rouses him before his usual time he absolutely refuses to have his face washed.

When the baby bears were very little, only five weeks old, they all contracted pneumonia and Mr. and Mrs. Spellman had a dreadful time with them. The poor little fellows had to take medicine just like human beings and they dislike medicine quite as much as boys and girls possibly could.

When they had the pneumonia and it was necessary to give them medicine it sometimes took five men to get the dose down the throat of one baby bear because he fought so vigorously and made such good use of his claws and jerked his head so that the first thing the nurse knew the medicine was on the floor and the baby bear, sick though he was, was wearing a triumphant bear grin. Finally, however, the five bears were brought safely through the pneumonia and then the troupe started out on its trip through New England.

So far in their careers the bear troupe have suffered from only one other catastrophe besides the pneumonia. Jolly little Flip was the victim of this accident which almost proved fatal. When the small bears were put in a compartment with the big bears one of the big fellows flew at Flip and bit a hole in his head. It was such a severe wound that it took the most careful nursing for four weeks to heal it up. For most of this time the little invalid sat upon Mr. Spellman's knee and was petted exactly as if he had been a real baby. In time he completely recovered from his wound and became the liveliest and most mischievous of all the bears.

The first trick the baby bears learned to perform in public was to drink out of bottles while standing on their hind legs. This took quite a good deal of training and would have taken much more if the bears had not already known so well how to take food from a bottle. After they had passed from the bottle stage in real life they were put on a diet of bread and milk, carrots, green corn, apples and sugar, but in public they still continue to drink from their bottles all standing up and balancing themselves very beautifully until every drop of the sweetened milk with which the bottles are filled is gone. They love this drink so much that before "Yellow," as their nurse is called, is ready to give it to them they stand on their hind legs and beg for it so prettily that it is almost impossible to keep it from them a moment longer. Often they fly at each other and a brotherly scuffle takes place, especially when, as sometimes happens, there are not enough milk bottles to go around.

By the time they reached the New York Hippodrome, where they have a long engagement, the bears had become very fond of performing, and also had become so mischievous that they have to be watched all the time. In the Hippodrome building the little bears have a small sleeping apartment next to that of the big bears on one side and next to a dressing room on the other. The partitions between the rooms do not go quite up to the ceiling, and there is space enough at the top for the little bears to get over into the other rooms. This fact has caused no end of trouble to the bears' nurse, for the little bears are terribly curious to know what is on the other side of the partition, and when they do find out they are delighted if it is something that can be torn up or damaged in any way. They have a great liking for getting hold of something that is not their own.

One day when "Yellow," the nurse, was very busy getting fresh hay for the little bears' bed and the cubs had been left alone for a few minutes, with only Jack, their faithful friend, a bull terrier, to look after them, all was quiet in the nursery and the keeper outside the door was thinking what nice little bears they were. But suddenly he heard a cry from Mrs. Spellman, who had gone in to see how the babies were getting on. The keeper ran to the nursery, but not a baby was there. They were not far away, however. Looking through the door of the dressing room he saw them sitting there amidst a heap of pink silk tatters. They had all climbed up to the top of the partition and over into the dressing room and had torn up yards and yards of pink ribbon, which had been made into huge bows for the decoration of the big bears during their performance on the stage. The big bears, looking through the barred door of their room into the dressing room, saw the little ones in the very act of destroying their finery, but they were powerless to prevent it. The little bears destroyed nearly $12 worth of ribbon. When there happens to be a number of things within their reach which they can tear up they always prefer the soft silk things to the heavier woollen ones. Another day Flip got over the partition on a solitary adventure and tore up Mrs. Spellman's dressing gown.

Flip, who is the most independent and perhaps the most spoiled of all the bears because he was an invalid for so long, doesn't care for his own sleeping quarters at the Hippodrome, and so every night when the keepers go to bed he climbs out of the bed which he shares with the other cubs and climbs up the ladder to the keepers' bunk, where he peacefully cuddles down for the night.

Unlike human children little bears are given their breakfasts first and their baths afterward. It must be admitted that the five cubs frequently appear at the breakfast table in a decidedly tousselled state, such as would cause any well regulated human child to be sent from the table. But then some concessions must be made to hard working little bears who give two performances a day all through the winter instead of idling away their time sound asleep in their native caves. So no one ever says a word when Flip's face isn't washed or Lulu's hair combed when they appear at the table.

After breakfast the baby bears are combed most carefully and every other day they are given a bath. They have their hair combed four times a day, after breakfast and dinner and just before the performances. They love dearly to go on the stage and scamper up the runway from their quarters to the footlights as if a whole pot of honey were at the other end of the journey. Besides their milk drinking trick the bears have quite a little programme which they have learned by themselves from imitating the older bears. Lulu rolls a ball and Flip stands on top of a pyramid of older bears. So fond are the bears of their stage life that when one of them happens to get loose he is very apt to take to the runway and appear long before his time in the wings in breathless haste to go on.

The bears have a faithful friend and guardian in Jack, a bull terrier, who lives in the nursery and watches over them like a most conscientious older brother. "Jack brought up those bears," said Mr. Spellman to a visitor the other day, and Jack never forgets his charge. When the little bears' beds are made they are sometimes put in the room with the big bears, who like the little fellows very well, but are apt to play so roughly with them and to hug them so hard that it isn't very comfortable for the cubs. Besides, Jack has never forgotten what happened to Flip and he very much distrusts the big bears. So when the cubs are put in the room of the big fellows Jack gets thoroughly excited and races in ahead of them to see that they are not harmed. This one small dog charges on the big bears—five huge creatures, any one of which would make a dozen of him—and herds them into a corner away from the little bears. He stands guard over the puzzled big bears and does not let one of them out of the corner until the cubs' nursery has had its morning cleaning and they are safe at home.

The cubs have some excellent habits, which should be an example to all children, among them the habit of going sound asleep after each meal. Twenty minutes after they have had their dinner and their supper they all go to sleep, and do not wake until time for the performance to open. But then this very nice habit is counteracted by others which perhaps it would be better for children not to copy. The little bears like to pry into pockets to see if there is anything to eat there, and if there is they get it out at once without so much as saying by your leave, and eat it up in a twinkling. Sometimes they find sugar in Mr. Spellman's pockets, which delights them more than anything else. Bears like candy quite as much as children do, and they usually get more than is good for children, as sugar cubes four times a day are considered quite a moderate allowance of sweets, according to cub standards.

CHARLES RAYMOND DEAD

Was Until Recently Editor of Peterborough Review, and Regarded as One of the Brightest Newspaper Writers in Canada—Pneumonia the Cause—Buried To-day.

Special to the Review.

Hamilton, Dec. 12.—Charles Raymond, one of the best known newspaper men in Canada, died at the home of his mother in Guelph on Thursday evening. Up to a few weeks before his death he was editor of the Peterborough Review, and a few weeks ago contracted a cold in that place. He thought by going to his mother's home he would receive more care, but a few days after being removed there he contracted pneumonia and passed away.

Deceased was in the 38th year of his life, and left to mourn his loss a widow and mother, three sons, two of whom reside in Toronto, and the others in Guelph.

Charlie Raymond, as he was known to his friends while in this city, was a prince of good fellows and gathered about him a large circle of friends, who will be very much grieved to hear of his death. He was during his stay in Hamilton employed on the reportorial staffs of the Herald and the Morning Post. He possessed rare journalistic ability and was considered to be one of the most capable men in his profession.

His time was not altogether devoted to newspaper work, as he also wrote and published several books, one of which, "Cheer Up," met with much success and is still on sale. He also wrote other stories which met with success. After leaving Hamilton Mr. Raymond was employed on the staff of the Welland Tribune, an later was appointed managing editor of the Peterborough Review. His editorial efforts were very successful. His bright, cheery style stamped him as one of the foremost writers of the day.

The funeral took place to-day from the residence of his mother to Guelph cemetery.

W.C.T.U. NOTES OF INTEREST

The matter in this department is supplied by the Peterborough Branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has arranged for its publication;

Be Strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift!
We have hard work to do and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle—face it, 'tis God's gift.

Be Strong!
Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name!

Be Strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,—
How hard the battle goes—the day how long,—
Faint not! Fight on! To-morrow comes the song!

How Richard H. Roberts, late first lieutenant in the Twenty-first Lancers, the flower of Britain's troops, who through drink became a "panhandler" on Park Row, and got on his feet again was told by himself at the Jerry McAuley Mission.

He is now the travelling representative of one of the largest cereal mills of the country.

After a score of men had told how they had been saved from drink and other evils for from six days to as many months, Lieutenant Roberts gave his experience, speaking with an earnestness which thrilled the audience.

"I was born on the other side—the old country. I had a good home—three homes, as a matter of fact, we had a town house, a country house and a shooting box. I had a good father and a beautiful mother; when everyone else in the world had forsaken me my dear old mother stuck to me.

"I promised dear old dad and mother that I would never drink. I had everything a young man could wish for, money and clothes and all else. I never thought I was going to be a drunkard—always said I would not be. But I had hardly left home before I began to nibble at beer, and after a time I took to brandy and soda. Before I knew it I was in the clutches of drink.

"In India, where I spent some years with my regiment, I learned to love drink, and twenty-one years of my life were given up to drink. My appetite grew and finally I lost my commission.

"I've been in sanitariums in all parts of the world for it was not a question of money. I only lived to drink.

"Then I lost all I had. I sold the home, my dear old mother's home, and it broke her heart. Finally I found myself in New York. Friends helped me to good positions as high as $300 a month, but I could not hold them. It got so at last that I could not hold a $10 job.

"Nine years ago I found myself drifting, a total wreck, sleeping in the back rooms of saloons, on park benches or trucks, wrapped in pieces of newspaper.

"I have worked on oyster boats and travelled as a hobo, from city to city, panhandling for drink. Every instinct of the gentleman was lost — I had ceased to be a man going lower and lower.

LANDED IN GUTTER

"I walked the streets, Winter and Summer carrying signs, actually in the gutter for drink, until I could not even hold that job. I served as 'supe' in the theatres and delivered circulars. I have stood in the breadline on Broadway and Tenth Street, and know what it is to be refused a crust of bread at the kitchen door.

"For a long time I slept in "Nick" Sullivan's saloon and at last was kicked out of that as no good, and then slept in the Mulberry Bend pavillion. Many times I had visited the alcoholic wards of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

"I woke up one day a year ago and saw two men near me and went to panhandle them for a drink. One of them told me to go to the McAuley Mission. I hadn't heard of this place.

"I don't know how I got here but I staggered in the door that night. Every other door was barred to me. The potter's field was my only hope and I was ragged and filthy.

"MOTHER'S SONG."

"I heard the testimonies, but didn't believe them I slept part of the time, helpless, hopeless: not a particle of manhood left—sold body and soul for drink. Then I woke to hear them singing, 'I love to tell the Story' that was mother's song. She sang it to me on her knees when putting me to bed.

Then they sang another of my mother's songs: "Nearer, my God to Thee,' and I fancied I could see her. I staggered up to the altar and knelt and asked mother's God to take me.

"A few days later I got a job beating carpets and earned $3.50 and that was enough to tide me over until I got another job. I hold that to-day. I have a bank account and I have a faith in God that sustains me and keeps me from drink."

Dr. Montague Geer, vicar of St. Paul's chapel, told the audience that Lieutenant Roberts was one of his valued communicants, and a helper and friend — New York Evening Mail.

LEAGUE OF GOODFELLOWSHIP

A successful meeting of men was held in the Princess Theatre yesterday afternoon.

The subject of an interesting address and discussion was "Loafers."

The Rev. C. Carpenter said the term "loafer" means practically good for nothing. He pointed out that all present (himself included) were loafers in one way or another, all had to work and each one had to reproach himself, at times, for work badly done, or neglected altogether.

Everybody knew the loafer of the streets, with his hands in his pockets and his untidy appearance. The man who will not work. There are others so well known, at the opposite end of the social scale, and who having plenty of money and time, are very little removed from the street corner loafer, as they neglect their vast opportunities of elevating humanity.

There were eight other kinds of loafers he wished to mention.

1 The man who scamps his work and takes as his motto: "What the eye never sees the heart never grieves over." He does his work for the sake of his wages only, and and does not do it with the best that is in him. And who is surprised that his slipshod methods result in his constant shifting from one place to another.

2 Allied to him is the "loafer", who says his work is good enough for the money he gets for it. In his case there is something missing.

3 Then there is the man without any ideal and without ambition. He may be honest and often is, but his outlook is too confined, he can't look beyond his job. He works with his hands and muscles, but not with all the powers of his brain and body. Plodding toilers but still loafers in neglecting many of the opportunities of life. Satisfied with himself he fails to grasp the highest.

4 The man is a loafer who has only one string to his bow when he should have four or five. He confines himself to his one specialty, with no attempt to enlarge his mind, and when his one string collapses, he regretfully finds that he has been but a "loafer."

5 Another loafer wastes his odd moments. Odd moments should be carefully husbanded. Men should not sit lazing, they should fill them up by reading. If only the scientific and other interesting columns of the newspapers. Something that will develop thought in the man himself, and if he neglects to do this he is a "loafer."

6 Then there is the busy-body loafer. Rushing about always in a hurry. Neglecting his own work and looking after some other persons, spoils all his work by not concentrating his mind.

7 Then there is the loafer, who does not know the full extent of his own ability. Great men have always recognized their own potentialities. He quoted an Arabic proverb, and drew special attention to the part of its running. "He who knows, and knows that he knows, follow him."

8 Finally he dealt with the Sunday loafer. This perhaps comprised the largest class. There should be plenty of time for walks and reasonable relaxation, for those who are engaged all the week. Relaxation is a necessity and for this end the Sabbath was ordained, but we are "loafers" and not doing our duty if we do not attend some place for the worship of Almighty God. Otherwise, we cut ourselves away, by our loafing, from Christianity.

He urged all to develop the highest and the best of which they are capable, to develop their faculties, and to put in force all these faculties for elevating our fellow men and making all better citizens of the world.

A discussion followed. Messrs. Fackman and Woodworth sang a duet, "Weary Gleaner."

A plunge into a tub filled with warm water and the soft foamy lather of Infants' Delight Soap will take away all the fatigue of a long busy day. INFANTS' DELIGHT SOAP

THE CHOICE OF A BRIDE

The meeting in the Town Hall, Ashburnham, on Sunday evening, was characterized by bright singing and excellent addresses delivered by the young evangelists, Messrs. R. and A. McMurdo. The children's choir did the singing in a hearty and inspiring manner. The rather unusual title, "The Choice of a Bride,' was the subject discussed by Mr. A. McMurdo, who opened his address by a reference to Prov. 31, as a description of an ideal bride. He then read the story of Isaac and Rebekah from Gen: 24, his text being verse 58, "Wilt Thou go With This Man."

The closing part of his address was a reference to Christ as the true Isaac, and the church as his bride and the question for all to decide was "Wilt Thou go With This Man,' in other words, "Wilt Thou Accept Christ as Thy Saviour."

R. McMurdo closed the meeting with a personal appeal.

There will be three lectures by the McMurdo Bros., on Bunyan, illustrated by A. McMurdo, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings next, at the Town Hall, at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.

An opportunity is afforded to Canadian business men manufacturers fruit importers, capitalists, etc., to personally investigate business conditions and opportunities for investment in the West Indies and British South America. H. C. MacKenzie, Cornish, managing editor of Canada and West India Magazine, has arranged with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to secure the S. S. It is proposed the steamship will leave St. Johns, N.B., January 14th, 1911, for a six weeks' cruise, returning on or about February 24th, which will permit a visit to Cuba and Havana, the various ports in Jamica, Trindad, Georgetown, Demerara, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Antigua, Granida, Barbadoes, Martinique, Porto Rico, San Domingo and Bermuda, returning to St. Joe. This ship will be especially equipped with electric fans, orchestra for dancing, etc., a fine motor launch for special shore trips, a room for the convenience of photographers, deck awnings, hamocks for those who desire to sleep on deck, etc. The well-known high-class service of the Canadian Pacific Empress steamships will be provided. It is the desire to give Canadians an opportunity for the expansion of commerce between these various countries, and nothing will be left undone to assure the maximum of comfort for the minimum of expense. The number will be limited to 150 passengers, and the fare for the round trip will be from $200 to $300, according to accommodation. This trip has received the endorsement of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada.

AN ELECTOR'S QUESTIONS

To The Editor of The Review,

Monday, December 12.

Dear Sir: This is now the twelfth day of December, and we are still in the dark, both as to who are intending to come forward as candidates at the forthcoming elections, and also as to their policy or opinions, on questions which concern the welfare and progress of the city. Why is this? What account have the present members of the Council who may be seeking re-election, to give of themselves? Have they anything to say in defence, or extenuation, of the policy of drift which they have so consistently followed for the past twelve months, and if elected, is their past to be taken as a guide as to their future action. Here we have a city, in many respects unequalled as far as situation and opportunities are concerned, and apparently we have no public men who will take hold of the government of the city in a way that will make the most of those opportunities. What new men are preparing to come forward? Surely we are not expected to cast our votes for a name given out, without a hint as to the man's idea on city government. As an elector I ask for an expression of views from the men who seek my votes, I want to know.

1 Will they organize a proper sanitary system of garbage collection for the city.

2 Will they so look after the streets that they shall not be a danger to the citizens and a disgrace to the city.

3 Will they promote and support progressive measures of improvements consistent with forethought and economy.

4 Will they see that the rights of every ratepayer are respected, and that special privileges are granted to none.

5 Will they watch the expenditure of the ratepayers' money that we may get full value for the money.

I do not think this is asking too much. I think it is an insult to the intelligence of the electors, to ask them to vote a person into a position that they have not a shadow of evidence as to what that person's ability to fill. We would not hire a chore boy without more investigation than that.

Thanking you in anticipation, I remain,

Yours, etc.,
GEO. LEADER.
